There was a jolly meeting Saturday, Dec. 16, at the farm home of Geo. Parks near Ashley. He was absent the evening before at a K. P. meeting at Ashley, and in the forenoon Saturday he had to be away on business. All this worked to suit Mrs. Parks, who had planned to surprise him, which she did completely, for when he came home at noon, there they were, about fifty in all; and then there was a nice visit, and such a dinner as Mrs. Parks so well knows how to prepare, and which all enjoyed to the utmost. Several presents were also made, adding much to the pleasure of the occasion, especially to Mr. Parks' enjoyment. This too, included a speech by Editor Strayer of Ashley. Among those from Auburn were: Mrs. Capt. Silver, W. H. Buss, wife and little Florence, Mrs. Maggie Bherns, Mr. and Mrs. Will Timmerman, C. C. Buss and family from the country and Hod Buss, wife and child from near Waterloo. John Buss did his share in entertaining the company, having with him his three phonographs. The visit lasted from 9 a. m., to 3 p. m., and all say it was an extra occasion.

Against Trusts

An anti-trust bill of sweeping provisions is to be introduced in the house by Daly, democrat, of New Jersey, the home of trusts.

In brief it will authorize any ten or more citizens to certify to a district or circuit United States court that a certain trust, a combination in restraint of trade, is in existence.

The judge must then proceed to investigate the charge.

If well founded, he must certify to the president of the United States who shall then place on the free list such articles of manufacture as may be controlled by the trust in question.

In Matrimonial Harness.

Since our last report an even dozen couples have secured marriage license from the county clerk. Here are their names:

Henry G. Householder and Anise Long; Perry D. DePew and Essie Bell Lawhead; Milo F. Walker and Cora E. Wilks; Frank W. Hill and Anna R. Smith; Franklin Blair and Mary E. Jefferds; Fred A. Zugschwerdt and Mabel S. Moore; Samuel A. Mumaw and Anna M. Sechler; George F. Collins and Ida Laughman; Spencer Bear and Jessie Coe, and three "don't" publish.

Brave Men Fall

Victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles as well as women, and all feel the results in loss of appetite, poisons in the blood, backache, nervousness, headache and tired, listless, run-down feeling. But there's no need to feel like that. Listen to J. W. Gardner, Idaville, Ind. He says: "Electric Bitters are just the thing for a man when he is all run down, and don't care whether he lives or dies. It did more to give me new strength and good appetite than anything I could take. I can now eat anything and have a new lease on life." Only 50 cents at H. B. McCord's drug store. Every bottle guaranteed.

They Come to Indiana

A. W. Butler, secretary State board of charities, says that Indiana has ared better than any other state in the union, in the class of immigrants from foreign countries. Of 311,715 immigrants who came into the country during the year ending June 30, 1899, Indiana was the destination of only 1,335, although others may have come into the state.

The majority of these were from the races that are most desirable.

More Mules Lost.

From Honolulu came a dispatch dated December 12, which says:

Gen. Funston arrived, Sunday, on the transport Indiana. The horse transport Garonne arrived here Nov. 29, having found it impossible to carry out its orders to proceed to Manila direct by the northern route. Eleven of the mules on board were mangled and killed by the heavy storms, and the remaining 375 are badly used up.

GENERAL WOOD APPOINTED.

He Is Made Military Governor of the Island of Cuba.

By direction of the President, Major General Leonard Wood, United States Volunteers, has been assigned to the command of the division of Cuba, relieving Major General John R. Brooke, U. S. A.

Major General Wood will, in addition to his duties as division commander, exercise the authority of Military Governor of the island.

On the completion of the transfer of the command, Major General Brooke is ordered to repair to Washington and report to the Adjutant General of the army for further orders of the Secretary of War. He will be accompanied by his authorized aides.

In relieving Major General Brooke the President desires to express his high appreciation of and thanks for the faithful and efficient services rendered by that officer as Military Governor of Cuba.

Most Important News in Months.

The Secretary of War regards the information conveyed in Gen. Otis' dispatches Thursday as the most important that has come to hand for months past. The capture of President Mabini reported by MacArthur from Bayambang is especially gratifying. It is believed that the Filipino leader was trying to make his way across the country from Bangued where he had been obliged to part company with Aguinaldo a fortnight ago, to the east coast of Luzon. The members of the Philippine Commission now in Washington declare without reserve that Mabini was the head and front of the insurrection. Aguinaldo was only a figurehead. Mabini was the brain and directing power behind him. He is a paralytic; an old man, but of extraordinary ability and his counsels are always conclusive with the Filipinos. He was concerned in the first uprising against the Spaniards. For a short time he wavered upon Aguinaldo's breach with the Americans, but finally cast his fortune with the insurrection, and was President of the Council. He was also the financial strength of the movement as without his backing Aguinaldo would have had no credit.

Another Revolution.

Guatemalan advices to the New York Herald are that the Government's bulletin, just published, gives details of a revolutionary attempt in the eastern departments of Guatemala. Troops are now pursuing the revolutionists over the frontier into Salvador and Honduras. Word comes from Colon that the Venezuelan Consul there has received official notice of the blockade of the port of Maracaibo, recently captured by the revolutionists under Hernandez. No vessels can enter or leave this port until further orders.

Death in a Prize Ring.

At the St. Louis Athletic Club in the preliminary bout preceding the contest between Tommy White and "Kid" Broad of Cleveland, Henry Neise of St. Louis, and Fred Bellerson, reputed to be the heavy weight champion of Utah, went on for fifteen rounds. Bellerson knocked Neise down twice and he fell the last time with a thud. In a few minutes he died and the police stopped the White-Broad bout and placed the managers of the match under arrest. Bellerson escaped.

France Pays an Old Claim.

The Government has just settled a small claim with France growing out of the War of 1812. Mrs. E. S. Wells of Lake Forest, Ill., has received a check for $47.16 as her share of the claim. She was one of forty-five heirs of her grandfather, Shearjashub Bond of Bristol, R. I., whose vessel, the Emma, was seized by the French during the War of 1812. The United States has finally collected the claim after a lapse of nearly 100 years.

Lives Lost at a Fire.

At Williamsburg, a suburb of Brooklyn, N. Y., three people were killed in a fire which broke out in the rear tenement at 300 South First street. Three bodies have already been recovered from the fire.

The fire burned very fiercely, and it was with difficulty that some of the other tenants were brought out in safety by the police and firemen.

A Stronghold Taken.

They Surrender.

D. B. Green, Col. John F. Gaynor, E. H. Gaynor and William T. Gaynor, contractors with whom Capt. Overlin Carter was associated in the Savannah River improvement, have surrendered. They are under indictment for conspiracy by which the Government was defrauded of nearly $6,000,000.

To Pay Interest on Bonds.

Secretary Gage has decided to anticipate the January interest on United States bonds outstanding. This interest will amount to about $5,500,000, and will be paid immediately without rebate.

British Bark Burned.

The British bark Indian Empire, consigned to the Shute company, arrived at Callao, Peru, from Fleetwood. She was laden with coal. She was found on fire. Notwithstanding the efforts of the crew and the assistance of the French cruiser Protet the bark became a total loss.

Republicans Win in Boston.

Sixteen Massachusetts cities elected Mayors on Tuesday, and one other chose a new city council, but by long odds the greatest surprise was in Boston, where Thomas N. Hart, Republican, was elected by 2,200 majority over Gen. Patrick A. Collins.

TRADE HOLDS ITS STRENGTH.

Close of Year Marked by Encouragement—Dun Makes Report.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "The approach of a new year usually brings so much of hesitation in business that the small shrinkage this year is surprising. Probably never before have the productive forces of the country been so largely covered by contracts at this date, insuring employment and profit far into the coming year. This results not from any mere speculative excitement, but from actual demands for consumption running far beyond the producing capacity heretofore, and pushing it to remarkable expansion. Wool has advanced further, with much speculative buying, though most manufacturers have supplied wants for the present, and are less disposed to purchase at prices now averaging higher than at any time since June 15, 1891. Higher prices demanded in the interior and rising prices abroad give confidence in spite of the fact that goods have advanced from the lowest point this year, only 19.2 per cent. Cotton is weakened by accounts of large quantities held back. Failures for the week have been 221 in the United States, against 248 last year, and 33 in Canada, against 22 last year."

FORTUNE FOUND IN SOD CABIN.

Romance of a Woman Who Made the Race for a Home in Oklahoma.

Eleven thousand dollars in currency has been found in the sod cabin of Mrs. Lucy Hunnicutt, who died on her claim in the Cherokee strip, just south of Hunnewell, Kan., recently. Until the discovery of this money it was supposed that Mrs. Hunnicutt was formerly Miss Crow, daughter of W. D. Crow, a farmer of Putnam County, Indiana. For years she was a teacher of instrumental music in Greencastle, Ind. When she was 20 years old she married against her father's wishes. When the Cherokee strip was opened she bargained for a fast horse and urged her husband, who had followed her, to "make the run" for a claim. He refused an hour before the signal for starting was fired and Mrs. Hunnicutt made the race herself. She secured a claim, got a divorce from her husband and had lived alone on her farm for the last six years, often receiving help from neighbors.

SHOT BY AN ESCAPING CONVICT.

Cruel Murder of a Youth by J. L. Craft at Jefferson City, Mo.

Great indignation prevails at Jefferson City, Mo., over the shooting of Henry Speiker, 18 years of age, by an escaped convict, J. L. Craft. The escape was made by Craft with another prisoner by climbing down a rope from a third-story clothing shop over the prison wall to the street, a distance of twenty feet. Craft jumped into a grocery wagon and drove at breakneck speed through the city. Soon pursuit was given him by prison officials and citizens, when he abandoned the wagon, rushed into a farm house, secured a gun, rushed forward until he saw young Speiker, who was out hunting, coming toward him with a gun, and thinking he was attempting to arrest him, shot the boy through the body and killed him. Finally Constable Crump shot the convict in the head and captured him.

LOS ABRA CLAIM SET ASIDE.

Supreme Court Also Decides Naval Prize Money Cases.

The United States Supreme Court affirmed the opinion of the court of claims in the case of the claim of the Los Abra Silver Mining Company against the Republic of Mexico, holding the claim to be fraudulent and unfounded. The claim was for about $4,000,000. The court also decided in the naval prize money case growing out of the capture of the Spanish steamer Buena Ventura during the Spanish war that the condemnation of the vessel was contrary to the terms of the President's proclamation, and ordered the proceeds of the sale of the vessel to be turned over to the owners. In the cases of the vessels Pedro and Guido, also owned by Spaniards, the condemnation was affirmed.

Record for Iron Ore Shipments.

The Mountain iron mine on the Messaba range has finished a shipping season that broke all previous records for single year's shipment from any mine. The shipments amounted to 1,139,000 tons of ore. The Fayal on the Messaba range is the only other mine that shipped over 1,000,000 tons this year. Minnesota's total for the year was 8,368,034 tons, against 5,874,258 last year.

Express Company Is Robbed.

The office of the Pacific Express Company in Cheyenne, Wyo., was robbed the other night of several thousand dollars. When Agent O. C. Brownlee entered the office in the morning he found the safe open and the money gone. The express company officials refuse to state the amount of money taken, but it is reported at from $10,000 to $25,000.

Bank Officers Held Liable.

At Lima, Ohio, the jury in the case of the directors of the American National Bank against Vice President N. L. Michael and Cashier Gus Kalb to recover the amount stolen from the bank last Christmas eve returned a verdict for the full amount, $18,253.72, and interest. They were charged with negligence.

Woman Kills a Deer.

Huntingdon County, Pa., has a heroine in the person of Mrs. Ezra Shoupe, who resides near Saltillo. A few days ago she had a thrilling encounter with a big buck, which she first wounded with a rifle and then dispatched with a knife, after being attacked several times by the infuriated animal.

Heavy Loss by Fire.

Fire damaged several buildings at St. Louis, and the entire department was called out. The losses are as follows: Sanders Engraving Company, $50,000; G. H. Boehmer's retail boot and shoe house, $15,000; North Broadway Furniture house, $50,000.

Bomb Wrecks a Theater.

During a performance at a theater at Murcia, capital of the province of that name, in Spain, a bomb was exploded, fire broke out and the theater was destroyed. The audience, however, got out without serious loss.

Canadian Steamer Niagara Goes Down.

The Canadian steamer Niagara has foundered in Lake Erie and all hands were lost. The crew comprised sixteen persons, all told. The Niagara had a cargo of lumber and shingles bound from Georgian Bay to Buffalo.

Livery Barn Burns.

At Ashtabula, Ohio, fire destroyed F. M. Rogers' livery barn. Eleven conveyances were burned. Loss $5,000, partially insured.

Boys Drowned While Skating.

Falling Off in Cotton Crop.

The statistician of the Department of Agriculture reports 8,900,000 bales as the probable cotton production of the United States for 1899-1900.

Child Wants to Play.

While playing with a revolver James Matheny's 9-year-old son accidentally shot his 6-year-old brother Washington in the forehead at Newark, Ohio. The wounded child is not only conscious, but he expressed a desire to play. A 22-caliber bullet is imbedded in his brain five inches from the surface. Dr. Bowers accounts for the remarkable case by saying the bullet must be lodged between the lobes of the child's brain.

THREE TRAINS WRECKED.

Two Men Killed and Thirty Cars Destroyed Near Princeton, N. J.

A disastrous freight wreck, resulting in the death of two men, the serious injury of a third, and the destruction of about thirty cars, occurred on the New York division of the Pennsylvania Railroad between Plainsboro and Princeton, N. J. Engineer Speigler and Fireman Henlicker were killed and Brakeman Zagbaum was dangerously hurt. Three trains were damaged in the accident. The first, west bound, parted and the rear cars crashed into those ahead. Before the tracks could be cleared an east-bound train ran into the wreck, and was soon followed by another freight going the same direction. It was the engineer, fireman and brakeman of this train that were killed and injured.

STEALS FOR SAKE OF OTHERS.

Postmaster Who Bought Comforts for Helpless Parents a Convict.

Because he sinned for the comfort of others, Postmaster Frank W. Chapin of Salisbury, Mass., has been sentenced to State prison for one year. Chapin's crime was the use of $300 of postoffice money to defray expenses for medicine and food for an aged mother and an invalid father. His bondsmen made good the shortage and fellow townsmen pleaded that he had heretofore been honest and industrious, but, having been in sore trouble, had used the Government's money in small amounts at a time, hoping to make restitution. It was admitted that his salary was meager. One hundred citizens asked for clemency, but Judge Lowell sentenced him to one year in prison.

WILL MARK ALASKA'S BOUNDARY.

Representatives Appointed by Great Britain and the United States.

The government of Great Britain has designated F. King, the government astronomer at Ottawa, as the representative of her majesty's government in the delimitation of the provisional boundary line between Alaska and Canada about the head of Lynn canal, under the terms of the modus vivendi of Oct. 20 last. The government of the United States has designated O. H. Tittman, assistant superintendent of the coast and geodetic survey, to act in a similar capacity for the government of the United States.

MURDERS HIS YOUNG WIFE.

Theodore Nelson Tries to Take His Own Life, but Fails.

Theodore Nelson, aged 60, shot and killed his wife, aged 28 years, at Wheeler, Mich., and then tried to kill himself, but failed. Nelson left his wife a short time ago because of the attentions of David Goddard, of Wheeler. Later he asked her to go to St. Louis with him, and upon her refusal he shot her. When he turned the revolver on himself the cartridge failed to explode. Before he could try again neighbors rushed in and seized him.

Boom in Lake Shipping.

A memorable year for the lake shipping trade ended the other day when the navigation season formally came to a close. Not only have profits to vessel owners been unprecedented, but there is every promise that the next season will be just as profitable to the lake trade. The enormous demand for iron ore was the main cause of the lake boom.

Dies in a Religious Debate.

During a controversy over religion between J. S. Charlebois, divine healer, and Malachy Dwyer, a well-known resident of Butte, Mont., Dwyer attempted to strike the healer, but dropped dead before he could do so. Charlebois says that he appealed to heaven for profection and he believes that Dwyer's death was an act of Providence.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, DIED DEC. 14, 1799.

IN HONOR OF WASHINGTON.

Exercises Commemorating the 100th Anniversary of His Death.

The 100th anniversary of the death of George Washington, the liberty loving revolutionary leader and first President, was observed throughout the United States Thursday. In Washington City and at Mount Vernon the anniversary was celebrated with impressive Masonic ceremonies. President McKinley and his cabinet took part in the exercises, as well as delegations from about fifty lodges throughout the United States, England, Canada, Nova Scotia and New Zealand.

At sunrise guns from Fort Washington began sending their noisy tribute to the honored dead lying at Mount Vernon on the opposite bank of the historic Potomac. The echoes reached Washington city and gave the signal to the host of Masons gathered from far and near that the ceremonies of the day had begun. The procession to Washington's tomb was composed of the Master Masons of the District of Columbia. Following these came the officers of the grand lodges of the District and of Virginia and the grand representatives of the lodges of twenty States, together with various civic and military organizations. An interesting figure in the procession was George Washington of Shepherdstown, W. Va., the grand nephew of President Washington and the son of the last Washington to own Mount Vernon. R. T. W. Duke of Virginia, the eighth descendant from Gen. Washington, also took part in the procession. The procession, headed by the Third United States cavalry band, marched down Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street to the river, where boats were taken for Mount Vernon.

Meanwhile, at 10 o'clock, President McKinley boarded a special electric train to go to Mount Vernon. He was accompanied by the members of his cabinet and invited guests. On arriving at Mount Vernon the procession was reformed and moved to the historic mansion, where President McKinley joined the column. It then marched to the old vault, to which the remains of Washington were consigned Dec. 18, 1799, moving by the same path and in the same order as in the funeral procession of 100 years ago. The places of honor at the vault were given to the representatives of the lodges with which Washington was identified in his lifetime. A solemn dirge by a band was followed by prayer by Bishop Randolph of the Southern Episcopal diocese of Virginia.

COLONEL J. F. BELL.

American Commander Who Has Won Honors in the Philippines.

Col. James Franklin Bell, who added new honors to his career by defeating and putting to flight the Filipino brigades under Gens. San Miguel and Alejandrino in the mountains near Mangatarem, is an officer of the regular army, in which he holds the rank of lieutenant. Before going to the Philippines he was attached to the Seventh cavalry, and was stationed at Fort Riley, in Kansas. As colonel of the Thirty-sixth United States volunteers Bell distinguished himself two months ago in the action near Porac, when he rode in advance of his troops and single-handed charged seven of the enemy. He captured a captain and two privates, and the remaining four Filipinos fled before the shots from his pistol. For this gallant conduct the President directed that a congressional medal be presented to him. Col. Bell is a native of Kentucky. He was appointed to the military academy in 1874, and was graduated in 1878.

SULTAN OF SULU.

Monarch Who Is Something of an Issue in American Politics.

Mohammed Tamajamalu Kiran, Sultan of Sulu, the monarch who is something of an issue in American politics, is the ruler of 140 islands, of 120,000 subjects and a dozen wives. The Sultan, his people, his wives and the 75,000 slaves in his islands are now subjects of the United States. He is known by many titles other than sultan, for example, "The Stainless One," "The Spotless One" and "The Mountain of Light." His dress is simple, consisting of one garment, after the fashion of a modern night shirt. He is a short, fat man, with a round, boyish face and big, saucerlike eyes. Kiran lives in a small house protected by a LOST OVER 1,000 MEN.

GEN. METHUEN'S ARMY CUT TO PIECES BY THE BOERS.

British Repulsed with Heavy Casualties on the Road to Kimberley—Highland Brigade Alone Has 700 Wounded, Missing and Killed—Gloom in London.

Late London advices are to the effect that Gen. Methuen's casualties in Monday's battle north of Modder river exceeded 1,000. The Highland brigade alone lost fifty-two officers and 650 men in killed, wounded and missing. The vicinity of the war office in London was crowded with anxious inquirers and there were many affecting scenes when the names appeared on the bulletin board. Women in furs pressed forward with women in old cloth jackets to make sure they were reading the well-known name aright and rank and class were forgotten in a common grief. Groups of people wearing anxious looks upon their faces daily discuss the gloomy situation in South Africa, and crowds assemble at the war office reading each bulletin as it is posted, waiting for good news. Each important battle seems to bring a worse reverse for the British, and the papers sorrowfully admit that Gen. Methuen's check at Magersfontein is the most serious event the war has yet produced.

One newspaper correspondent sums up the gloomy situation in the following language: "With Lord Methuen defeated, with a loss of a great number of his men and in danger of being attacked at any moment by superior forces, with Gen. Gatacre repulsed with a loss of 700 men and facing an admittedly impregnable Boer position; with Mafeking short of rations and greatly harassed by bombardment; with Kimberley and Ladysmith completely invested and hourly peppered by Boer shells; with Sir Redvers Buller, still unprepared to advance; with an uprising of discontented Cape Dutch imminent, a reign of terror in Zululand, 2,000 British soldiers captive at Pretoria, the Boer forces flushed with cleverly earned victories and fighting harder than ever, three British transports grounded within the month—this is anything but the cheerful picture in South Africa which the British public and the war office have to look upon, when they were confident at the beginning of the war that the British would eat their Christmas dinner in Pretoria."

All England was shocked by the news of Gen. Methuen's defeat. Gen. Gatacre's reverse was considered very bad, but at the time the universal expression was "wait till Buller and Methuen deliver their blows." The fragmentary dispatch which first arrived was sufficient in itself to dash such hopes, but nevertheless the optimists declared that further accounts would tell of British success. The official dispatch shows matters even worse than the first report indicated.

The British casualties included the Marquess of Winchester, major of the Second battalion Coldstream Guards, killed; Maj. Gen. Wauchope, commanding the Black Watch (Highlanders), killed; Lieut. Wauchope, wounded; Royal Highlanders, Lieut. Col. Goode killed, five officers wounded and three missing, and Col. Downham of the First battalion Gordon Highlanders, who was mortally wounded.

When the Highlanders met the murderous point blank fire of the Boers about 200 were mowed down. The Black Watch regiment on reforming was able to muster only 100 men. The Boers lost heavily in the trenches and also in the wire entanglements when they came into the open in an attempt to make a flank attack on the British. The terrific British artillery fire provoked no response except from the Boer rifles until nearly 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when the Gordon Highlanders formed to renew the attack on the entrenched kopje. They advanced with the utmost gallantry to attack the Boers, close to the place where lay their dead and wounded comrades of the Highland brigade.

The Boers opened with a heavy shrapnel fire as the British advanced, and it was found physically impossible to take the Boer trenches. The British got within 200 yards, but could not get nearer. It was here that Col. Downham fell. The Boers had free recourse to barbed wire entanglements.

Tuesday morning both sides occupied the positions they held before the battle. The greatest bravery was displayed by both officers and men. The wounded include Col. A. E. Codrington and Capt. Sterling, both of the First battalion of the Coldstream Guards.

What will Congress do? is a question to which some thousands of American newspapers have attempted to reply. Nor is interest in it confined to this country or this continent. What the Fifty-sixth Congress at its first session, which might lawfully be extended to the first Monday in December next, but which will, in all probability, end several months before that time, will do most inevitably affect, not merely the material interests of all our people, but their political views and acts. And as no man in any community "liveth to himself," so no member, and especially no great member, of the family of nations can avoid some degree of responsibility toward other members of that family. Recent events have made our country more influential in international affairs; have made other nations more inclined to study our politics and policies, and have charged us with greater responsibilities touching the interests of other countries than would have been deemed possible before the war of 1898 began.

The Senate on Thursday received bill from Mr. Chandler to encourage athletics at West Point and Annapolis. Sent to Committee on Contingent Expenses Chandler resolution to investigate right of Senators Clark of Montana and Scott of West Virginia to hold their seats. Received resolution from Mr. Berry declaring in favor of election of Senators by popular vote. Adjourned until Monday, Dec. 11. Before the House met the Republican and Democratic leaders attempted to perfect an agreement for the debate on the financial bill. But the negotiations failed. The Republican leaders then decided to resort to a special rule. Mr. Overstreet (Indiana), who is to have charge of the bill, introduced the formal resolution for a special order upon which the Committee on Rules will act. It provides for the consideration of the bill continuing until a date to be decided upon by the Committee on Rules. Immediately after the reading of the journal the Speaker announced the appointment of the Committee on Rules as follows: The Speaker, Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania and Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, Republicans, and Messrs. Richardson of Tennessee and Bailey of Texas, Democrats. Announcement of the death of Representative Greene of Nebraska was followed by adjournment as a token of respect.

On Friday the House adopted a special order for the consideration of the currency bill, beginning Monday, Dec. 11, general debate to be allowed until the following Friday, amendments to be offered Saturday and vote to be taken Monday, Dec. 18. Mr. Dalzell presented an amendment to the rules, creating a committee on insular affairs, to consist of seventeen members, to have jurisdiction over all matters, excepting revenues and appropriations, of the islands which came to the United States through the treaty with Spain in 1899, and to Cuba, and to increase the committees on foreign affairs, merchant marine and fisheries, public lands, military affairs, naval affairs, and District of Columbia from fifteen to seventeen members, and the committee on territories from thirteen to fifteen members. Mr. Robertson announced the death of Representative S. G. Baird of Louisiana, and after adopting the customary resolutions, at 1:30, as a mark of further respect, the House adjourned until Monday, Dec. 11.

Debate began on the currency bill in the House on Monday, opening speech being delivered by Mr. Overstreet (Rep., Ind.). Other speakers were Mr. Dolliver (Rep., Iowa), Mr. Maddox (Dem., Ga.) and Mr. McClellan (Dem., N. Y.). In the Senate Mr. Mason of Illinois delivered an address in support of his resolution expressing sympathy for the Boers, which was referred to foreign relations committee. No business of importance transacted and early adjournment was taken.

On Tuesday the Senate received from Mr. Pettigrew a resolution asking the Secretary of the Navy whether Admiral Dewey formally or informally ever recognized the self-styled Philippine Republic. Sent to the committee on military affairs Mr. Pettigrew's resolution on the use of government troops during the Coeur d'Alene strike. Authorized the committee on elections to investigate the Clark and Scott contests; sent Mr. Cullom's Hawaiian government bill to the committee on foreign relations. Confirmed the nomination of Gen. Leonard Wood to be Major General of Volunteers. Received from Mr. Cullom his bill to give the Interstate Commerce Commission more power. In the House Congressmen Prince (Illinois), Driggs (New York), Grosvenor (Ohio), Parker (New Jersey), William Alden Smith (Michigan), Lawrence (Massachusetts) and Powers (Vermont) spoke in support of the currency bill, while Messrs. Newlands (Nevada), Cochran (Missouri), Shafroth (Colorado) and Sims (Tennessee) opposed it. The Speaker was authorized to appoint a committee of ten to co-operate with the Presidential and Senate committees in arranging for the centennial celebration of the first meeting of Congress in Washington.

On Wednesday Mr. Gallinger introduced a bill in the Senate for the codification of the pension laws by a joint commission of jurists and members of the G. A. R. A resolution by Mr. McMillan calling attention to the blockading of navigation in the St. Mary's canal during the last season and asking the opinion of the Secretary of War on the desirability of constructing additional canals was adopted. The House adopted a resolution providing for a holiday recess from Wednesday, Dec. 20, to Wednesday, Jan. 3, and continued the debate on the currency bill.

Worth a Broad Grin.

The spontaneous and happy wit of the late Isaac H. Bromley, for many years a writer of New York Tribune leaders, is recalled by the example below:

One day in the Tribune office the veteran journalist, Charles T. Congdon, was talking of the delightful reading he had found in Bayle's Dictionary, and remarked that if he were ever in jail he would be quite contented with that book.

"Of course you would," said Bromley. "If you had Bayle, you could get out."

500 PAIRS OF EYES.

BEING FEMININE EYES, THEY WERE TERRIBLE.

Under Their Critical Scrutiny the Callous Man Who Had Many Escapes by Field and Flood Experienced a Trying Time.

He was a man of experience. He had visited nearly every known country and had thrilling adventures in some of them. He had hunted big game, and had been through at least one South American revolution. Consequently he was looked upon as an interesting story teller, and, being a convivial party, there was a natural desire on the part of his associates to draw him out.

"Tell us about the most thrilling, awe-inspiring experience you ever had," one of them urged.

"Oh, you can't expect him to single out one as the most nerve-trying of all," put in another. "He has had too many for that. Just tell us about any one of them, old man."

The man of experience thought a few minutes.

"There is one that stands out pre-eminently as the most trying ordeal of my life," he said at last. "No other experience that I ever went through begins to equal it. Nothing else ever made me half so nervous."

"Tell us about it!" they all cried.

"It was the day I took dinner at Vassar College," he began.

"Oh, come off!" they broke in. "Don't try to jolly us."

"I'm not," replied the man of experience. "I'm telling you the solemn truth. I was a friend of the family of a girl at Vassar, and, being armed with the proper credentials, I called upon her there and was invited to remain to dinner. I was the only man in the dining room. When I entered the girls were already seated and they took me in from head to foot. I could feel them doing it. At a rough guess I should say there were 500 pairs of eyes riveted upon me, and I knew that 500 girls were passing judgment upon me and everything connected with me—my dress, my bearing, my features, my manners, everything. One pair of feminine eyes can make a man feel uncomfortable, two pairs can make him think that life isn't worth living, and three pairs can give him the cold shivers. A girl knows it and she glories in it. When she has man at a disadvantage there is nothing that gives her greater pleasure than to make the most of it and watch him suffer. Those girls had me at their mercy. They overwhelmed me with cold, critical, analytical glances that were more deadly than Mauser bullets. By the time I reached the guests' table, where I sat in solemn grandeur with the girl at whose invitation I was there, I would have gladly exchanged places with a man leading a forlorn hope on the field of battle. Before the dinner was half over I would have considered being lost in a tropical jungle pleasing by comparison. Oh, those girls, those girls! They left the dining room before I did, and, in doing so, they passed my table. I tried to talk entertainingly to my friend, but I could feel them going by—and sizing me up, and I was satisfied that I didn't pass muster. It seemed as if each one was saying to herself: 'Oh, he's not so many! He lacks ease, and his tie isn't on straight.'

"And that," he added, "was my most terrible experience. There was a thrill or a chill to every minute of it. I would repeat any other ordeal of my life in preference to it. If you have never dined with 500 girls fully conscious of their power and mischievously inclined you cannot appreciate what it is."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

PELICANS IN THE BIG MUDDY.

Great Colony of the Birds on an Island in the Missouri River.

Pelican bend, in the Missouri River, near St. Charles, Mo., is the scene of a great annual gathering of pelicans. There is a big flat bar in the river there which has endured far beyond the usual span of a bar's existence in the treacherous, shifting current of the Missouri. This bar is the semiannual stopping place of vast flocks of pelicans that migrate from south to north in the spring and from north to south in the fall.

Persons who have observed their habits claim that they invariably arrive at Pelican bend on Sept. 4 and remain until cold weather sends them south.

The pelican is not an attractive bird. He offends both the eye and the nose. But he is commendably regular in his habits. The parent birds catch fish and after eating their fill deposit the others in their pouches under their bills and carry them to their young. These pouches will hold from three to eight pounds of fish. They are elastic, and when distended to their utmost nearly touch the ground. When empty the pouch lies close up under the big bill and is merely a mass of wrinkles. It is this pouch that gives the pelican his characteristic and disagreeable odor caused by particles of decaying fish.

The pelican's legs are short and strong, and its feet have large webs. It is not a fast swimmer nor a rapid flyer, but it is practically tireless in both air and water. On land it is awkward and unwieldy. Its feathers are pure white, except for a fluffy tuft of brown plumage that is seen on the top of the head for about six weeks in the early autumn. This tuft disappears in August and leaves a pimply bald pate that is not pleasant to view. At first the skin is red, then pink, then a straw color. By Nov. 1 the skin on the head hardens into a horny crest, which grows as the winter progresses until by the time the bird arrives at its breeding place in the northwest it is so prominent that it is called the "centerboard" because of its resemblance to the centerboard of a sailboat. When properly cured, the pelican skins and plumage are largely used in women's garments and hats.—St. Louis Republic.

ODD STORY.

A Turtle that Would Not Stay Away from a Certain Garden.

One of the interesting sights of Honolulu, Hawaii, but one few persons have an opportunity to view, is a great turtle living on the premises of a family there. This creature seems to have more intelligence than is usually allotted to one of its species.

One day a huge turtle, measuring four or five feet in length, appeared at the garden gate of the family mentioned, crawled in and made itself at home. The creature was put out, but returned. This was repeated several times, the last appearance being signalized by his raising himself on his hind legs and placing his fore feet against the gate. The members of the family owning the premises decided it was no use to resist longer, and admitted Mr. Turtle. Since then he has lived in that garden undisturbed, and has become a pet of the children. He crawls about during the day, receives meals of bran and water and scraps of food from the kitchen. The children soon ceased to be afraid of him, and can be seen frequently riding on his back, two or three at a time, as he crawls about. The story is related that he acts, in a measure, the part of a watch dog. When anyone enters the garden gate the animal hisses loudly. That serves to frighten the visitor, for he is unaware in daylight, for a moment, of the source of the warning sound, and at night is alarmed at the serpent-like noise. Where the turtle came from is a mystery. It is believed he is of great age. Some have expressed the belief that he is the same creature once owned by King Kamehameha, 100 years ago. That animal was afterward in the keeping of Queen Dowager Kapiolani, who died last June. Just before her death it disappeared, and, unless this is the same turtle, has not been seen since.

ANECDOTE AND INCIDENT

John I. Blair, in his earlier days, owned a Western railroad along the route of which he established a series of lunch rooms, at which employes of the road were to be charged 50 cents and all passengers 75 cents. Mr. Blair once dined at one of these places, and, concluding his meal, laid down a half dollar. "Hold on!" cried the cashier, "you don't belong to this road." "I know that," replied Mr. Blair, "the road belongs to me."

The skipper of a sailing vessel had as passenger an estimable but not very courageous minister and two careless young men given to mischief. A severe storm came up, and although the young men were frightened enough, their terror was nothing to that of the poor minister, who was indeed a pitiable object. "See here, sir," said the skipper at last, with kindly severity, "do you want me to think you're more afraid of going to heaven than those young men are of going to hell?"

During the Congress of Vienna each of the several monarchs present was the guest of some nobleman. On one occasion Baron Rothschild was invited. He modestly went to take his place, not among the more exalted guests. When they discovered Rothschild, however, they all arose and saluted him, except the King of Prussia. Some one asked the king why he did not salute the great European banker. "Did I not?" he replied; "well, I suppose it was because I was the only one who did not owe him anything."

The Senate has always been controlled by lawyers, and Blaine was at a disadvantage because he did not belong to the profession. The law-lords were disposed to disparage and flout him, but he was disrespectful to the verge of irreverence. "Does the Senator from Maine think I am an idjit (idiot)?" roared Thurman, in reply to an interrogatory Blaine put to him one day in the Pacific Railroad debate. "Well," bellowed Blaine, "that depends entirely on the answer you make to my question!"

Probably the easiest college examination on record is that recorded in the "Life of Dean Liddell." Christ Church was the resort of many gentlemen commoners who passed on their family, not their scholastic attainments. Still, they had to be examined, and one of them, who had been set to attend a course of lectures on the atmosphere, came before Osbourne Gordon for an inquiry into his very human understanding. "Well, Mr. —," said Gordon, "what is the atmosphere composed of?" After much hesitation the man replied, "Zinc." "Thank you," said Gordon, "that will do. Good-morning."

While at Harrow, Dean Vaughan was returning home late one evening, when he caught sight of a boy who ought to have been fast asleep in bed. As soon as the boy saw the dreaded figure he ran for dear life, with Dr. Vaughan in hot pursuit. He succeeded in catching the boy by one of his coattails, when there was a sudden wrench, and the youngster was off again, leaving a coattail in the head's hands. The master made sure that he would now find out the culprit next morning, and did not pursue further. But next day, to his blank astonishment, every boy of the sixth form had only one tail to his coat.

An old Irish laborer walked into the luxurious studio of an artist, and asked for money to obtain a meal. He explained that he had just been discharged from the county hospital, and was too weak to work. He was given a quarter and departed. One of four young ladies, art students, who were present, said: "Mr. Madder, can't we hire that old man and sketch him?" Madder ran out and caught him, and said: "If you can't work, and want to make a dollar, come back to my rooms. The young ladies want to paint you." The Irishman hesitated, so Madder remarked: "It won't take long, and it's an easy way to make a dollar." "Oi know that," was the reply, "but Oi was a-wonderin' how th' divil Oi'd git th' paint off afterward."

WRITER OF SWEET HYMNS.

The Late Rev. Robert Lowry and His Beautiful Song.

In many churches next Sunday the beautiful strains and the soothing words of the old hymn, "Shall we gather at the river?" will stir the hearts of thousands, and tears will come to the eyes of those who may read between the lines the sorrowful story of some past day when they stood by the bedside of one who was about to make that unknown journey, and the old doubt will come back to them—the old doubt that has ever troubled the heart of man when the dearest on earth is leaving. Shall we meet again in the great forever? The organ tones swell soft and low, and sweet and reassuring comes the promise:

Yes, we'll gather at the river,
The beautiful, the beautiful river,
Gather with the saints at the river
That flows by the throne of God.

For thirty-four years the wonderful hymn has brought peace to those who mourn. It has been sung in the great churches in the great cities and in the little chapels in the unpretentious hamlets. It has been sung in the Sunday schools and at the fireside and its melody has found a place in the hearts of the people.

The author of this and many other hymns that have soothed the troubled heart was laid to rest recently at Plainfield, N. J. He was Rev. Robert Lowry, a prominent Baptist preacher. Dr. Lowry was for years pastor of churches in New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City and other places and was at one time professor of rhetoric in Lewisburg University. He wrote many hymns, among them, beside the one already alluded to, being "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" "One More Day's Work for Jesus," and "Marching On."

"Shall We Gather at the River," like so many other gems of thought, was written on an inspiration of the moment. On one very warm summer day in 1864 Mr. Lowry was seated in his parlor in Brooklyn mourning the loss of several near and dear friends and many acquaintances taken away by an epidemic that was then sweeping through the city. All around him were signs of sorrow. Crape was on the doors of many houses; the signs of mourning were on the dress of the people; a gloom of sadness had been cast over all. Everywhere there was death. And across the mind of the pastor came the thought, "Shall we all meet again; we who have known and loved one another here on earth—shall we meet in the hereafter?"

"Seating myself at the organ," said Dr. Lowry one time in speaking of the occasion, "simply to give vent to the pent-up emotions of the heart, the words and music of the hymn began to flow out."

REARING THE CHILD.

Study Carefully Its Natural Growth, and Nourish That.

"In trying to understand child-life, make two mental pictures," advises Barbetta Brown in the Ladies' Home Journal. "In one, draw in the child as a block of marble, with mother, grandmother, teacher working away doggedly, relentlessly, chiseling, hammering, pounding it into what they are pleased to consider its proper shape. In the other, draw the child as a plant, with roots firmly set in the soil of circumstance, with peculiar tendencies of its own toward growth, naturally, gladly reaching outward and upward to what was meant to be its blossoming. Then tell me which picture appeals to you as more nearly approaching truth. I have faith enough in human understanding to believe that none will choose the first, but all the last, to hang in their gallery of ideas. How much simpler the beautiful growing process than the harsh chiseling process! All that we who love the child have to do is carefully to keep in good condition its environment; to see that it gets its needed sunshine; to study most carefully its natural growth and nourish that, and perhaps gently and lovingly to prune it now and then."

GOLD BUG FROM KLONDIKE.

Has Yellow Prongs that Tell Where to Find the Metal.

In the window of a shop on one of the main business streets of Seattle is a glass jar of alcohol containing a rare bug. Crowds jostle each other all day to look at it. The label on the bottle says only "Klondike Gold Bug." All over the creature's body are little prongs tipped with very pale yellow, almost white.

However, the more superstitious of the returning miners believe that the gold bug has a mysterious liking for the yellow metal and knows how to find it. This is the story a returned miner tells:

"Naw, I didn't have much 't first. Anyways, I got er 'poke' of gold by long work an' hid it in the dirt floor o' my shack. Next spring I panned and panned, an' didn't have no luck. But one day I noticed a bug crawling over the ground toward the middle of the shack. I kep' ketchin' him, an' pretty soon he started to dig right down toward where I had my 'poke' buried.

"So I puts the bug on the table while I buried the sack in another place. Then I put the bug down. Well, the critter seemed to sniff around, and then he started to dig, by jinks, right down where I had the sack. I thought I'd struck it at last. It nearly made me crazy to think that my luck had changed and I had a bug as good as Aladdin's lamp. I didn't sleep any that night. I waited till the sun rose, about 3 o'clock in the morning, watching my bug so he couldn't get away, and then started out with him. I put him down near where I had been digging.

"That bug crawled around for hours, and I was thinking myself a fool, when I noticed him changing his tactics. All at once he started to dig. I got a shovel and started after the bug. I dug all that day, and along about 9 o'clock at night I saw something yaller. By gosh, it was a nugget big as a hen's egg. I ain't going to tell you anything more, but I've just been to the assay office, and I didn't come out from the Klondike busted this year. Don't laugh at them little bugs. Some of them may fool you some day."

HARD WORK.

Compared to These the American Laborer Is Fortunate.

At least 1,500,000 Chinese earn a living by the most arduous labor. They are carriers and their task is to transport from 100 to 150 pounds from 1 to 40 miles. In Canton, a carrier thinks nothing of a burden of the latter weight, and men can be hired who will transport 100 pounds 60 miles in two days at a lower cost than it could be sent by freight in this country. In Russia it is not an uncommon sight to see women working in rock quarries. A vast amount of the hardest work on the canals of Central America has been done by men, women and children, who carry away basket loads of earth on their heads. It is a fact that the development of South America has been retarded by the work of these people. A vice president of the Mexican National Railroad has said that the peons were dangerous rivals in the transportation business, and that if they could be kept idle for the next three years there would be three times as much activity in railroad development. Not only this, but the turning of a man into a beast keeps the people ignorant and the country backward.

This feature of labor in South America is remarkable. Roads and trails have been cut across the Andes, not for horses nor for railroads. Over them thousands of men travel bearing enormous loads, and their endurance is greater than that of animals. In Guatemala almost all the transportation is done by the people. Produce is carried on the heads of men and women, and their harness is as carefully prepared as that of a horse; as a result there are no carriage roads in the country that amount to much. The goods are done up in packages which often weigh 150 pounds. On the top of this the carrier has his food, and bound to it is a cloak that is hauled over it when it rains. Thus equipped the human beast of burden travels all over the country, perhaps hundreds of miles, delivering goods. Nearly all the coffee in Rio is transported by trains of men. A captain rounds up the flock of 20 or 30 men. At the word they fling the bags, which weigh 160 pounds each, upon their shoulders and start at a slow trot. The captain has a rattle with which he regulates their speed, turning it quickly to increase the speed and slower to decrease it.

"The laborer in the United States sometimes believes that he has a hard time, but nowhere else in the world is he so well treated," said a traveler. "Take the question of wages. The carriers in Brazil earn about 25 cents a day; the peons loss, and the natives of Africa less. Yet these people live on beans and a kind of cakes that call to mind prepared sawdest. In traveling through England and Ireland eight or ten years ago I looked into the lives of the laborers, and found in many places that meat was a luxury; some had it once a week. What laborer in this country but has his meat daily, and generally twice a day?"

Belgian Queen's Home.

The Queen of the Belgians was brought up in her father's castle at Pesth amid surroundings and customs which remind one of the feudal ages. At night her father himself descended the great staircase to lock the outer gate and the door of the principal hall. This hall was divided into two parts, one end being raised a little above the other. At the elevated end the daughters of the house sat at their needlework or painting or music, while their attendants sat at the lower end of the hall.

Jews As Soldiers.

The first wound inflicted during the late Turco-Greek war was received by a Jew. There are in the British army 700 Jews, 144 of them being officers. France has 300 Jewish officers, amongst whom are several brigadier-generals and generals of division. In Italy the Jews hold high rank in the army. Thus, the Commandant of the Fortress at Turin is a Jew, Lieut.-General Ottolenghi. He is a persona gratissima with King Humbert, and was Chief of the Italian Crown Prince's Brigade at Naples.

GOLD IN THE MAILS.

COIN AND BULLION SHIPPED IN THIS WAY.

Millions of Dollars in the Yellow Metal Make Journey to New York Every Year from the West, South America and Europe.

Vast quantities of gold pass through the New York postoffice. The postoffice authorities are naturally reticent about it, for publicity adds to the risk, but the fact is that millions of dollars in gold coin and bullion are shipped through the mails by banks and individuals every year. In two days this year $3,175,000 in gold coin came through the New York postoffice for local banks. Most of the gold comes to New York from the West.

Gold is sent through the mail in strong canvas bags, such as are used in the treasury and bank vaults, securely fastened, and sealed. The bags contain from $1,000 to $10,000 each in $5, $10 and $20 pieces. The bags are registered, and the amount of gold contained in each package is marked on the registry receipt. Unless the bags have been broken open in transit, or their contents appear to have been tampered with, they are checked off when received at the postoffice without their contents being counted. But once in a while a mail bag comes into the postoffice with loose coins rattling in it that have escaped from one of the money bags. In that case the gold is counted to make sure that none of it is missing.

The treasure comes in with the ordinary mail matter, and is dumped unceremoniously into the mail wagons at the railway stations. No outsider would suspect anything extraordinary in the character of the mail. But, even if he did know the contents of the bags he would have a hard time in getting away with any of them, for the wagons have armed guards in plain clothes inside.

When the mail containing the gold bags arrives at the postoffice the mail pouches containing the registered matter are carried directly to the registry department. The banks to which the gold is consigned each has a confidential clerk at the postoffice ready to receive it and carry it to their vaults. These clerks are also accompanied by armed guards. The bank clerks are usually known personally to the superintendent of the registry department, yet they must present their credentials on each visit, with duplicates of invoice. The mail is piled on a long table, around which the postoffice and bank clerks gather. The bags containing the gold are separated from the rest, and the names of the banks to which the gold bags are addressed are called off. The respective bank clerks respond, and each bag is checked off as it is handed over to them. Here the responsibility of the postoffice ends and that of the banks begins. The bags are carried to the mail street end of the postoffice building. If the consignment to any one bank is large it has a wagon in waiting there, into which the gold is loaded and carried to the bank. Sometimes it is carried in cabs and sometimes in boxes by bank messengers.

Almost every bank in New York receives gold in this way. Most of it comes from the West; some of it comes from South America and some from Europe. The amount of mail shipments of gold is constantly increasing. In 1897 $16,000,000 in gold came through the New York postoffice. Last year the amount was $42,000,000, and this year the figures will be much larger. The reason for shipping gold through the mails is the same as for transferring diamonds in this manner, namely, cheapness and safety.—New York Evening Post.

ONE OF LAST OF HIS KIND.

John Padgett, Who Lives as a Trapper Remote from His Fellow-Men.

and fox, and kills enough game on which to live comfortably, with the addition of the vegetables which he raises in a little patch of ground near his cabin. All strangers are eyed suspiciously by him until he is satisfied that they do not intend to encroach on his favorite haunts, then he becomes hospitality itself. "Howdy, Mister," is his invariable salutation to every one. Those who gain his favor can be assured of a free passport to a paradise for sportsmen. The march of civilization has gradually driven the old man farther and farther into the forests, until now he is sufficiently isolated to be free from annoyance the rest of his life. The only persons he sees are the traders who come to buy his furs, and an occasional hunter. He has sons living in different cities who would gladly care for him the rest of his life, but the old man has lived so long in the woods with his dogs as his only companions that he does not care for the constant association with his fellow-men.

Nothing is more annoying than for a sensible man to associate with a fool unless it is for a fool to associate with a sensible man.

500 PAIRS OF EYES.

BEING FEMININE EYES, THEY WERE TERRIBLE.

Under Their Critical Scrutiny the Callous Man Who Had Many Escapes by Field and Flood Experienced a Trying Time.

He was a man of experience. He had visited nearly every known country and had thrilling adventures in some of them. He had hunted big game, and had been through at least one South American revolution. Consequently he was looked upon as an interesting story teller, and, being a convivial party, there was a natural desire on the part of his associates to draw him out.

"Tell us about the most thrilling, awe-inspiring experience you ever had," one of them urged.

"Oh, you can't expect him to single out one as the most nerve-trying of all," put in another. "He has had too many for that. Just tell us about any one of them, old man."

The man of experience thought a few minutes.

"There is one that stands out pre-eminently as the most trying ordeal of my life," he said at last. "No other experience that I ever went through begins to equal it. Nothing else ever made me half so nervous."

"Tell us about it!" they all cried.

"It was the day I took dinner at Vassar College," he began.

"Oh, come off!" they broke in. "Don't try to jolly us."

"I'm not," replied the man of experience. "I'm telling you the solemn truth. I was a friend of the family of a girl at Vassar, and, being armed with the proper credentials, I called upon her there and was invited to remain to dinner. I was the only man in the dining room. When I entered the girls were already seated and they took me in from head to foot. I could feel them doing it. At a rough guess I should say there were 500 pairs of eyes riveted upon me, and I knew that 500 girls were passing judgment upon me and everything connected with me—my dress, my bearing, my features, my manners, everything. One pair of feminine eyes can make a man feel uncomfortable, two pairs can make him think that life isn't worth living, and three pairs can give him the cold shivers. A girl knows it and she glories in it. When she has man at a disadvantage there is nothing that gives her greater pleasure than to make the most of it and watch him suffer. Those girls had me at their mercy. They overwhelmed me with cold, critical, analytical glances that were more deadly than Mauser bullets. By the time I reached the guests' table, where I sat in solemn grandeur with the girl at whose invitation I was there, I would have gladly exchanged places with a man leading a forlorn hope on the field of battle. Before the dinner was half over I would have considered being lost in a tropical jungle pleasing by comparison. Oh, those girls, those girls! They left the dining room before I did, and, in doing so, they passed my table. I tried to talk entertainingly to my friend, but I could feel them going by—and sizing me up, and I was satisfied that I didn't pass muster. It seemed as if each one was saying to herself: 'Oh, he's not so many! He lacks ease, and his tie isn't on straight.'

"And that," he added, "was my most terrible experience. There was a thrill or a chill to every minute of it. I would repeat any other ordeal of my life in preference to it. If you have never dined with 500 girls fully conscious of their power and mischievously inclined you cannot appreciate what it is."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

PELICANS IN THE BIG MUDDY.

Great Colony of the Birds on an Island in the Missouri River.

Pelican bend, in the Missouri River, netr St. Charles, Mo., is the scene of a great annual gathering of pelicans. There is a big flat bar in the river there which has endured far beyond the usual span of a bar's existence in the treacherous, shifting current of the Missouri. This bar is the semiannual stopping place of vast flocks of pelicans that migrate from south to north in the spring and from north to south in the fall.

Persons who have observed their habits claim that they invariably arrive at Pelican bend on Sept. 4 and remain until cold weather sends them south.

The pelican is not an attractive bird. He offends both the eye and the nose. But he is commendably regular in his habits. The parent birds catch fish and after eating their fill deposit the others in their pouches under their bills and carry them to their young. These pouches will hold from three to eight pounds of fish. They are elastic, and when distended to their utmost nearly touch the ground. When empty the pouch lies close up under the big bill and is merely a mass of wrinkles. It is this pouch that gives the pelican his characteristic and disagreeable odor caused by particles of decaying fish.

The pelican's legs are short and strong, and its feet have large webs. It is not a fast swimmer nor a rapid flyer, but it is practically tireless in both air and water. On land it is awkward and unwieldy. Its feathers are pure white, except for a fluffy tuft of brown plumage that is seen on the top of the head for about six weeks in the early autumn. This tuft disappears in August and leaves a pimply bald pate that is not pleasant to view. At first the skin is red, then pink, then a straw color. By Nov. 1 the skin on the head hardens into a horny crest, which grows as the winter progresses until by the time the bird arrives at its breeding place in the northwest it is so prominent that it is called the "centerboard" because of its resemblance to the centerboard of a sailboat. When properly cured, the pelican skins and plumage are largely used in women's garments and hats.—St. Louis Republic.

ODD STORY.

A Turtle that Would Not Stay Away from a Certain Garden.

One of the interesting sights of Honolulu, Hawaii, but one few persons have an opportunity to view, is a great turtle living on the premises of a family there. This creature seems to have more intelligence than is usually allotted to one of its species.

One day a huge turtle, measuring four or five feet in length, appeared at the garden gate of the family mentioned, crawled in and made itself at home. The creature was put out, but returned. This was repeated several times, the last appearance being signalized by his raising himself on his hind legs and placing his fore feet against the gate. The members of the family owning the premises decided it was no use to resist longer, and admitted Mr. Turtle. Since then he has lived in that garden undisturbed, and has become a pet of the children. He crawls about during the day, receives meals of bran and water and scraps of food from the kitchen. The children soon ceased to be afraid of him, and can be seen frequently riding on his back, two or three at a time, as he crawls about. The story is related that he acts, in a measure, the part of a watch dog. When anyone enters the garden gate the animal hisses loudly. That serves to frighten the visitor, for he is unaware in daylight, for a moment, of the source of the warning sound, and at night is alarmed at the serpent-like noise. Where the turtle came from is a mystery. It is believed he is of great age. Some have expressed the belief that he is the same creature once owned by King Kamehameha, 100 years ago. That animal was afterward in the keeping of Queen Dowager Kapiolani, who died last June. Just before her death it disappeared, and, unless this is the same turtle, has not been seen since.

John I. Blair, in his earlier days, owned a Western railroad along the route of which he established a series of lunch rooms, at which employes of the road were to be charged 50 cents and all passengers 75 cents. Mr. Blair once dined at one of these places, and, concluding his meal, laid down a half dollar. "Hold on!" cried the cashier, "you don't belong to this road." "I know that," replied Mr. Blair, "the road belongs to me."

The skipper of a sailing vessel had as passenger an estimable but not very courageous minister and two careless young men given to mischief. A severe storm came up, and although the young men were frightened enough, their terror was nothing to that of the poor minister, who was indeed a pitiable object. "See here, sir," said the skipper at last, with kindly severity, "do you want me to think you're more afraid of going to heaven than those young men are of going to hell?"

During the Congress of Vienna each of the several monarchs present was the guest of some nobleman. On one occasion Baron Rothschild was invited. He modestly went to take his place, not among the more exalted guests. When they discovered Rothschild, however, they all arose and saluted him, except the King of Prussia. Some one asked the king why he did not salute the great European banker. "Did I not?" he replied; "well, I suppose it was because I was the only one who did not owe him anything."

The Senate has always been controlled by lawyers, and Blaine was at a disadvantage because he did not belong to the profession. The law-lords were disposed to disparage and flout him, but he was disrespectful to the verge of irreverence. "Does the Senator from Maine think I am an idjit (idiot)?" roared Thurman, in reply to an interrogatory Blaine put to him one day in the Pacific Railroad debate. "Well," bellowed Blaine, "that depends entirely on the answer you make to my question!"

Probably the easiest college examination on record is that recorded in the "Life of Dean Liddell." Christ Church was the resort of many gentlemen commoners who passed on their family, not their scholastic attainments. Still, they had to be examined, and one of them, who had been set to attend a course of lectures on the atmosphere, came before Osbourne Gordon for an inquiry into his very human understanding. "Well, Mr. ——," said Gordon, "what is the atmosphere composed of?" After much hesitation the man replied, "Zinc." "Thank you," said Gordon, "that will do. Good-morning."

While at Harrow, Dean Vaughan was returning home late one evening, when he caught sight of a boy who ought to have been fast asleep in bed. As soon as the boy saw the dreaded figure he ran for dear life, with Dr. Vaughan in hot pursuit. He succeeded in catching the boy by one of his coattails, when there was a sudden wrench, and the youngster was off again, leaving a coattail in the head's hands. The master made sure that he would now find out the culprit next morning, and did not pursue further. But next day, to his blank astonishment, every boy of the sixth form had only one tail to his coat.

An old Irish laborer walked into the luxurious studio of an artist, and asked for money to obtain a meal. He explained that he had just been discharged from the county hospital, and was too weak to work. He was given a quarter and departed. One of four young ladies, art students, who were present, said: "Mr. Madder, can't we hire that old man and sketch him?" Madder ran out and caught him, and said: "If you can't work, and want to make a dollar, come back to my rooms. The young ladies want to paint you." The Irishman hesitated, so Madder remarked: "It won't take long, and it's an easy way to make a dollar." "Oi know that," was the reply, "but Oi was a-wonderin' how th' divil Oi'd git th' paint off afterward."

WRITER OF SWEET HYMNS.

The Late Rev. Robert Lowry and His Beautiful Song.

In many churches next Sunday the beautiful strains and the soothing words of the old hymn, "Shall we gather at the river?" will stir the hearts of thousands, and tears will come to the eyes of those who may read between the lines the sorrowful story of some past day when they stood by the bedside of one who was about to make that unknown journey, and the old doubt will come back to them—the old doubt that has ever troubled the heart of man when the dearest on earth is leaving. Shall we meet again in the great forever? The organ tones swell soft and low, and sweet and reassuring comes the promise:

Yes, we'll gather at the river,
The beautiful, the beautiful river,
Gather with the saints at the river
That flows by the throne of God.

For thirty-four years the wonderful hymn has brought peace to those who

mourn. It has been sung in the great churches in the great cities and in the little chapels in the unpretentious hamlets. It has been sung in the Sunday schools and at the fireside and its melody has found a place in the hearts of the people.

The author of this and many other hymns that have soothed the troubled heart was laid to rest recently at Plainfield, N. J. He was Rev. Robert Lowry, a prominent Baptist preacher. Dr. Lowry was for years pastor of churches in New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City and other places and was at one time professor of rhetoric in Lewisburg University. He wrote many hymns, among them, beside the one already alluded to, being "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-night?" "One More Day's Work for Jesus," and "Marching On."

"Shall We Gather at the River," like to many other gems of thought, was written on an inspiration of the moment. On one very warm summer day in 1864 Mr. Lowry was seated in his parlor in Brooklyn mourning the loss of several near and dear friends and many acquaintances taken away by an epidemic that was then sweeping through the city. All around him were signs of sorrow. Crape was on the doors of many houses; the signs of mourning were on the dress of the people; a gloom of sadness had been cast over all. Everywhere there was death. And across the mind of the pastor came the thought, "Shall we all meet again; we who have known and loved one another here on earth—shall we meet in the hereafter?"

"Seating myself at the organ," said Dr. Lowry one time in speaking of the occasion, "simply to give vent to the pent-up emotions of the heart, the words and music of the hymn began to flow out."

REARING THE CHILD.

Study Carefully Its Natural Growth, and Nourish That.

"In trying to understand child-life, make two mental pictures," advises Barbetta Brown in the Ladies' Home Journal. "In one, draw in the child as a block of marble, with mother, grandmother, teacher working away doggedly, relentlessly, chiseling, hammering, pounding it into what they are pleased to consider its proper shape. In the other, draw the child as a plant, with roots firmly set in the soil of circumstance, with peculiar tendencies of its own toward growth, naturally, gladly reaching outward and upward to what was meant to be its blossoming. Then tell me which picture appeals to you as more nearly approaching truth. I have faith enough in human understanding to believe that none will choose the first, but all the last, to hang in their gallery of ideas. How much simpler the beautiful growing process than the harsh chiseling process! All that we who love the child have to do is carefully to keep in good condition its environment; to see that it gets its needed sunshine; to study most carefully its natural growth and nourish that, and perhaps gently and lovingly to prune it now and then."

GOLD BUG FROM KLONDIKE.

Has Yellow Prongs that Tell Where to Find the Metal.

In the window of a shop on one of the main business streets of Seattle is a glass jar of alcohol containing a rare bug. Crowds jostle each other all day to look at it. The label on the bottle says only "Klondike Gold Bug." All over the creature's body are little prongs tipped with very pale yellow, almost white.

However, the more superstitious of the returning miners believe that the gold bug has a mysterious liking for the yellow metal and knows how to find it. This is the story a returned miner tells:

"Naw, I didn't have much 't first. Anyways, I got er 'poke' of gold by long work an' hid it in the dirt floor o' my shack. Next spring I panned and panned, an' didn't have no luck. But one day I noticed a bug crawling over the ground toward the middle of the shack. I kep' ketchin' him, an' pretty soon he started to dig right down toward where I had my 'poke' buried.

"So I puts the bug on the table while I buried the sack in another place. Then I put the bug down. Well, the critter seemed to sniff around, and then he started to dig, by jinks, right down where I had the sack. I thought I'd struck it at last. It nearly made me crazy to think that my luck had changed and I had a bug as good as Aladdin's lamp. I didn't sleep any that night. I waited till the sun rose, about 3 o'clock in the morning, watching my bug so he couldn't get away, and then started out with him. I put him down near where I had been digging.

"That bug crawled around for hours, and I was thinking myself a fool, when I noticed him changing his tactics. All at once he started to dig. I got a shovel and started after the bug. I dug all that day, and along about 9 o'clock at night I saw something yaller. By gosh, it was a nugget big as a hen's egg. I ain't going to tell you anything more, but I've just been to the assay office, and I didn't come out from the Klondike busted this year. Don't laugh at them little bugs. Some of them may fool you some day."

HARD WORK.

Compared to These the American Laborer Is Fortunate.

At least 1,500,000 Chinese earn a living by the most arduous labor. They are carriers and their task is to transport from 100 to 150 pounds from 1 to 40 miles. In Canton, a carrier thinks nothing of a burden of the latter weight, and men can be hired who will transport 100 pounds 60 miles in two days at a lower cost than it could be sent by freight in this country. In Russia it is not an uncommon sight to see women working in rock quarries. A vast amount of the hardest work on the canals of Central America has been done by men, women and children, who carry away basket loads of earth on their heads. It is a fact that the development of South America has been retarded by the work of these people. A vice president of the Mexican National Railroad has said that the peons were dangerous rivals in the transportation business, and that if they could be kept idle for the next three years there would be three times as much activity in railroad development. Not only this, but the turning of a man into a beast keeps the people ignorant and the country backward.

This feature of labor in South America is remarkable. Roads and trails have been cut across the Andes, not for horses nor for railroads. Over them thousands of men travel bearing enormous loads, and their endurance is greater than that of animals. In Guatemala almost all the transportation is done by the people. Produce is carried on the heads of men and women, and their harness is as carefully prepared as that of a horse; as a result there are no carriage roads in the country that amount to much. The goods are done up in packages which often weigh 150 pounds. On the top of this the carrier has his food, and bound to it is a cloak that is hauled over it when it rains. Thus equipped the human beast of burden travels all over the country, perhaps hundreds of miles, delivering goods. Nearly all the coffee in Rio is transported by trains of men. A captain rounds up the flock of 20 or 30 men. At the word they fling the bags, which weigh 160 pounds each, upon their shoulders and start at a slow trot. The captain has a rattle with which he regulates their speed, turning it quickly to increase the speed and slower to decrease it.

"The laborer in the United States sometimes believes that he has a hard time, but nowhere else in the world is he so well treated," said a traveler. "Take the question of wages. The carriers in Brazil earn about 25 cents a day; the peons loss, and the natives of Africa less. Yet these people live on beans and a kind of cakes that call to mind prepared sawdest. In traveling through England and Ireland eight or ten years ago I looked into the lives of the laborers, and found in many places that meat was a luxury; some had it once a week. What laborer in this country but has his meat daily, and generally twice a day?"

Belgian Queen's Home.

The Queen of the Belgians was brought up in her father's castle at Pesth amid surroundings and customs which remind one of the feudal ages. At night her father himself descended the great staircase to lock the outer gate and the door of the principal hall. This hall was divided into two parts, one end being raised a little above the other. At the elevated end the daughters of the house sat at their needlework or painting or music, while their attendants sat at the lower end of the hall.

Jews As Soldiers.

The first wound inflicted during the late Turco-Greek war was received by a Jew. There are in the British army 700 Jews, 144 of them being officers. France has 300 Jewish officers, amongst whom are several brigadier-generals and generals of division. In Italy the Jews hold high rank in the army. Thus, the Commandant of the Fortress at Turin is a Jew, Lieut.-General Ottolenghi. He is a persona gratissima with King Humbert, and was Chief of the Italian Crown Prince's Brigade at Naples.

GOLD IN THE MAILS.

COIN AND BULLION SHIPPED IN THIS WAY.

Millions of Dollars in the Yellow Metal Make Journey to New York Every Year from the West, South America and Europe.

Vast quantities of gold pass through the New York postoffice. The postoffice authorities are naturally reticent about it, for publicity adds to the risk, but the fact is that millions of dollars in gold coin and bullion are shipped through the mails by banks and individuals every year. In two days this year $8,175,000 in gold coin came through the New York postoffice for local banks. Most of the gold comes to New York from the West.

Gold is sent through the mail in strong canvas bags, such as are used in the treasury and bank vaults, securely fastened, and sealed. The bags contain from $1,000 to $10,000 each in $5, $10 and $20 pieces. The bags are registered, and the amount of gold contained in each package is marked on the registry receipt. Unless the bags have been broken open in transit, or their contents appear to have been tampered with, they are checked off when received at the postoffice without their contents being counted. But once in a while a mail bag comes into the postoffice with loose coins rattling in it that have escaped from one of the money bags. In that case the gold is counted to make sure that none of it is missing.

The treasure comes in with the ordinary mail matter, and is dumped unceremoniously into the mail wagons at the railway stations. No outsider would suspect anything extraordinary in the character of the mail. But, even if he did know the contents of the bags he would have a hard time in getting away with any of them, for the wagons have armed guards in plain clothes inside.

When the mail containing the gold bags arrives at the postoffice the mail pouches containing the registered matter are carried directly to the registry department. The banks to which the gold is consigned each has a confidential clerk at the postoffice ready to receive it and carry it to their vaults. These clerks are also accompanied by armed guards. The bank clerks are usually known personally to the superintendent of the registry department, yet they must present their credentials on each visit, with duplicates of invoice. The mail is piled on a long table, around which the postoffice and bank clerks gather. The bags containing the gold are separated from the rest, and the names of the banks to which the gold bags are addressed are called off. The respective bank clerks respond, and each bag is checked off as it is handed over to them. Here the responsibility of the postoffice ends and that of the banks begins. The bags are carried to the mail street end of the postoffice building. If the consignment to any one bank is large it has a wagon in waiting there, into which the gold is loaded and carried to the bank. Sometimes it is carried in cabs and sometimes in boxes by bank messengers.

Almost every bank in New York receives gold in this way. Most of it comes from the West; some of it comes from South America and some from Europe. The amount of mail shipments of gold is constantly increasing. In 1897 $16,000,000 in gold came through the New York postoffice. Last year the amount was $42,000,000, and this year the figures will be much larger. The reason for shipping gold through the mails is the same as for transferring diamonds in this manner, namely, cheapness and safety.—New York Evening Post.

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. The Kind You Have Always Bought

Will Bring them Home.

Capt. Sigsbee in command of the battleship Texas has gone to Havana to bring home the bodies of the unfortunate men who lost their lives when his ship, the Maine, was blown up. All who were recovered from the wreck were buried at Havana, and Father Chadwick, the ship's chaplain, made a map of the order in which they were buried and will now be on hand to identify them. They will be removed without ceremony, carefully wrapped in embalming cloth, and brought home. It is a sad task, but very fitting that Captain Sigsbee should do it.

An Old Regiment.

Some of the English Regiments now serving in South Africa are over a hundred years old. The Indianapolis Sentinel in speaking of one of these says:

It will seem strange to our readers that the Black Watch regiment which suffered so badly at the Tugela river, had any connection with Indiana, but it is a fact that it once garrisoned our capital. Shortly before the revolutionary war it was stationed at Ft. Chartres on the Mississippi river, which was at that time the seat of government for all our territory, Vincennes being only a sub-station.

LAWTON KILLED!

The Brave Indiana Soldier Loses His Life in the Attack on San Mateo.

The war department at Washington received an official communication from Gen. Otis yesterday announcing the death of Gen. Lawton, northeast of Manila.

Gen. Lawton left Manila Monday night with a strong force to invade the Mariquim valley. San Mateo was attacked at 8 o'clock yesterday morning and a three hours' fight ensued.

Gen. Lawton was walking along the firing line, and was a conspicuous target for the enemy's sharpshooters. Suddenly he was heard to exclaim "I am shot!" and fell into the arms of a staff officer. Death came as the victorious American troops entered the city. The body was carried across the river and prepared for removal to Manila, where Mrs. Lawton and the children were living with the general.

Another Manila Letter.

MANILA, P. I., Nov. 6, 1899.

EDITOR COURIER:—I have received several letters from persons wishing to know the true state of affairs in the Philippines and I will endeavor to answer them through the columns of the old reliable COURIER. In the first place, the statements made in some of the newspapers come from men who enlisted think the government was taking them on a pleasure trip. When they got here they became homesick, and write back about the hardships they have to endure; how they are treated when sick, etc. I am safe in asserting that one-half of them never received better treatment in their lives than they get in the hospitals here. Half the nurses are ladies, and their nursing is as good as a mother or sister could give.

I would advise the people not to believe all they read about the army in the Philippines. There is no army in the world that is better fed than the Eighth army corps. For instance, we have fresh beef every day, light bread, cured bacon, macaroni, rice, onions, potatoes, sugar, molasses, beans, salmon, and many other things had I the time and space.

Another thing some of the men do is to write home and criticise their superior officers, which no good soldier will do. If they get sick or miss a meal they seem to think Gen. Otis is responsible. They also claim that prisoners of war are badly treated. The fact is they get more to eat while prisoners than they ever received before. They are really too well treated, considering how they treat some of our men when caught.

I am sure that if Atkinson and some of his followers were over here they would be treated with the same respect as their hero, Aguinaldo. The soldiers here are sorry that the stars and stripes shelter such people as they. As for Gen. Otis censoring the news from here we don't believe it. I have not seen anything yet that has not been in the Manila papers, which circulate largely in the states. If the American people will keep Otis four months more Aquinaldo and his so-called government will pass into history. Nearly every American here believes in keeping "old glory" where Dewey put it, and I think this will be done. No matter what party is in power. With a pleasant adieu to the COURIER and its many readers I am yous respectfully, WILLIAM CLARK,
Co. D., 20th U. S. Infantry.

Misconceptions of Children.

From the London Academy: May I add one more example to the astonishing list of childish misconceptions? It was in the days when the litany formed an inevitable part of the morning service and a little boy of my acquaintance, unable to read, used to hear, in response to an unintelligible drone from the officiating clergyman, the oft-repeated and awe-inspiring statement: "We see—such a hairus—good Lord!" Many a scared glance did he cast about the little country church, wondering what a "hairus" might be and why he could not also see one. The sentence was, of course, the Buckinghamshire rendering of "We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord." Eight pupils, whose average age might be 7, were asked to write the Lord's prayer from memory. Five of the eight wrote: "Lead us not in tutem tation." A friend took her Sunday school class to the seaside. It was a new experience for one scholar, who exclaimed: "Teacher, there's the sea, but where's all the tinimies?" ("The sea and all that in them is.")

Latest News of the Day.

The end of the rainy season in the Philippines has enabled us to send forces rapidly in every direction, and we have uniformly succeeded. Many towns in all parts have fallen into our hands and nearly every day are reports of a few Spanish prisoners liberated and brought by our ships into Manila.

The best news we have is that Lieut. Gilmore and the rest of his party have been rescued. They were captured last April and according to the heathen practice of the Filipinos, have been kept in unknown places since then and no word of them ever allowed to get out. It was as if they had been swallowed up in an earthquake. Their ship, the cruiser Yorktown, had gone to a seaport named Baler, to try and liberate a small Spanish garrison the Filipinos had kept cooped up in a church but could not capture. The Yorktown could not go up the river till soundings were made. Lieut. Gilmore and fourteen men started in a launch to take soundings. After they had got around a bend out of sight of the ship, they were attacked by Filipinos on shore, and finally compelled to surrender. That is the way, we know it was, but till lately we have only known they were lost. Lately, our men have captured many towns, and at several of them, we found pinned to prison or church walls, short notes from Gilmore for our men were being hurried from place to place, whenever they heard our forces were coming.

In congress the new financial bill committing the country to the gold standard passed the House yesterday. It was a heavy vote, 340 members out of a possible 356 voting on it. The vote stood 190 for, and 150 against it.

There has been quite a panic in Wall street, and several firms have failed, but it is not believed it will have any marked effect on the country at large.

Show Windows.

Yesbera's window is a beauty. The chief figure is of full size and made of cotton batting, while a big cornucopia is spouting fourth gifts. The background is a winter scene of great beauty.

Bishop & Beidler have two windows. One draped with deep red, and filled with lovely shoes. The other is of pink and white and in a little alcove sits a large doll driving a team of five shoes. She makes a sweet picture.

Lackey's big window presents a dazzling array of goods which are arranged in such an artistic manner as to attract much attention. This popular store is having a big holiday trade.

R. Shull has a most taking and picturesque show window, with the full grown old Santa Claus sitting there as natural as life. Santa takes the eye of countless little ones going past.

Trentman Sister have a window made beautiful by various showy articles in their line, and festooned with handkerchiefs.

Harry Trentman can make no great decorations with his goods, but he has them nicely and temptingly displayed in his window.

Davidson, tho jeweler, presents a nice lot of up-to-date jewelry and novelties, as well as musical instruments of all kinds.

Mr. Nebelung of the Bazar is in the front rank as usual with displays that catch the eye. The genial proprietor and his clerks are kept busy these days.

D. A. Hodge shows as fine line of watches, jewelry, silverware and novelties as our people have ever seen; and we notice that he has plenty of visitors.

Schaab & Bro.'s window is one of the handsomest in town, each article being displayed to good advantage. Those who look at this display almost invaribly step inside where they are given a cordial welcome.

McCord has his store full to the windows, full also of suitable goods, such as perfumery, books, dolls, toys, etc, etc.

ST. JOE.

L. S. Saylor of Ashley was in town two or three days last week.

Jacob Dermot is reported as somewhat improved in health.

Rev. Medbury's lecture was not as well patronized as it should have been.

Our old friend Abe Kraybill is somewhat improved in health and is staying with his son Jacob this winter.

Frank Barney at the elevator bought of Preston Roberts 45 bushels of clover seed on Tuesday of last week. Price, $4 per bushel.

A. B. Filley lost a valuable mule Saturday night by hanging.

S. L. Widney has gone to Bellvue O., for a visit with his father's family.

It is not generally known perhaps that St. Joe has a man within its borders that is the champion wrestler of this neck of the woods. Any one who wishes to try their muscle will be accommodated by calling on Sam Openlander at the telegraph office.

Booker T. Washington on Slavery.

Booker T. Washington, the distinguished colored man of the south, in a recent speech said: "American slavery was a great curse to both races, and I would be the last to apologize for it. But, in the providence of God, I believe that slavery laid the foundation for the solution of the problem that is now before us in the south. During slavery the negro was taught every trade, every industry that constitutes the foundation for a living."

The World's Railways.

For something like fifteen years the railways of the world have been increasing at the rate of 14,000 miles per year. The grand aggregate is now put at 443,100 miles.

AUDITOR'S REPORT.

To Whom it May Concern: Notice.

The following old county orders are drawn and the owners have not called for them. Under the new County Reform Act, all those outstanding and uncalled for drawn orders must be paid before January 1st, 1900. If not presented or called for before that time, parties interested will be obliged to wait for their money until a new appropriation is made by the County Council.

BUTLER.

John Britzius died last Thursday. His funeral took place from his late residence last Sunday, conducted by the Lutheran minister, with Masonic honors. He was said to have been the father of twenty children, thirteen of whom, together with his last wife, survive him.

Last Sunday was the greatest Sunday Butler has experienced for many years. Not a barber shop, meat market or store of any kind was open, except perhaps a drugstore for a part of the day. The opponents of Sunday closing want the water works to shut down, the livery stables locked up, and the cows to go unmilked.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell has been laid up with something akin to grip, for the past week.

The different churches are preparing inviting Christmas festivities for next Saturday night and the children are all expecting in the hopes of Christmas presents.

Peter Helwig is reported not quite so well at present writing.

J. A. Campbell adjusted losses at Helmer and Hudson last week.

The new M. E. church at Hamilton will soon be ready for dedication.

One of the largest single shipments of poultry in the history of Butler, took place last week. Capp Bros., were the shippers and Boston the market.

Charles Metcalf, living three miles northeast of Butler, continues at death's door, with meager hopes of recovery.

Interesting Curiosities.

An interesting collection of curiosities from British New Guinea, antiquities and relics, came under the hammer at Stevens' Auction Rooms, Covent Garden, London. A bronze head, representing one of the ancient king of Benin, sold for £18 7s 6d; a mummy of an Egyptian princess, in elaborate coffin, sold for seven guineas; a number of native skulls, with curiously notched designs, averaged 30s each; and some carved charms, worn by the natives, when fighting, five guineas.

Play of Rural Life.

"Uncle Seth Haskins" which comes to Henry's opera house 'Xmas day for two performances, is a rural play, the locality being in Vermont, with an abundance of those quaint characters which exist thereabouts and nowhere else in this broad world. It is a fruitful field for the dramatist, first, because these homely characterizations appeal strongly to everyone, and again, for the reason that the type is rapidly becoming obsolete. When writing "Seth Haskins" Mr. Hodgkins was careful to combine the domestic with the dramatic, and framed his play that while it contains many comedy situations, yet the dramatic interest is preserved until the final curtain.

Two high sensational acts are introduced, the explosion and the sawmill scenes, both which are realistic to a high degree. Especially is this true of the sawmill scene. The audience are frequently seen to rise to their feet in astonishment at the narrow escape the person has who is tied to the saw.

CEDAR.

J. A. Zern, formerly of this place but now a resident of Allen county, was in town one day last week treating the boys to cigars. John says he is married this time sure.

Oliver Haag and wife became residents of this town this week, having moved into the house recently vacated by D. B. Batdorff's family.

Messrs. Haag and Schopf have ordered a new grinder for their mill and will be prepared to grind corn meal and chop, next week, we understand.

Mrs. J. W. Kenton was called to Churubusco on Saturday last to attend the funeral of her brother.

Curtis Solenberger and wife, formerly of the St. James hotel, Avilla, visited friends here the first of the week.

Largest and best oysters in town will be found at Himes' during the holidays, also plenty of Fox's "Forex" crackers, at 7 cents per pound.

Billy, the hunter, shot a rabbit the other day. He got him in a rail pile where he could not get away.

David Gump came very near being without a home on last Sunday evening. The family was about ready to go to church when they discovered a fire in one of the rooms up stairs. They succeeded in getting it under control after considerable was done.

Aaron Smith expects to visit his brother in Northern Michigan during the holidays.

It is reported that a fellow living near here went to the woods one day last week to cut wood and lost his ax.

All the mixed candy you want for 5 cents at Hime's until after the holidays.

Old Mr. Kenton started for California on Tuesday of this week.

Messrs. Baker Holman loaded a car with corn here this week.

More Swindling

Recently two well-dressed and pretty slick young men have been doing business in several parts of the country. They claim to be photo artists and their specialty is medallion portraits. They offer to make pictures for fifty cents and return the original photo in good shape. In most cases, however, they paste the photo on the glass and of course cannot return it; but sometimes they do deliver the medallion(?). A case is reported from Spencerville.

The "artists" called on the families of two well-known citizens there and told a fetching tale of what nice pictures they could make The result was that both the ladies gave them several orders, each order for fifty cents. This was last Friday, and on Monday the medallion pictures were delivered all right, but the original photo did not come back. It was no doubt used to make the medallion by pasting it upon the back of the glass. That was probably all the fellows knew how to do. But that is not the worst of it. They gave the ladies a promise that in addition to the medallions they were entitled to half a dozen photos free; the customers must come to Auburn and to the gallery over the postoffice, where they would be given a free sitting and the six photos would be delivered as soon as finished. Yesterday the two ladies braved the storm, came to St. Joe and took the B. & O. to the Junction, and then came up town and sought the rooms over the postoffice, only to find that no gallery had existed there since years ago when John Aber was in the business. It was a bitter disappointment, made all the sharper by a realization that they had from the start been made the victims of a very slick swindle.

The rascals claimed to live in Auburn. But of course they do not. We have two good photo studios here, Mr. Neher and Mr. Lybarger, who would never think of dealing dishonestly. When will people learn not to have dealings with strangers, when they can do so much better right at home and by patronizing those they know to be reliable. We are told by one who knows, that these medallions, and better in quality can be had at any studio at 10 cents each.

Higher Prices.

People hardly comprehend as yet that the prices of things we have to buy have been raised all along the line, yet such is the case. All articles of clothing, dry goods in all their endless variety, nails and all kinds of hardware, in short, nearly everything one has to buy in a store of any kind, has been increased in cost from ten to twenty-five per cent. And people who have been used to very low prices of the past few years, are hardly willing to believe the merchant when he tells them "prices have advanced." They step into a store and ask for the article, ask the price. The merchant names it, and they hardly believe him and sometimes are offended. It looks to them as if he was telling them a fairy tale in order to get a bigger price and therefore a bigger profit than before. But he is telling them the truth. The goods have cost him as much more than they used to, as he is now charging his customers. That is all there is to it. He must charge them more or he will lose on his goods, for he is now paying the wholesale dealer as much as he used to charge his own customers.

Board of Health Secretary.

This useful officer is liable to get an increase of salary. A new law passed by the last legislature gives him a four year office, beginning January 1, 1900. The salary to be paid in all cases is to be fixed by the number of inhabitants in his county or town, though in no case shall it exceed $1,500. The number of inhabitants is determined by multiplying last year's school census by 3½, and when that is found the pay is fixed at one and one-fourth cents per capita.

The school population of the county, as reported by Superintendent Coe last spring, is 7,159. Multiplying this by 3½ we have an estimated population in the county of 25,056 On this we reckon the salary at 1¼ cents each, which gives the county secretary $315.20.

The several incorporated towns will also have a secretary, or at least they can have, and on this basis the salaries will be: Garrett, $41.51; Auburn, $35.04; Butler, $24.54; Waterloo, $13.42; St. Joe, $6.39; Ashley, (DeKalb side,) $5 77.

Magnetism in Bricks.

From time to time experts have noticed certain unexplainable peculiarities in magnetic instruments in various buildings. Electricians now declare, as the result of experiments and investigations, that the vagaries are due to the presence of magnetism in bricks. They are made of earthy matter containing a greater or less proportion of magnetic iron ore.

Cost of Our Vacations.

Between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 people in the United States take a vacation every summer, according to a fiend for a fondness for estimating. They spend more than $40,000,000.

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

The question of the effectiveness of the bar for two years against granting a license after a remonstrance has been filed, has been tested in the Circuit Court at Plymouth, and also at Kokomo.

In the case at Plymouth, notice was given in August that an application would be made for license to sell liquor in the town of Bourbon, in Marshall county, but a remonstrance was circulated and soon a sufficient number of names was procured to defeat the granting of a license.

Under the law, a remonstrance must be filed three days before the first day of the meeting of the board of commissioners, but the law makes provision that the application must be filed upon the first day of the meeting of the board. When the applicant for license saw the remonstrance and that there were sufficent names signed to it to defeat him, he never filed his former application upon the first day of the meeting of the Board of Commissioners, thus hoping to avoid the operation of the statute, which says that after the filing of such remonstrance against any applicant, no license shall be granted to such applicant for the period of two years thereafter. Claiming that, although, he had advertised that he would take out license, he was not and never was an applicant within the meaning of the statute.

If this had been established as the law it would thoroughly have killed that part of the statute which bars any applicant from securing license for two years after such defeat, because, at any time the applicant could wait till the first day of the opening of the term.

The Plymouth applicant therefore did not appear before the commissioners upon the first day of the opening of the September term, but immediately gave notice that he would apply at the October term. At the October term, the board of commissioners of that county held that he was barred by the remonstrance filed before them at the September term. An appeal was taken from the county commissioners to the circuit court. The case was hotly contested, but the circuit court of that county heald that within the meaning of the statute, the notice itself makes the party applying, an applicant. The formal filing of the application before the board of commissioners is not the act which makes the party applying an applicant, but the party applying for license is, within the meaning of the statute, an applicant from the day of the publication of the first notice.

This opinion was given by the learned Judge Capron, of Plymouth. Almost at the same time, a similar diclsion was rendered by the learned Judge Mount at Kokomo.

The Clippings Industry

Among the industries which have sprung up in recent years that of press clipping must take prominent rank. Queen Victoria subscribes to several bureaus of this kind, but never sees the cuttings until they have been put into books under the editing of some of her family. The prince of Wales patronizes two of these firms, and in addition cuts out with his own hands all pictures of himself which appear in the public prints. The greater the caricature the more he chuckles over it. But the royal patron who is the best customer is the czar of Russia. An American bureau had made for him a scrapbook sumptuously bound, with gilt edges and clasps of gold, in which are cuttings from every paper about the death and obsequies of his father, also about his own marriage and coronation ceremonies, and later in regard to the American journey of Prince Hilkoff, his minister of railways. The same firm has now in hand all clippings relating to the peace conference, which is to form another series of the imperial scrapbook. It is well known that the czarina takes a keen delight in cutting out with her own hands caricatures of her husband which appear in the newspapers and then sticking them on the wall of a room in the winter palace which is especially reserved for the purpose.

The Twentieth Century.

(Columbia City Post.)

The announcement of Pope Leo that the twentieth century begins December 31, 1899, at midnight, has revived discussion of the question as to when the 19th century closes and the 20th century begins. The Pope is not alone in his claim that the 19th century ends December 31, 1899, but he is undoubtedly in the minority. It requires 100 years to make a century, not 99. The first century did not end at the close of the year 99, but at the end of the year 100. It is the end not the beginning of the year that counts.

If a man were buying 100 bushels of wheat, he would not be satisfied when the 99th bushel was full, but would insist on the 100th measure, and the 19th century cannot end until the year 1900 ends.

Much discussion of this subject has taken place and it is quite likely that the matter will continue to be disputed until it is forgotten in the onward march of time.

As we understand the Pope's announcement, he has proclaimed 1900 as a holy year; in providing for a midnight mass December 31, 1899, he also recommends a similar mass at midnight of December 31, 1900, when, he says, the century will come to an end. Pope Leo evidently belongs to the majority instead of the minority.

Tickets will also be sold to points on some of immediate connecting lines. Full particulars from ticket agents. 51

Paris Pawnshops.

London Chronicle: All sorts and conditions of people patronize the Paris Mont de Piete, or municipal pawnshop. A report just issued shows that among the borrowers last year were 8,500 working people, 8,497 employes, 6,564 merchants, tradesmen and manufacturers, and 2,019 representatives of the liberal professions. Rentiers, who live on their dividends, frequently seek the help of the friendly Mont, and 3,209 of this class are among the borrowers. The institution is looked upon more as in the nature of a bank than is the pawnshop. It advances money at low rates of interest on any form of security, including furniture and railway shares, and is used by the tradesman short of capital as well as by laborers out of work.

Life Growing Longer.

Prof. Mansfield Merriman, studying the United States census reports since 1850, has discovered a marked and steady increase in the length of human life in our country during the last half century. His statistics, which were presented at the recent meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, show that in 1850 the median age of the entire population was 18.3 years, while in 1890 it had risen to 21.4 years. In 1900 he anticipates, it will be 22.4 years. By "median age" is meant that which divides the population equally, one-half being above and the other half below the median.

Designing.

Women are beginning to succeed as designers, and it is gratifying to learn that the chief prizes given by playing card makers have been this year won by women. One would imagine designing, with its charm and delicacy and fancy, an especially congenial employment for women, and yet hitherto they have been left far behind by the male designers, both in originality and accuracy of expression. It is to be hoped that, thanks to the art training and the care bestowed on the decoration of houses and furniture at the present day, a new generation of skillful artificers and designers may spring up among women.

Longevity of Watches.

Watches are famous for their longevity, and some of them seem to bear a charmed life, despite sundry visits to the pawnbroker and other vicissitudes of fortune. The other day a little girl found a gold watch and chain in a field at Woodburn, Bucks. The chance of discovering the rightful owner seemed faint indeed until the article was recognized by Mrs. Arthur Cripps of Great Marlow. It was one which Mr. Cripps had lost while hunting over sixteen years ago. Notwithstanding its prolonged interment, the works of the watch were scarcely injured.—London Telegraph.

Breeches on the Wrong Man.

Bret Harte is so frequently complimented as the author of "Little Breeches," that he is almost as sorry it was ever written as is Col. John Hay, who would prefer his fame to rest on more ambitious work. A gushing lady, who prided herself on her literary tastes, said to him once: "My dear Mr. Harte, I am so delighted to meet you. I have read everything you ever wrote, but of all your dialect verse t re is none that compares to your "Little Breeches." "I quite agree with you, madam," said Mr. Harte, "but you have put the breeches on the wrong man."

Cheap Literature in Germany.

A publishing house in Germany, the object of which is to supply good literature to the masses at a low price, has sold in the last twenty-five years 650,000 copies of Schiller's "William Tell," more than half a million copies of "Hermann and Dorothea," and 300,000 copies of "Faust" at the price of 5 cents each. Among the translations, Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward" has had a sale of 225,000 copies.

Plants for Commercial Use.

It is interesting to know that 4,200 species of plants are gathered and used for commercial purposes in Europe. Of these 420 have a perfume that is pleasing, and enter largely into the manufacture of scents and soaps. There are more species of white flowers gathered than of any other color—1,124 in all.

The Shah's Treasures.

Of all the sovereigns of the world, the shah of Persia is said to possess the largest treasure in jewel and gold ornaments, it being valued at no less a sum than £12,000,000.

"UNCLE SETH HASKINS"

It must be admitted that the most successful attractions from a box-office standpoint are those plays that contain a great heart interest and bright clean cut comedy. Such a play is "Seth Haskins" which comes to Henry's Opera House Monday next afternoon and night Dec. 25. This piece is certainly a masterpiece among New England comedy dramas and contains four acts, depicting life in the rural districts of Vermont. Aside from the beautiful story unfolded during the performance, a number of new startling vaudeville acts are introduced by various members of the company, including Burt Hodgkins, W. J. Madden Grace Leith, Bessie Maher, and Harry LaMack, all of whom have been head-liners at the various houses in the country. The band and orchestra carried by this company are musicians of recognized ability, nearly every member being a soloist.

—Always glad to show goods at G. H. Yesbera's, Auburn.

—Wm. Weicht was a caller Saturday to pay his subscription.

—Philip Noel of Butler township was an early visitor to Auburn this morning.

—W. H. Leas and C. M. Phillips Waterloo attorneys were in court today.

—W. E. Reinoehl was in town today He is doing extra work for the different offices now.

—G. W. Bleeks of St Joe was in court today on matters connected with the estate of his father.

—We now have the largest and most up-to-date stock of Jewelery ever shown in Auburn.—D. A. HODGE Jeweler.

—J. L. Ferguson called on the COURIER Saturday. He has just secured some fine photos of his lovely farm home,

—G. H. Yesbera's store has the appearance of a beehive. People seem to appreciate his fine display of holiday goods.

—A Pittsburg girl is in Paris, and at a skating club last week, everybody went wild over her skill and grace in the sport.

—The Boer war has sent diamonds "out of sight" but we will not bore you by asking the new price when we can sell as low as ever—D. A. HODGE.

—Capt. D. B. Kehler has been appointed commander of the state soldiers' home at Lafayette, to serve until a successor to Gen. Packard is elected by the board of trustees.

—Dr. A. S. Farrington was down from Waterloo today. The will of his brother, the late Wellington Farrington was probated today. He leaves his property to his widow during her life.

—Dr. A. J. Shutt was here Saturday and we notice he has paid, into 1901, the subscription for his daughter, Mrs. Furnish and his son, Boudder who is now at Woodburn in Allen county.

—Books for boys, at Davenport's. d22

—Men's hats at 50 cents, 75 cents, $1, $1.25, and up to $325. You couldn't buy him anything better than a hat. Our line is complete,—G. H. YESBERA, Auburn.

—At Royal Oak, Mich., a preacher who had learned boxing at college, put on the gloves in a contest with a saloon keeper, getting the better of his opponent. Now, his congregation are mad at him.

—Are you in trouble? Don,t you know what to buy him for Christmas? Gaze on our stock of rings, studs, stick pins, watch chains and other things to numerous to mention and worry no more.—D. A. HODGE Jeweler.

—James Smith, in jail for attempting to dynamite Judge Powers at Salt Lake committed suicide last week. He confessed his name was Louis James, a cousin of Jesse James, and that he had worked with the gang several years.

—The Indiana museum authorities are mourning the loss of a rare old wooden plow that disappeared from apartments in the state house devoted to museum purposes. The plow was constructed before the year 1819 and used to make the first road in the state.

—"Man is easy to please" if you buy him a useful present. Anyone of the following will please him. Fancy suspenders, muffler, gloves, unbrellas, valise, cap, mackintosh, necktie, hat, underwear, fancy or white shirt. We have them all.—G. H. YESBERA, Auburn.

—The creamery craze, which was started several years ago for the benefit of a few manufacturers of butter-making machinery, has about run its course, and today there are but few plants in operation. Thousands of dollars were sunk by farmers and others who invested in the business, but of course the machinery men came out with big profits.

—An elegant thing for the dining table, that wave crest fern dish, at Davenport's. d22

Tuesday's Daily.

—Get your Christmas gifts ready.

—St. Louis Irishmen are trying to raise a million to help the Boers. Better keep out of the quarrel.

—Boyer Bros of Kendallville shipped 10,000 pounds of dressed turkeys to New York yesterday by express.

—Imitation is sincerest flattery, don't be persuaded to take any of the many imitations of Rust' Bleaching Blue.

—We would like to have every lady in DeKalb county visit our store during the next ten days.—G. H. YESBERA Auburn.

—The COURIER is pleased to note several new names on its subscription books both Daily and Weekly. A good holiday present.

—Our high priced "stuff" has just arrived, look it over early and make your selections while there is plenty to select from.—D. A. HODGE, Jeweler.

—The national base ball league for 1900 will contain only eight clubs. Those dropped will be Baltimore, Cleveland, Washington and Louisville.

—We now have plenty of diamonds ranging from ¼ to ¾ carats and at unusually low prices considering the advance. D. A. HODGE, Jewler.

—Chapped hands, cracked lips and roughness of the skin cured quickly by Banner Salve, the most healing ointment in the world. 25c. H. B. McCord.

—Mrs. John Treesh came home today, bringing word that her daughter at Garrett is very much better. She had something like a sinking chill.

—Thomas R. Marshall of Columbia City announces that he will not be a candidate for re-election as chairman of the Twelfth district democratic committee.

—The person who disturbed the congregation last Sunday by coughing, is requested to call on H. B. McCord and get a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar, which always gives relief.

—Rabbi Hirsch of Chicago says Christmas is greatly dreaded by Jews in Europe, as on that occasion ignorant and bigoted people in many countries persecute them more than any other time.

—Mr. Ford has another letter from his wife. She is still improving. They have removed the stitches from the wound, which is now healed. We have not learned when she expects to come home.

—Rev. Father Matthew Campion, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Catholic church at Logansport, died suddenly of heart disease yesterday morning, aged 55 years. He was ordained in 1868 and was one of the best known clergymen in the Fort Wayne diocese.

—Hereafter when using revenue stamps of the amount of ten cents or over, besides cancelling the same in the customary way, by writing the date and initials, the user must cut incisions in each stamp the long way extending to within a quarter of an inch of each end.

—In the appointment of committees in the national house of representives Indiana was given but one chairmanship, that of manufactures. Congressman Faris of the Fifth district was the lucky man. Illinois leads with eight chairmanships; Ohio has seven; New York six and Iowa five.

—Lots of people will remember the two old plows in the agricultural rooms in the state house at Indianapolis. It is one of them we referred to a day or so ago, as having been stolen. It must have been stolen by some tramp starting out to work the rural districts, carrying his plow with him, looking for a winter job.

—Charles Eckhart is back from Chicago, where he was attending the National Prohibition convention, he being the member for Indiana. He says they had a grand meeting, and he was particularly pleased with the sort of men who gathered there. They included many leading manufacturers, such as Birdsells and Studebakers.

—The Chicago Tribune the other day printed two significant pictures under the heading, "The Return of the Horse." The first was a reproduction of a photograph taken in one of the Chicago parks a year ago, showing only hundreds of men, women and children on bicycles. The second, taken at the same spot during the balmy days of last November, showed a similar collection of persons on horses and not a bicycle to be seen.

—A big parade in this city next Monday, and you cant afford to miss it, as it will announce the coming of the "Seth Haskins" Co., at Henry's opera house, afternoon and night, December 25. Mr. Hodgkins, the author, assumes the leading role and is ably assisted by Grace Leith as "Melinda" and a company of unusual merit. Harry MaLack, the great drum major, will lead the parade and will give an exhibition of trick baton juggling, Remember that you must see the parade or you will miss half your life.

The Bazar Store,

J. J. Nebelung, Auburn, Indiana.

Wednesday's Daily.

—All orders for books not in stock should be in by Tuesday.—DAVENPORT, Druggist.

—A good story bears repeating. Use Rues Bleaching Blue, don't be deceived by fraudulent imitations.

—Mrs. Orpha Hayden is at Hudson, Mich., at the bedside of her daughter, who is quite ill of appendicitis.

—Mrs. TenEyck goes to Prattville, Mich., Saturday noon to visit her people, who are there for the winter.

—Mrs. Trover has returned from her visit with her daughter, Mrs. Robinson, at Monroeville, in Allen county.

—Miss Maud Trover is home from Chicago, where she went to attend the wedding of a friend, and also to assist in some musical entertainments.

—The cases in which Will F. Kessler is interested, involving the patents upon electric cigar lighters, will be argued in the United States court at Indianapolis this week.

—Milo Thomas, the Corunna hustler in hardware, was here yesterday, paying up his paper into 1900. We have also to thank him and Frank Benchal for the subscription of the latter.

—Special low prices to Sunday school classes and teachers on holiday goods—DAVENPORT, Druggist. d22

A note from C. P. Houser, says they are well at Indianapolis, and send Christmas greetings to all their Auburn friends.

—If you buy a gentleman a Christmas or New Year's present we want to show you just what he will like, and the price will be very reasonable.—G. H. YESBERA, Auburn.

—James Reed is moving to Fort Wayne where he has employment with the city railway. He packs and sends his goods today, and goes tomorrow. We hope he may be prosperous.

—Mr. and Mrs. R. Shull expect to move soon into one of Mr. Grogg's new houses on north Jackson. These are very desirable residences, as they are new, and will be supplied with city water and sewer advantages.

—Miss Mollie George, who has been in poor health for some time, is at Fort Wayne and is to have an operation as the trouble is caused by a tumor. Dr. Nusbaum went down there today, and will assist Dr. Myers, in the operation.

—Christmas is almost upon us. We offer you good, sensible and appropriate goods for your Christmas and New Year's presents. Our store is full of up-to-date goods.—G. H. YESBERA, Auburn.

—Uncle Seth Haskins," which comes to Henry's opera house Christmas day for two performances, contains all the elements calculated to win public favor, and it certainly has been mounted with every care as to detail. The most striking feature is the explosion and the sawmill scene in the second and third acts.

LET US ALL LAUGH.

JOKES FROM THE PENS OF VARIOUS HUMORISTS.

Pleasant Incidents Occurring the World Over—Sayings that Are Cheerful to Old or Young—Funny Selections that You Will Enjoy.

As they bent solicitously over him, the man who had been kicked by a horse opened his eyes. "Have you any last wish?" they asked him.

"Yes," he murmured. "Have an automobile hearse at the funeral."

Revenge, it seemed, was strong even in death.—New York Press.

Her Specialty.

The Prompter—So your wife has gone into vaudeville?

The Comedian—Yes.

The Prompter—What line of work?

The Comedian—Oh, curtain lectures, I suppose.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Too Numerous.

Young Wife (poutingly)—You haven't given me anything since we've been married.

Young Husband (facetiously)—Why, I'm always giving you kisses, darling.

Young Wife—Oh, those don't count.

Young Husband—No, they're countless.

Origin.

"'It is a woman's lot to suffer in silence!' I wonder what is the origin of that sentiment?"

"Perhaps it's a corruption of the truth that a silent woman suffers a lot."—Detroit Journal.

What Shall the Poor Girl Do?

"Oh, Minna, I'm in despair! Arthur promises if I marry him he'll give up his life of dissipation, and Franz threatens if I don't marry him he'll begin a life of dissipation. Now what shall I do?"—Lustige Blaetter.

Matrimonial Repartee.

"You are your own worst enemy," she said.

"Why do you keep reminding me of the fact that I deliberately asked you to marry me?" he returned.—Chicago Evening Post.

Tried the Experiment.

"My! hasn't that woman a sour looking face?"

"Yes. She must have heard that lemon juice was good for the complexion."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

No Skin Game.

"What do you think," said the Arctic fox, "about this boundary brush?"

"Oh," answered the marten, "it's just as well to be fur-bearing."—New York Press.

Safe.

"Disgraceful! I should think society would turn him down."

"No danger of that. He's one of the 'high lights.'"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Financial Estrangement.

"What cold glances Wiggins gives you, Billy."

"Yes; he owes me $5 and I owe him $4. He's mad because I don't pay him."—Indianapolis Journal.

Not to Be Trifled With.

"Whatcher gwine do wid dat razzor?"

"I'm lookin' foh dat drug sto' man. Ast him foh a box o' face powder, an' he dun sol' me lampblack."

Arms.

"I wonder why these emblems are called arms?"

"Well, you know, a family with arms have a good deal that would otherwise be quite beyond their reach."—Detroit Journal.

He Was the Favorite.

Tom—So you became engaged to Miss Willing while tandem riding, did you?

Jack—Well, not exactly. We were climbing a hill when I proposed and I won in a walk—see?

No Basis of Agreement.

"Your church, I am informed," said the man who was in search of information, "takes care of its preachers when they become too old for active service?"

"It does," replied the man who had the information to give out.

"At what age is it usually considered they ought to go on the retired list?"

"It is hard to tell. There is frequently a difference of thirty years between the estimate of the congregation and that of the preacher."—Chicago Journal.

Rather Indefinite.

"I think," remarked the front-row patron of burlesque shows, as he climbed into the barber chair, "that I'll have a hair cut."

"Yes, sir," answered the tonsorial artist. "Which one, please?"—Chicago News.

The Logic of It.

Old Lady—Why do you have such a dirty, grimy face?

Hobo—I s'pose, lady, it comes from travelin' on me cheek.—Philadelphia Record.

Considerate.

"What a lovely waste basket the editor has."

"Yes, he's so kind hearted he means the poet's lines shall fall in pleasant places."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

This Preposterous Age.

"Why did the beautiful Miss Punk have two wedding ceremonies?"

"The biograph man was late, so they had to go through the service again."—Chicago Record.

With the Heel Toward the Door.

Rev. Fiddle, D. D.—May I leave a few tracts?

Farmer—Certainly! Here, Towser!

Comparing Notes.

Mrs. Jones—My husband is the light of my life.

Mrs. Smith—So is mine. One of the kind that smokes and goes out nights.

An Important Distinction.

"I lost my purse this afternoon."

"Gracious, Julia, were you going shopping or coming back?"—Chicago Record.

How He Avoided It.

Hoax—I never can bear to see a woman stand in the street car.

Joax—Same here. I always buy a paper.

Modern Improvements.

Irate Tenant—It's colder than all get out in our apartments this morning. Why isn't the heat turned on?

Janitor—It's turned on in the rooms I occupy and just as soon as they get warm I'll turn it on in the rest of the building.

Feminine Economy.

Husband—What's this? Another $25 milliner's bill? I thought we had decided to be more economical.

Wife—Well, didn't I spend two days looking for your new winter suit, and didn't I finally get one for $6.98 that they wanted $7 for?

In Her Line.

Wife—I found a place to-day where I can get a $12 wrap for $7.98.

Husband—Very well. To-morrow go out and find a place where I can get the $7.98.

Amazement.

Countrywoman (at the dress parade)—My! my! What a wonderful thing discipline is; a whole regiment assembled, and each man holds his tongue!—Meggendorfer's Humoristische Blaetter.

Wanted It from the Start.

Little Willie—Say, pa, was the earth created before man?

Pa—Yes, my son.

Little Willie—Why was it?

Pa—It was probably known that it would be the first thing he'd want when he arrived.

Why He Took His Departure.

Cholly—I never shall marry a strong-minded woman, never.

Minerva—No, of course, you won't. The woman you marry will be weak-minded, I am sure.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A Reward in Sight.

"What makes you so devoted to golf, Mr. Poddington?"

"Well, you see, somebody always gives a dinner after the game."—Indianapolis Journal.

"And Thrift Is Blessing."

The Pedestrian—You keep a horse! Why, I had no idea you were so thrifty.

"Oh, yes. I deposit regularly in the savings bank all the money I borrow from my friends."—Life.

The Tip that Failed.

"Haven't you forgotten something, sir?" asked the waiter, who expected a tip.

"Very likely," replied the feeder. "You kept me waiting so long that I've forgotten who I am."—Philadelphia North American.

The Reason for It.

He had come into the office to secure a game license. Before making application he did considerable blowing about what luck he had always had and how much greater it was to be this season. Briefly, he made the clerk tired.

He was asked the usual questions when he applied for the license.

"What's your name?"

"How old are you?"

"What's your mother's maiden name?"

"What's your father's name?"

"Where do you live?"

"Say, look here," said the hunter bold, "what's all this nonsense for, anyway? What difference does it make where I live and all that?"

"Just to assist the coroner in disposing of the remains when you are returned," replied the clerk without looking up.

And three or four in the room, with great unkindness, laughed harshly.—Detroit Free Press.

Antiquity of Windmills.

Windmills, though only now becoming popular for pumping water, were known in Europe so far back as 1105.

ON THE ROOFS OF EUROPE.

Santa Claus (to himself)—Great Scot! How am I ever going to get down these chimneys? Oh, that the Czar's disarmament congress had borne fruit!

WHEN DADDY LIGHTS THE TREE.

We have our share of ups and downs,
Of cares like other folk;
The pocketbook is sometimes full,
We're sometimes pigh dead broke;
But once a year, at Christmas time,
Our hearth is bright to see;
The baby's hand just touches heaven
When Daddy lights the tree.

For weeks and weeks the little ones
Have lotted on this hour;
And mother, she has planned for it
Since the summer's sun and shower.
With here a nickel, there a dime,
Put by where none could see,
A loving hoard against the night
When Daddy lights the tree.

The tiny tapers glow like stars;
They mind us of the flame
That rifted once the steel-blue sky
The morn the Christ-child came;
The blessed angels sang to earth
Above that far countree—
We think they sing above our hearth
When Daddy lights the tree.

The weest kid in mother's arms
Laughs out and claps her hands,
The rest of us on tiptoe wait;
The grown-up brother stands
Where he can reach the topmost branch,
Our Santa Claus to be,
In that sweet hour of breathless joy
When Daddy lights the tree.

Our grandpa says 'twas just as fine
In days when he was young;
For every Christmas ages through
The happy bells have rung.
And Daddy's head is growing gray,
But yet a boy is he,
As merry as the rest of us
When Daddy lights the tree.

'Tis love that makes the world go round,
'Tis love that lightens toil,
'Tis love that lays up treasure which
Nor moth nor rust can spoil;
And Love is in our humble home,
In largesse full and free,
We all are very close to heaven
When Daddy lights the tree.

The Christmas Guest

It is Christmas eve—the night is cold and clear. The moonbeams dance fantastically upon the frozen snow—near the foot of the hill adjacent to the town of Macroom, in the county Cork, stands an old-fashioned cottage toward which an aged white-haired man is wending his way—at short intervals he stops suddenly, gazing over the hedge side, where the moon is shining through the leafless snow-covered trees—advancing a few paces he stops once more before a ruined tower, fast crumbling to decay.

"God bless the dear old landmarks," he murmured, "many and many a time have I stood beside you in my dreams when the great ocean rolled between us—at last, like the load-stone that attracts the needle, you have brought the wanderer back. Oh, sweet Inisfail, the smallest blade of grass that grows in your green dells is a million times more precious to me than all the wealth and grandeur I have seen on foreign shores."

Having reached the cottage, he was met at the door by a tall, well-built, venerable looking man.

"Can you give me shelter for a short time?" asked the stranger.

"I can, or for a long time, if you need it—though not very long, now I come to remember, for in a few weeks I won't be able to call this house my own. Isn't that the truth, Mary?" he added, looking at his wife, busily plying her needle near a bright turf fire.

"It is indeed—the bitter truth—may God in his mercy protect us," said his wife.

"And how long have you lived in this cosy cottage?" asked the stranger.

"Fifty years, sir. My father built it. I married the good wife you see beside me in it. I reared a big family in it, but they're scattered far away from us now. Some of them, I'm afreerd, I'll never see again. Our oldest boy I've not heard from in ten years. He was sent into penal servitude for the part he took in the 'rising' of '67."

"What was his name?"

"Redmond O'Hara. But in troth if I go on in this way I'll be disgracing the proud owld name of our family. Here, take a whiff o' this owld dhudeen; 'twill help to banish sad thoughts."

"Before I light my pipe," said the stranger, "I wish you would tell me why it is that you will be compelled to leave this cottage in a few weeks?"

"The answer is simple," replied his host. "I am only a small farmer, and cannot afford to pay Lord Leech the heavy taxes that are yearly imposed on my own time and money without a hap'orth of help from his lordship. That's the whole of it in a nutshell."

"And so you are to be evicted?"

"That's it exactly," replied the host.

"Not if I can save you," said the stranger.

"Saltpeter couldn't save us."

"There is something more potent than saltpeter."

"Maybe ye mane dynamite," said his host.

"What I have reference to is more powerful than even dynamite," replied the traveler, "although it is not so noisy. What I allude to is the power of gold!"

During the foregoing the farmer's wife had prepared a supper which the traveler seemed to relish with a zest that betokened a keen appetite. Having finished his meal he relit his pipe, drew his chair near the fire and became more communicative.

"You seem to be a conversable man," said the host, "and I'm proud of your company; if you like to sleep under this roof to-night you are heartily welkim, and we'll spend a pleasant Christmas day together."

"You are too kind, sir," said the stranger. "But I accept the invitation."

"Of course," said the farmer, "you'll have to take pot luck with us; he have no dainties to offer you, but there was a time when a prince couldn't find fault with our table on Christmas day, when we could spread before you turkey, geese, ham, lamb and almost every delicacy under the blessed sun, but them times have passed away like the snow."

"God bless you and your good wife, sir, for the cordial welcome you have given to the poor stranger. It reminds me of the gay old times when I was a happy boy under the roof-tree of my parents, when we loved to pass the Christmas eve by the cheerful fireside, singing the old songs of our persecuted land, and listening to the ghost stories and the fairy tales until the hour arrived to attend the midnight mass. In an evil hour I was caught with my pike while attending a moonlight drill in the mountain gap. A mock trial took place, and a packed jury found me guilty of high treason. I was loaded with chains and hurried off in a convict ship to Western Australia. I escaped, and after many perils I was received with open arms in the land of the Stars and Stripes by my expatriated countrymen. I soon amassed great wealth. You would scarcely imagine me, as I appear at present in these tattered garments, to be a rich man, but, to prove the truth of my assertion, here is a bag containing a thousand sovereigns. Take it. Keep it. It is yours. I present it to you as a Christmas box."

"A bag o' sovereigns," cried the farmer. "Oh, sir, you must be one o' the good fairies in disguise."

"If this happened in America," said the stranger, "you would undoubtedly call me Santa Claus."

"Whoever you are," cried the farmer's wife, "you must be something not natural to be tantalizing poor people with the sight of a heap o' gold like that."

"I give you my word I am neither ghost nor hobgoblin, but real flesh and blood," said the stranger, throwing off his white wig and beard and standing erect at his full height. "Now examine my features well and tell me if they bear any resemblance to Redmond O'Hara, your convict son!"

"Oh! Redmond! our own gra bawn!" exclaimed his father and mother simultaneously. "Yes, it is," said the mother, caressing him, "he has the same auburn hair." "And the same proud light in his manly blue eyes," cried his father, grasping his son's hands. "Oh, Redmond, Redmond, this sudden joy is almost more than we can bear."

"Now, spare me this hugging and kissing and hand-shaking," cried their son, "if you don't wish to kill me with too much kindness. You can both snap your fingers at Lord Leech to-morrow. We'll have our own home, our own land and our own cattle as well as his lordship. And to-morrow we'll fill the table with turkey, geese, lamb, ham and every luxury in season and out of season that money can purchase. In short, my dear father and mother, it won't be your own Redmond's fault if you don't say it is the merriest Christmas day you ever enjoyed."

First Celebration of Christmas.

Christmas was first celebrated in the year 98, but it was forty years later before it was officially adopted as a Christian festival; nor was it until about the Fifth century that the day of its celebration because permanently fixed on the 25th of December. Up to that time it had been irregularly observed at various times of the year—in December, in April and in May, but most frequently in January.—Ladies' Home Journal.

The Christmas Stocking.

There is a German story about the origin of a Christmas stocking. It tells how a poor woman with bleeding feet came to the hut of a little peasant boy and begged for aid. He took off his shoes and gave them to her; he had no stockings. In the morning he found the shoes filled with thalers tied to the door latch. Some say the little old woman was a fairy, others of more serious mind claim that she was the Virgin Mary; whoever she was, she wrote on parchment: "Du liebes kind," and this is still kept as a relic in a small church in Bavaria.

Ingredients—Three pounds raisins, three pounds currants, one pound mixed peel, one and one-half pounds bread crumbs, one and one-half pounds suet, sixteen eggs, two wineglassfuls brandy, one nutmeg, one teaspoonful salt, one-fourth pound almonds, chopped fine.

Stone and cut the raisins in halves, but do not chop them; wash, pick and dry the currants, and mince the suet finely; cut the candied peel into thin fine crumbs. When all these dry ingredients are prepared, mix them well together; then moisten the mixture with the eggs, which should be well beaten, and the brandy; grate in the nutmeg. Stir well, that everything may be well blended, and thoroughly press the pudding into a buttered mold, tie it down tightly with a well-floured cloth and boil for five or six hours. It may be boiled in a cloth without a mould and will require the same time allowed for cooking. Christmas puddings should be made at least six days before they are required for the table. When a pudding is taken out of the pot hang it up immediately and put a plate or saucer underneath to catch the water that may drain from it. The day it is to be eaten plunge it into boiling water and keep it boiling for at least two hours, then turn it out of the mould and serve with brandy sauce. On Christmas day place a sprig of holly in the middle of the pudding and pour about two wineglassfuls of brandy around it. Light this at the moment of serving.

This amount will serve fourteen or sixteen people. Halve recipe for smaller number. Five or six of these puddings should be made at one time, as they will keep for many weeks, and are suitable for festive occasions until March.

INFLUENCE OF SANTA CLAUS.

The Good Which the Holiday Myth Does Children.

It is not well to altogether overthrow the Santa Claus myth, for an immense moral influence dwells in it. The belief, which is very general among children, that his favor depends upon their good behavior, has an unequaled soothing power over rebellious dispositions. If they believe that the wise saint has his own recording angels, is there any harm in the quaint superstition? We ourselves subscribe to sillier ideas. Could we penetrate the symbolism of some childish fancies there might often come to the light grains of wisdom remnant from the religions of the ancient world.

The question we are now asking, how to make a merry Christmas? is not to be solved in an instant. Every family must consider it from its own standpoint. Happiness is not, even at this season, to be put in a great sack labeled "candy and toys." We should study our children and find out what particular thing they are counting upon. Especially where Christmas is the great gift-making epoch of the year, and the children look to it for their annual store of games and toys. But only half our duty toward them will be done if we have not taught them the pleasure of making gifts to others. I say taught advisedly, for the moral nature of a child is not conferred upon him at birth; it exists then only in the germ, and it has to be cultivated just as his faculty for intellectual work has to be cultivated. But the great difference between moral and intellectual training is, that whereas in the last one may attack the understanding and lead on to desire, in the first all our approaches must be made to the heart. No restraint upon conduct is of any account unless we succeed in getting the child to want to be good. He will then try to be good under all circumstances, when he is away from us as well as when he is in our sight.—Harper's Bazar.

A FEW GIFT SUGGESTIONS.

Clever Fingers Can Devise Some Very Attractive Presents.

Hat boxes, padded and perfumed and covered with flowered cretonne, or painted silk, are made by the beauty-loving maiden for her airy theater bonnets, her plumed hat and other perishable headgear.

An odd penwiper has a cover of ooze leather, with a picture of a preternaturally wise looking owl writing a letter as the pokerwork design. The leather is cut to silhouette the head and tail feathers of the bird, giving an amusing and grotesque effect.

Toys for men are not uncommon this season. Cigars and cigarettes packed in such perfect imitation of real cigar and cigarette boxes as to deceive even an inveterate smoker are made of chocolate or peppermint. Big, business-looking pens, pencils and paperweights are made of sugar-paste and paper, and the most artful of spectacles, opera glasses and cases are made of isinglass, tinsel and candy-filled wood.

A medicine case of coarse brown linen is bordered with a puffing of pink silk ribbon. The vials are held in place by a band of garter elastic covered with puffed silk and divided into spaces large or small enough to accommodate the bottles. One end of the linen case turns in and is tucked to form two pockets that are to contain court plaster, a tiny scissors, antiseptic cotton and a roll of soft linen. The little bottles are labeled with familiar names ammonia, arnica, quinine, ginger, camphor and other household standbys.

Thoughts of Christmas.

We want good things for Christmas—thes all 'at we kin get Drums, an' dolls, an' trumpets, an' a toy china set;
An' jumpin'-jacks, an' packs an' packs of firecrackers, too,
An' elephants, an' lions that never growl
at you.

We want good things for Christmas—thes
all the house kin hold!
An' we hopes it will be snowin', an' the weather freezin' cold.
(Snow's mighty fine at Christmas time—
an' so is everything;
So we're waitin'—thes a-waitin' for the Christmas bells to ring!)

The Christmas Girl.

The snow has drifted to her brow,
The holly bud has dyed her cheek,
Her eyes, like stars on Christmas eve,
Shine out with glances coyly meek.
There's Christmas radiance everywhere
In wreaths of green and berries red;
But, best of all, I gladly note
There's mistletoe above her head.

Sensible Jimmie.

"Jimmie," asked his mother, "why are you so persistent about going to your Uncle John's for Christmas?"

"'Cause he hain't got none of them smoke consumers on his chimbleys. Santa Claus kin git inter his house."

Easily Pleased.

"Well, little Jim, what do you want for Christmas?"

"I'll take anything I kin get, pa, but you better not gimme anything I don't like."

NEW WAY OF STOPPING TRAINS.

Their Steam Is Cut Off When Danger of Disaster Is Ahead.

Judge Albion W. Tourgee, who is now consul at Bordeaux, France, writes to the state department of a recent improvement upon the "block system" on railroads designed by a French inventor, which, it is claimed, will greatly lessen the danger of collisions on railways. "The fact that the United States is the most profitable field for the exploitation of useful inventions," writes the judge, "has taken a firm hold upon the inventive minds of other countries, and the first thing a man does who has a novel idea of any sort is to seek to have it patented in the United States. That this is especially true of inventions pertaining to railway appliances is only natural when one contemplates the fact that the United States, with its 183,000 miles of railway track, has six times the mileage of any other country in the world.

"French inventions are usually defective in the mechanical character of the means by which the end sought to be effected is attained. This is, no doubt, due to the fact that so small a proportion of the population have any practical mechanical knowledge. Almost every man in the United States knows the use of tools. Very many who have no manual occupation are fairly skilled workers, and those who have inventive tendencies are not ashamed to devote their leisure time to the acquirement of technical skill necessary to prepare their working models and perfect their inventions. In France, on the contrary, such knowledge is considered derogatory to anyone in the higher walks of life. A clerk will not close a shutter nor dust off the top of the desk at which he works, since that is the business of an 'ouvrier,' nor will a man who moves in good society permit himself to be seen carrying a package of any sort along the street.

"One result of this exclusive use of tools by laborers is that French invention usually has, to an American, a certain sense of awkwardness in its mechanical application. The idea may be a good one, but there is very seldom any of the handiness which one finds in an American invention. In the many cases of application for American patents which come before me, I am almost always struck by this lack of directness of application, which leaves them open to competition, thus destroying the value of the invention by improvement of application of a principle.

"This does not apply to an invention by Pierre Paul Guibert of Millau, department of Aveyron, France, intended to prevent railway collisions. It is, in effect, a simple and natural application of the 'block system'; but, instead of merely displaying a signal at each end of a section of track showing that the same is occupied, Mr. Guibert's system acts also on the engines of the approaching locomotives, and, by cutting off steam automatically, brings the train to a standstill.

"As a preventive of head-on collisions this invention would seem a positive improvement on the block system, though it is quite possible that the increased cost of installation may prevent its general adoption. I send inclosed a set of drawings and a copy of the specifications for his patent, which Mr. Guibert was kind enough to send me. Whether his system is of practical importance or not, it serves to show how the United States is regarded by the inventors of Europe, who make haste to secure protection under our law, so as to take advantage of the wonderful market it opens to really meritorious devices."

BREAD FOR HORSE FOOD.

Liverymen in New York Find It Economical and Nourishing.

A delivery wagon of one of the big breadbaking factories of Yorkville stopped in front of an uptown livery and boarding stable yesterday morning and two men at once unloaded barrels of bread and carried them into the stable. The bread looked good and was good. There were all sorts and sizes of loaves in the barrels—"home-made," "rye," "Vienna," "potato," "graham" and "cottage."

The curiosity of a man who saw the bread being delivered to the stable was aroused and he ventured to ask the proprietor of the stable what it meant.

"There's nothing remarkable about it," said the proprietor, with a laugh. "I simply buy it for horse feed. We grind the bread up and mix it with other feed and it makes first-class food for horses. It is stale bread and costs us 40 cents a barrel and there are fifty or sixty loaves to the barrel, so you see it comes pretty cheap. Some of the bread is only a day old and is good enough for any man to eat, but the bread factories cannot sell it. What you see here are returned loaves from the groceries.—New York Press.

God Needs the Help of Mothers.

"The grave mistake of repressing children," writes Barbetta Brown in the Ladies' Home Journal, "is caused by the mother's failure to be keen enough to see where she may touch a child's life and where she may not; where it is for her to guide, to help, to encourage, and where the child-life is sacred to itself alone. That the child is another individual never occurs to some mothers, nor that he has his own possibilities for growth, not to be tampered with; his own privacies, not to be invaded; his own 'holy of holies,' to be held holy. The Power that is working in the vast life of this universe is working in your son or daughter as part of it; and it has its own purpose in regard to each child life as surely as for each planet in its orbit. God needs much help from mothers, but God does not intend to be effaced by mothers. Cooperate, then, with the Power working through your children, mothers. Do not make the great mistake of attempting to compete with it."

The Oldest Steam Engine.

The oldest steam engine in the world has recently gone off duty after working more than 120 years. It was built in 1777. It is a beam engine, the beam being of wood; the cylinder 32 inches in diameter, with an 8-ft. stroke. This veteran engine has been in the service of the Birmingham Canal Navigation Company.

My Mother Had Consumption

"My mother was troubled with consumption for many years. At last she was given up to die. A neighbor told her not to give up but try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. She did so and was speedily cured, and is now in the enjoyment of good health." D. P. Jolly, Feb. 2, 1899. Avoca, N. Y.

Cures Hard Coughs

No matter how hard your cough is or how long you have had it, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best thing you could possibly take. But it's too risky to wait until you have consumption, for sometimes it's impossible to cure this disease. If you are coughing today, don't wait until tomorrow, but get a bottle of Cherry Pectoral at once and be relieved. It strengthens weak lungs.

Buried Alive.

One of those extraordinary cases that police work in India occasionally brings to light came to notice recently almost accidentally, in a district of the Northwest Provinces. Two Constables, Nobbat Singh and Rup Ram, while patrolling on their beat, overheard in conversation that a mall named Durba had murdered his wife. They took the man to the police station at once, and he there stated before the officer in charge that his wife had been suffering from leprosy; that latterly the complaint had become worse, and that the woman had desired to be buried alive in order that her children should not inherit the disease. In compliance with her importunities he and his son dug a hole outside the village and buried the woman alive in it, four neighbors assisting them in covering the unhappy creature. The six accused have been arrested and have confessed to the deed before a Magistrate. There seems to be no doubt about the truth of the story, that the woman sacrificed herself for the sake of her children, and that her husband and those who had helped him acted in good faith. The superstition, however, that the self-immolation of a leper is a protection against the transmission of the taint would appear to be a very rare one.

A HEALTH BOOM.

A Wave of Prosperity and Physical Well-Being Floods the Whole Country.

Enthusiastic Statements from American Citizens Everywhere Who Are Anxious to Inform the World How Well They Feel.

The great secret of gaining health and keeping it after it has been attained has been discovered and the news has swept across the whole United States, causing a perfect boom of health. The secret interests not only those who are ill, but those who are well, for to maintain health illness must be prevented. Educate your bowels, keep your liver lively, and purify your system and blood with an antiseptic disinfectant! That's all there is to it, but the means of accomplishing it never were known until the discovery of Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the ideal modern scientific laxative. Hear what a few of the happy ones have to say:

"I am a user of Cascarets and think there is nothing like them." Mrs. Lottie Pfeiffer, Arlington, Neb.

"I have used Cascarets in my family and there is nothing like them. I recommend them to everyone." W. J. Bergum, Humboldt, S. D.

"We have been using Cascarets in our family since last spring and cannot do without them." Mrs. J. C. Jamieson, Poynette, Wis.

"I use Cascarets and could not get along without them. My husband uses and recommends them in his practice." Mrs. Dr. Nyce, 58 Ontario St., Cohoes, N. Y.

"I take pleasure in recommending Cascarets. They are the most wonderful medical preparation I ever used. Cascarets work like magic, and never fail." John S. Rice, 21 Seymour St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"I am a firm believer in Cascarets. They are the best cathartic I ever used." Tom Holt, Wellwood, Manitoba.

"I do not think there is anything better for constipation than Cascarets. I recommend them to all my friends." Minnie F. McCumb, Mianus, Conn.

"I take pleasure in letting you know what good your Cascarets have done for me. I suffered with constipation, pain in the stomach and dizziness for two years and tried most all kinds of medicines. A friend advised me to try Cascarets. So I bought a 10c box, and after using them I felt great relief, and am now entirely well." S. Gould, 327 Durfor St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"FACES IN THE STREET."

They lie, the men who tell us in a loud, decisive tone
That want is here a stranger, and that misery's unknown;
For where the nearest suburb and the city proper meet
My windowsill is level with the faces in the street—
Drifting past, drifting past,
To the beat of weary feet—
While I sorrow for the owners of those faces in the street.

And cause I have to sorrow, in a land so young and fair,
To see upon these faces stamped the look of Want and Care;
I look in vain for traces of the fresh and fair and sweet
In sallow, sunken faces that are drifting through the street—
Drifting on, drifting on,
To the scrape of restless feet;
I can sorrow for the owners of the faces in the street.

HER LITTLE BROTHER.

MY daughter—my eldest daughter—visited the Massachusetts coast last summer. Upon her return we were not in all respects satisfied that her summer trip had been a success. This was a distinct disappointment, since the expense had made quite a dent in my bank account, and I had hoped that a certain listlessness with which she had been affected would quite disappear.

I had expected that she would at least catch golf before her return, since it was known to be epidemic all along the coast.

It took, in both arms; and when she returned we hoped that she would pass regularly through the stages and acquire the art and language. But there was something wrong. She was willing to play the game, but did not care about it with the right enthusiasm. I did my best to draw her out.

"I understand," I would say, "that golf is very engrossing."

"Yes, very."

"I suppose you can hole out a brassy with the best of them?"

"I—er— That is— Now, father, you are not interested!"

"But really I am," I would go on eagerly; "I am, indeed. Only, of course, I'm not thoroughly up in the game. I'd like to learn, immensely. I think I'll join a golf links, and buy a caddie."

"But the caddie is the boy who carries the clubs," she said wearily.

"He does, eh? Well, then, I'll join the clubs, and buy him a putty."

"Now you're only joking," she said. "It isn't a putty, but a putter. And you join a club, and— But what is the use?" And then she would walk away and sigh.

Here was a golf-player who wouldn't talk about golf! It was most alarming.

There was only one encouraging symptom, and he was a young doctor who used to call—well, quite often. She had met him on the links, so we gathered, and certainly the two talked about golf whenever they met—so far as we knew.

It wasn't long before my daughter came to me for the initiation fee to join a golf club to which young Dr. Simmons belonged. I gave her the money with eager joy, and at the first opportunity I thanked the doctor for his kind interest in my daughter.

"You are a shrewd young man," I said, "and you ought to rise in your profession. You have seen how anxious we have been to interest Gwendolin in golf, and you have seconded our efforts ably. I appreciate your disinterestedness and shall not forget it."

He seemed confused, and murmured something about "his own pleasure," but I smiled courteously and cut him short.

My son Bobby was at first scornfully superior to the attractions of the new game. He used to cough in a highly artificial way when Dr. Simmons and Gwendolen were exchanging views about bogie, and putters, and bunkers, and lofters, and would try to engage me in a vigorous discussion as to the charms of jackstones, old maid, muggins, and other trivial games. So far as golf was concerned he seemed an immune.

Therefore we were all much surprised one evening at dinner to hear him interrupt Dr. Simmons, who was delivering an enthusiastic eulogy of the royal game.

"It is adapted," said the young physician, "to every age. It has all the fascination of billiards, with the added glories of the open air. It is cheap and engrossing. The simplicity of the game—to drive the ball toward its goal and to place it accurately on the green, when it is deftly propelled into the hole—alone makes it simple for the child and a game of skill for the adept. Why, one thinks of nothing else while on the links! And then, the constant exercise—"

"Exercise!" said Bobby. "There ain't any exercise in golf!"

"Excuse me," said the young doctor, "but I thought you didn't know anything about the game!"

"I didn't this morning," said Bobby. "But I know all about it now.''

"You do?" inquired Dr. Simmons with a satirical smile. "You must have made very rapid progress."

"Yes, I did," Bobby answered very coolly. "I thought it was time I found out what you two cranks were up to, and so I went over to the links this morning."

Here Gwendolen began to look uneasy.

"Bobby, dear," she said, "you mustn't talk so much at the table."

But Bobby ignored her. "Yes," he went on, "I thought I'd like to know something about the old game, and so I've been talking to your caddie."

"To Benny Jones?" asked Dr. Simmons, frowning at Bobby.

"Yes," said Bobby gleefully, "and he explained the whole game to me."

"Mother," exclaimed Gwendolen, "won't you ring for the coffee? It seems very warm in here."

I was surprised to see that both Gwendolen and Dr. Simmons seemed disinclined to pursue the subject of Bobby's rapid acquirement of golf. For my part, it seemed immensely amusing, and I endeavored to lead him on. He was only too ready.

"Come, Bobby," I said encouragingly, "let us hear Benny Jones' account of the game."

"Well," said Bobby, "here's what he said. 'There's a lot of kinds of golf,' says Benny. 'Yes,' says I. 'Yes,' says he. 'There's golf golf, and there's dude golf.' 'Oh,' says I, 'and which kind does Dr. Simmons play?' 'Oh, he plays dude golf,' says Benny."

"Father," Gwendolen exclaimed hastily, "I do hope—"

"Nonsense," I said, laughing. "Let's hear the caddie's side of it. You and the doctor have held the field long enough. Go on, Bobby."

To my surprise, Dr. Simmons and Gwendolen seemed really annoyed, but I was resolved not to mind their silly sensitiveness.

And Bobby went on:

"'What's dude golf?' I asked Benny. And Benny, he says: 'Why, you get your best girl, and you holds her hand to show her how to drive, and you holds her hand to show her how to putt, and you comes to a nice shady place, and you sits down and talks for two hours while the caddie whistles and his feet get asleep, and—'"

But I saw that I had made an awful mistake. Luckily we had finished our coffee, and at this moment my wife rose hastily, and in a moment Bobby and I were left alone.

With masterly skill I suppressed the rest of Bobby's story and turned the conversation to his last school report—which soon repressed any tendency to further conversation on his part. As soon as possible I sent Bobby to bed.

When I "joined the ladies" Dr. Simmons was gone, and Gwendolen and her mother were evidently too deeply engaged in conversation to be interrupted. I merely mentioned in passing that I had some writing to do, and betook myself to my study.

When alone I drew up a report of the occurrence and made formal application to the Association of American Humorists for a pension for Bobby as the Big Sister's Little Brother. My application was successful, and Bobby's future is provided for.

SPEAKER DAVID B. HENDERSON.

My interview next day with Dr. Simmons was also very pleasant, and I have no doubt that the young couple will be very happy—so the Big Sister's future is also assured.—Saturday Evening Post.

GENIUS FOR MECHANICS.

Blind Man Who Finds Work to Do Which Causes Seeing Men to Marvel.

James L. Judge of 2222 Clinton avenue enjoys a singularly interesting distinction—that of being totally blind and at the same time one of the best steam fitters in the city. Mr. Judge has been blind for thirty-six years. His affliction came as the result of an explosion accident in the copper mines of upper Michigan.

He was working as a printer on the Cleveland Plain Dealer when the war broke out. During the second battle of Bull Run he distinguished himself for bravery and recently received a flattering communication from Brigadier General J. W. Coppinger, who was wounded in that battle and left on the field. Mr. Judge remained by the side of the wounded man, under a heavy fire all the time, and finally removed him to a place of safety. Later on General Coppinger was taken to Washington by Mr. Judge.

Soon after having received his discharge Mr. Judge went into the upper Wisconsin copper country, where he soon secured employment in one of the mines. It was there the accident occured which deprived him of his sight. He was at once removed to St. Mary's hospital in Milwaukee, where, in the course of events, he became a steam fitter in a most peculiar way.

One day a big plate in one of the steam ranges with which the hospital was supplied cracked and the employes of the hospital were at a loss how to proceed. Mr. Judge insisted he could repair the break, so was allowed to try. Through his sense of touch he soon learned the extent of the break and then began the work of repairing it. This he did in such a workmanlike manner that the hospital authorities were highly pleased with him and employed him to set up a complete steam-heating plant, in need of which the hospital had been. Mr. Judge has done many important jobs of steamfitting, amoung them being that of the home of the feeble minded at Chippewa Falls, Wis.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Salaries of Our Players.

Franklin Fyles, writing of "The Theater and Its People," in the Ladies' Home Journal, touches interestingly upon the earnings of actors, and corrects the oft-repeated reports of the enormous earnings of players. "Salaries vary with circumstances," he says. "The manager may find at twenty-five dollars a week a player whose moderate talent exactly fits a part of considerable importance. He may have to pay one hundred and fifty dollars if the role is singular and fit candidates scarce. If he wants celebrity in addition to ability he may be willing to make the salary five hundred dollars a week. In that case he takes into account the public value of the name and makes a feature of it in his advertisements. Not more than ten actors in America, aside from the stars, receive as much as two hundred and fifty dollars a week, and not more than five actresses are paid this amount. In fact, one hundred and fifty dollars a week is exceptional, and one hundred dollars will engage an excellent hero or heroine, a fine comedian, or a delineator of eccentric character. The wages run down to seventy-five dollars for a soubrette, ingenue or old man, to fifty dollars for an old woman, juvenile man or juvenile woman, and so along to utility and chorus men and women at twelve dollars to eighteen dollars a week. Those are the wages of thoroughly competent actors in companies of good grade."

NEW SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE.

General David B. Henderson, Who Has Taken Tom Reed's Place.

The man who has succeeded Thomas B. Reed as Speaker of the House of Representatives is a far different kind of man than the big fellow from Maine. Reed is imperious and satirical. He seems to take keen delight in saying things that hurt others. On the other hand, Gen. Henderson, the new Speaker, is probably the finest type of the traditional "Hail fellow, well met" that has ever been seen in public life. Boundless good nature, a fondness for the society of his fellow men of high and low degree, limitless tact, the liveliest sympathies and a fine, healthy manliness are some of the attributes that have won him the affectionate regard of all his colleagues on both sides of the chamber. No one ever thinks of finding fault with him, though things which he has done would bring upon others the severest criticism.

The qualities which have given Henderson his popularity can hardly be said to be those most useful to the wielder of the Speaker's gavel in the lower house of Congress, and yet some of them are essential to the success of a great presiding officer. Henderson, writes a Washington correspondent, has never been regarded either as a notable parliamentarian or as a debater of unusual powers. Though Henderson is not a versatile debater, he is a master of a style of oratory that has fairly taken the breath away from scores of inexperienced opponents. His strong card is patriotism and loyalty to the old soldier. Amos Cummings tells a story at Henderson's expense, apropos of his readiness to serve a soldier. The new Speaker fought all through the war, working his way up from the ranks to be first lieutenant of his company, serving until discharged, owing to the loss of his leg, and after a year's rest, reentered the army as colonel of volunteers and served until finally mustered out. An old fellow townsman who happened to be in Washington, and who wanted to see Henderson very much while the latter was engaged in an important committee conference declined to send his name in, but told the doorkeeper to say "a one-armed soldier wanted to see Dave Henderson." In an instant the Iowa man appeared in the doorway, and after a hearty laugh at the ruse employed to bring him out adjourned his committee and took his friend down to the restaurant.

No man in Congress takes better care of his constituents than Hendepson, and he takes pride in the assertion that he never permits a letter to go unanswered, no matter who his correspondent may be. He usually reaches the capitol at 10 o'clock, and he spends three or four hours each day dictating letters to his constituents and to the constituents of many of his colleagues, for his great popularity in Congress is well known, and the demand upon his time made by people outside his district are numerous and heavy. The transition from Reed to Henderson in the Speaker's chair is truly a remarkable one.

Wooing in Brazil.

On Sunday evenings the young man is welcome into the parlor, where a row of chairs extends along the four walls. The whole family seats itself, and amidst a general conversation the poor fellow is supposed to do the wooing. If he wishes to escort his fiancee to a theater, the family and daughter will walk ahead, while he follows by his lonely self. In short, the couple are never permitted to be alone, and the natural consequence is a clandestine wooing.

How He Offended Her.

"Yes," said the bachelor, reflectively, "I offended her in some way, but I don't really know how. You see, her baby was fretful, and she explained that he had been cutting his teeth; whereupon I asked her why she let him play with a knife."

Some Common Errors.

Say "it rains very fast," and not, "very hard." Say "fewer friends," and not, "less friends." Say "for you and me," and not, "for you and I." Say "not that I know," and not, "that I know of." Say "I doubt not that I shall," and not "but I shall." Say "game is plentiful," and not "game is plenty." Say "return it to me," and not, "return it back to me." Say "thus much is true," and not, "this much is true." Say, "if I mistake not," and not "if I am not mistaken." Say "I seldom or see him," and not "I seldom or oversee him." Say "whether I be present or not," and not, "present or no." Say "I am weak in comparison with you," and not, "to you." Say "he was noted for his violence," and not, "he was a man notorious for violence."

The Typewriter Invention.

A statistician has proven that the invention of the typewriter has given employment to 500,000 people, but he fails to state how many cases of weak stomachs it has induced. All people of sedentary occupation need Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It helps nature to bear the strain which ensues from confinement.

Told in Experience Meeting.

It was in an open "experience" meeting and Brother Jones arose and said: "Bretherin', I'm the man that put water in the milk!"

"An' I'm the man that drawed the water fer him," said Brother Brown penitently.

"An' I'm the woman that milked the cow, and knowed all about it," sobbed Sister Jones.

"An' here's the man," said a loud voice from the rear "that sold 'em the cow an' hain't got paid fer it yit!"

Then Brother Jones was sorry he had spoken and was overheard to mutter as he reached for his hat, "Never did believe in these experience meetin's, nohow!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The Cause of Chapped Hands.

Much of the discomfort experienced from chapped hands in winter is caused by washing with inferior soap, the ingredients being highly injurious to the skin. It is therefore important to have pure soap. If warm rain water and Ivory soap be used in washing the hands they may be kept clean and smooth at all seasons. ELIZA R. PARKER.

The John M. Smyth Co. Have No Agents.

The well-merited popularity of the great mail order establishment of the John M. Smyth Co. of Chicago seems to have induced unscrupulous parties to go through the country and falsely represent themselves as sales agents for this house. By thus representing themselves they have succeeded in imposing upon many by selling goods and taking cash and notes from victims who actually believed they were purchasing goods from the representatives of the firm direct. The John M. Smyth Co. have no agents and denounce as frauds all parties traveling through the country and claiming to represent the firm. The public should be on the lookout for such impostors.

—W. B. Brown writes, from Ft. Dodge, Iowa, where he now is, and says he will be home about Christmas to spend the holidays with his family.

—To all points in competition where the fare is $2 or more we have free bus and free baggage to the Junction. tf SPROTT & KNAPP, Agency B. & O. Ry.

—Word has been received here of the birth of a son to J. J. Zent and wife of Mankato, Minn. Mrs. Zent will be remembered by our citizens as Miss Tina Moody.

—One-half the world:—Does not know what the other half eats. Look about a bit. You'll find your neighbors eating Fox's "Forex" Butter crackers along with other substantials.

—Charles Rugman is having considerble trouble filling up the sink hole on the road running north from Feagler's corners. There seems to be no bottom to the place and a large amount of material has been used there at various times.

—The democrats of the Twelfth district will meet in this city on the 9th of January for the purpose of electing a committeeman to represent the district on the state central committee, to succeed Thos. R. Marshall of Columbia City.

—The motion for a new trial in the Mabus case was argued today before 'Squire Walter, but the motion was not granted. Now, the goods will have to be sold to pay fine and costs, and the stay of Mabus in jail, will as we understand it, go for nothing.

—The Angola Republican says a deed has been filed there conveying the marl lands and buildings at Hayward City to the Wabash Portland Cement company. The deed bore $405 worth of revenue stamps, indicating that the consideration was over $400,000.

—Place your confidence in a remedy that is guaranteed to cure. "I coughed constantly and my strength was all exhausted. I looked more like one dead than alive. Beggs' Cherry Cough Syrup entirely cured me."—Mrs. S. D. Harsh, Fairport Kan. For all throat and lung troubles. It has never failed. —Sold by H. B. McCORD.

—A. D. Moore was here today having come over to meet his son George, who came down from Clear Lake on the forenoon train, bringing his bride with him. George was married last Thursday to a lady up there, and now brings her to his own home and house fully furnished. That is a good way to start life. John, his brother, also lives near the old home, in a fine new house built last summer.

—We hear that a man in Hillsdale county is making a specialty of raising cats whose fur is perfectly black, that color being desirable as it does not fade. In order to keep the race pure he is said to keep them on an island in a lake. The well known dislike of water keeps them on the island. We do not vouch for the truth of this, for fear it may turn out like John Robbins' skunk trust article. However, should anyone call on us, we can furnish them with some lovely blue ones.

—In response to requests from teachers throughout the state, Attorney General Taylor has rendered an opinion that unless the trustee makes a contract with the teachers, exempting him from liability in the case the school closes on account of sickness or epidemic, and the health board order the school closed, the teachers are entitled to compensation for such time. The trustee, however, may extend the school year for a time equal to the time of such closing and the teachers would then probably be required to teach for such extended period under their contracts, unless the contracts were so drawn as to prevent this.

—Mrs. W. B. Brown has a letter from her brother, Harry Rush, whose home is at Spokane, Wash., saying he has been elected to take the thirty-third degree in Masonry, which puts him on the top round of the ladder in that ancient order. It will be remembered that a few years after he went west. he was elected grand master for that state, and he writes that he has now held all the state offices in the order, except the grand chaplain, which will be his in order, next May. We rejoice in his good fortune, and it again reminds us of the climbing propensities of the DeKalb boy. He seems bound to get on top of life's hill, where there is sunshine and pure air.

WOMEN IN TROUBLE.

The Approach of Motherhood is the Occasion of Much Anxiety to All.

Every woman dreads the ordeal through which she must pass in becoming a mother. The pain and suffering which is in store for her is a source of constant anxiety, fear and dread, to say nothing of the danger which the coming incident entails. The joyous anticipations with which she looks forward to baby's coming gives way to an indescribable dread of the ordeal when she fully realizes the critical and trying event which will soon approach and have to be endured.

Women should hail with delight a remedy which insures to them immunity from the pain, suffering and danger incidental to child-bearing. Such a remedy is now offered, and women need not fear longer the hour of childbirth. "Mother's Friend"—is a scientific liniment—and if used before confinement, gently and surely prepares the body for the great requirements and changes it is undergoing, insures safety to both mother and child, and takes her through the event with comparative ease and comfort. This wonderful remedy is praised by every woman who has used it.

What woman is not interested in "Mother's Friend?" This wonderful remedy has been tested and its priceless value proven by the experience of thousands of happy mothers who have used it during the most critical period of woman's life—the approach and culmination of motherhood.

It has won their everlasting praise, for it gave them help and hope in their most trying hour and when most needed. Every woman may some day need "Mother's Friend." The little book, "Before Baby is Born," telling all about it, and when it should be used, will prove of great interest and benefit to all expectant mothers, and will be sent free to any address upon application to the Bradfield Regulator Company, Atlanta, Ga.

Sore Throat

Sore throat and constant coughing indicate an affection of the bronchial tubes which may develop into pleurisy or inflammation of the lungs. Do not wait; but use Dr. John W. Bull's Cough Syrup at once and be cured.

A Postmaster's View of it.

BLOOMINGDALE, Ind., Feb. 20, '99.
Pepsin Syrup Co.

Gentlemen:—After having given Dr. Caldwell's Syrup a fair trial in my family, I unhesitatingly pronounce it a great boon to all suffering from indigestion, constipation and dyspepsia in all their forms with all their train of evil consequences I have fought constipation and dyspepsia of a severe character for 25 years, have employed the most skilled physicians that I could reach, have spent hundreds of dollars and now I find more relief in this pleasant remedy than I have in anything else. To all persons of sedentary occupations in life, I wish to say, buy it and use it. I have spent 12 years at the postmaster's desk, averaging 14 hours per day, and know now if I had had this remedy years ago it would have saved me much suffering.—Yours respectfully, W. M. McCOY, Postmaster, Bloomingdale, Ind.

—The supreme court yesterday overruled a petition for rehearing in the case of Louis Gustavel against the state of Indiana. This is the case in which the constitutionality of the "fish law," passed by the last legislature, was upheld. Gustavel was convicted and fined for catching with a hook and line in Tippecanoe river, "one black bass more than nine inches in length." The court held that it is unlawful to take fish of any size by any means during the months of May and June.

For the defendant Nickey the attorneys are Bell & Doughman of Ft. Wayne, Marshall, McNagny & Clugston of Columbia City and D. M. Link of this city, while Judge Roby is also connected with the case as attorney for Lyman Lockwood. The case will come up for trial at Ft. Wayne next Wednesday and will be a warm legal battle.

The British in South Africa are still meeting with reverses. First it was a part of Gen. Gatacre's column that was led into an ambush and defeated. Then came a similar case, Sunday, with Gen. Methuen's column in the west. And now the commander in chief of the South Africa forces, Gen. Buller, has met a serious reverse. He was pushing on toward Ladysmith and in trying to get across the Tugela river, failed, lost many men and eleven field guns. It seems to be the sharpshooting riflemen of the Boers that do the work.

NOTICE.

You Can't Dodge Them

Did you ever try to dodge the rain-drops? Did not succeed very well, did you? It's just as useless to try to escape from the germs of consumption. You can't do it. They are about us on every hand and we are constantly taking them into our lungs.

Then why don't we all have this disease? Simply because these germs cannot gain a foothold in a strong throat and lungs. It's when these are weak that the germs master.

The body must be well supplied with fat. The danger comes when the blood is poor and the body is thin. If your cough does not yield, and your throat and lungs feel raw and sore, you should not delay another day. Take of Cod-Liver Oil with Hypophosphites at once. It will heal the inflamed membranes and greatly strengthen them as well. The digestion becomes stronger, the appetite better and the weight increases. The whole body becomes well fortified and the germs of consumption cannot gain a foothold.

It's this nourishing, sustaining and strengthening power of SCOTT'S EMULSION that has made it of such value in all wasting and exhausting diseases.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sample bottles at O. P. Barber's, Corunna.

Eckharts Enlarge.

The already great factory of the Eckhart Carriage Co., is to be enlarged. At a meeting yesterday it was decided to make extensive improvements, needed by the steady increase of their business. Some of the storage buildings south of the main factory will be at once removed, as they expect Mr. Ruhl to take hold of that tomorrow. Then, they will build an entire new building to the south and along the railroad sidetrack. It will be 150 by 40 feet and be two stories high. The lower part will be used for the blacksmith department. This extra building will enable them to keep up with their increasing orders, provided they can get hands enough to do the work. They will be able to turn out fifty finished jobs a day. And they are finding plenty of demand for these. They now have on the road, five good traveling men, and are also establishing a transfer house in Omaha, that will be used as a central depot from which to supply dealers in that state. They say that the advance in prices is not likely to hurt them, as all lines of business must now be adjusted to the new prices.

It should be noted that an additional department will likely be added soon, for the fitting of rubber tires and all work demanded by improvements in that line. We are glad to see them prospering.

Has the Right Idea.

(Columbia City Post.)

Jones, present superintendent of public instruction for the state of Indiana, is going to divide his time between city, town and country schools. He believes the country schools are as much entitled to a part of his time and assistance as the schools in towns and cities, and he proposes to go out and visit them with the hope of bettering them and learning more about their needs. Mr. Jones is certainly right in the view that the country schools are entitled to as much consideration at his hands as those in towns, and if he can do any good by visiting them he most assuredly should do so. A state superintendent sitting in his office at Indianapolis, month after month, can not be of any very great advantage to the district schools of the state.

Sensible Plan

The postmaster general has repeated his old cry that the government loses heavily on second class mail matter. As a remedy he recommends the decrease of privileges to the country newspapers. If the government would cease to send millions of public document, pickaxes and other tools for the Geological Survey, and boxes and bales of all sorts of goverement property, as second class matter under Congressional or Executive franks, second class matter would pay for itself.

We regret to part with the

Year 1899

It has been our .....

„Banner Year„

Each month has been better than the same month in any previous year. Our customers have made it a pleasure to wait upon them. We have been able to sell a higher class of merchandise, and no one can appreciate more than the salesman the pleasure of showing nice goods. For these reasons and many others we feel most kindly toward the year '99. We extend our very warmest thanks to one and all, trusting that we have done our part toward making the past year a good one for you ... We will go into the year 1900 fully determined to do even better than we have in the year just past. We have already laid our plans for the coming spring season. We have orders placed for thousands of dollars' worth of choice Dry Goods, Clothing and Carpets. No matter how much higher in price the merchandise may go, we will be prepared to sell you at prices no higher, in many cases lower than ever. We've placed orders for only such goods as can be absolutely guaranteed, and will have an immense stock to select from. Again thanking you for past favors and hoping to merit your patronage in the future, we remain,

Yours respectfully,

WHY HAVE SALOONS?

Some say because the law allows them; others, that they make business better for a community. Still others, they cannot be prohibited. To start with, that which is morally wrong cannot be made legally right; and while the Indiana law now wrongfully permits their existence, the new law places the responsibility on each township or ward in a city, of getting rid of them. Again, a business which wastes the resources of the public and corrupts every element that it touches, and is a consumer of wealth and not a producer, cannot only not benefit a community, but must ever be a positive detriment to every other legitimate business interest. The saloon is a blight and not a blessing. The only prosperity it knows is the prosperity that drains all else to fill its own coffers.

Again, it is silly to say that the saloon cannot be vanquished. The state is stronger than any of its institutions, or else popular government is a failure.

There is no reason why five hundred saloons might not be closed within a year from this time in Indiana. By remonstrance, any township or ward in a city by a majority vote may be rid of saloons entirely. Formerly the quart shop took the place of the licensed saloon, but this is no longer possible. The law now provides that any one selling in less quantities than five gallons at a time must either secure a license from the county commissinors in the regular way, or be a druggist selling on the written prescription of a reputable practicing physician. All other sales, barters or gifts are illegal. If you prevent the issuance of a license, and a quart shop is started, get a conviction (for every sale or gift that is made in less quantities than five gallons at a time is illegal) and then ask the court for an order restraining the proprietor from attempting further business. Even in case the claim is made that sales of five gallons are being made, the proprietor must establish the fact that he is engaged in the wholesale business; and in that case must pay a government tax of $50. Druggists can only sell on a prescription, and for this are not required to possess a government tax recipt for $25. If he does pay the tax, it ought to be regarded as prima facie evidence that he is violating the law.

The Appetite of a Goat

Is envied by all poor dyspeptics whose Stomach and Liver are out of order. Only 25 cents at any druggists.

L. P. Milligan Dead

Lambden L. P. Milligan died at his home in Huntington Thursday. He had been ill for some time. He was one of the Knights of the Golden Circle who got into trouble during the rebellion. He and Dr. Bowles of Paoli and Horsey and another whose name we forget, were tried for treason and sentenced to death by a court martial, one of the members of which was Gen. Reub. Williams of Warsaw. The verdict was afterwards set aside by the courts, the trial by court-martial being declared illegal because the civil courts were going on all right and should have tried them.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

Home of Swamp-Root.

—Congressman Robinson fared very badly at the hands of Speaker Henderson, only securing a place on the second committee on election; a place of little or no importance. Mr. Robinson is one of the most faithful and industrious members of the House, and deserved better treatment.

Our Saturday Evenings.

CHAPTER VIII.

Every little while, and in different parts of the country, there breaks out what appears to be a sort of epidemic of stealing or fraud. Sometimes it crops out in national affairs, as in the case of the scandal connected with the secretary of war, Belknap, father of the present congressman from one of the Chicago districts, who by the way, used to live in Garrett. Then there were the star route scandals, when men who ran a little mail route like that from St. Joe to Fort Wayne, now in the hands of our old friend Christian Smith, would be allowed several thousand dollars a mile, and got it, and kept it. There have been state scandals, like that which landed the state treasurer of one of the western states in prison, and which bids fair now to coop up several prominent men in Michigan. Then there were municipal stealings like those by the Tammany men in New York City that sent Tweed to just punishment in the "Tombs." Then there are county scandals of which we have had our share, and which are now creating so much excitement in several central counties of Indiana, particularly in Shelby county. Then there are township troubles like those we had in DeKalb about twenty-five years ago, when about half the trustees were involved at one time. And the more recent difficulties in Smithfield and Jackson. But all of these were very tame and commonplace affairs when stood up side by side with the recent affair in the staid old state of Michigan. It is so altogether lovely and peculiar, that it deserves a separate head in these "talks."

Thrifty Michiganders.

A rascally deal has just been brought to light in Michigan. The last legislature, in providing for a tax to support a state militia, made a provision for selling off all the stores and material on hand and beginning the whole business anew. So they advertised the goods for sale. Two firms only, put in bids. One was a company at Kalamazoo, and the other, at Chicago. The goods were appraised at $53,000, but the Chicago firm had the highest bid, $10,500, and got the goods. The cash was paid and the goods shipped, but no one could find out whether the Chicago firm got them or not. In the meantime, the state received bids for the new supplies, and after proper advertising, the contract was given to the Kalamazoo firm, that had made a bid for the old material. So they furnished the state with the goods for the militia. It now is proved that the Chicago firm never existed, but a part of the Kalamazoo firm, had sent a separate bid from there, and when the old stock was awarded to them, they had the cars sent to Chicago and thence to Kalamazoo to the original company. Then they cleaned up the old goods, put new tags on and added the extra and different stores the state wanted, and sold the lot on their successful bid. \for $61,000, the state clearing about $30,000 over all expenses. In other words, they bought the goods from the state and sold them back to the state. Now they are in trouble over their swindle, and it is hoped some way may be found to punish them. If the contractors cannot be punished, then the state officers should be hauled up for such carelessness. Indeed, it looks as if they must have had a hand in the deal. In either case, it was one of the slickest frauds on record. Gov. Pingree is after the rascals and we hope soon to give our readers the result.

He Fooled The Surgeons.

All doctors told Renic Hamilton, of West Jefferson, O., after suffering 18 months from Rectal Fistula, he would die unless a costly operation was performed; but he cured himself with five boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the surest Pile cure on Earth, and the best Salve in the World. 25 cents a box. Sold by H. B. McCord, druggist.

Too, Too True!

Gen. Reub Williams of the Warsaw Times makes a few remarks that applies to our own situation when he says:

All "dead-head" notices, all complimentary mention, the advancing of every measure and enterprise calculated to benefit the town and county, naturally drift into the colums of the Daily Times or of the Indianian—sometimes both. A dollar's worth of printing that has to be paid for, is often sent abroad. Everybody uses the "old pack-horse" when it can be done for nothing; but if pay is required, it goes elsewhere. See?

That Lucky Thirteen.

We have a letter from C. M. Merica at Chicago, in which he quotes and comments on the "Gatsch" story, about the DeKalb man who had such an increase of live stock in one day as well as triplets in the family. Mr. Merica lays it all to John Robbins, believing it to be another case of "skunk trust." John is just beginning to find out what a reputation he has built for himself. Mr. Merica says that every man he meets who knows he hailed from Auburn asks him about this latest story. But all he can do for them is to refer them to John Robbins.

Attention Farmers.

The Auburn Handle Factory will pay the highest cash price for ash handle block delivered at their factory on the Lake Shore tracks, cut 58 inches long. Also want ash logs cut 9½, 14½ and 19½ feet long. All timber to be smooth and sound. Will also take basswood cut 4 feet long and 8 inches in diameter and up, left round with bark on. Will pay $3 per cord.—J. M. CHERRY & CO.

An Important Decision.

The supreme court yesterday rendered a modified judgment in the case of George Rowe and others against John W. Bateman and others in which it was decided that the former should not be charged with the costs of the appeal. It will be remembered that George Rowe was foreman of the grand jury which found an indictment against Commissioners Bateman and Hague, accusing them of official misconduct. The acts charged were all committed prior to the passage of the impeachment law of 1897, and on this point they were acquitted. An appeal was then taken to the supreme court by the grand jury, but its consideration was delayed so long that the term of office of the two commissioners expired and the appeal was dismissed.

The circuit court had taxed the costs against the appellants, but the higher court held that members of the grand jury who file an affidavit that an officer is guilty of misconduct should no more be held liable for costs than when they return an indictment charging a person with felony of which he is afterward acquitted. This is the ending of an important case.

Glorious News

Comes from Dr. D. B. Cargile, of Washita, I. T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs. Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. Terrible sores would break out on her head and face, and the best doctors could give her no help; but her cure is complete and her health is excellent." This shows what thousands have proved—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidney and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion builds up strength. Only 50c. Sold by H. B. McCord, druggist. Guaranteed.

Court Notes.

As is usually the case at the end of the year when the holiday season is on, court matters are not very rushed. The attorneys are getting things in shape for work after Christmas and several court cases will come up for trial next week. In the meantime Judge Hartman is doing what he can to clear up the docket.

The only case disposed of today was that of Margaret Swinehart vs. George Swinehart, for divorce. After hearing the evidence Judge Hartman decided that the plaintiff was entitled to the decree, and he also gave her the privilege of resuming her maiden name, Margaret Bryant. George did not make any defense, and Margaret pays the costs.

That Cough Hangs On

You have used all sorts of cough remedies but it does not yield; it is too deep seated. It may wear itself out in time, but it is more liable to produce la grippe, pneumonia or a serious throat affection. You need something that will give you strength and build up the body.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

will do this when everything else fails. There is no doubt about it. It nourishes, strengthens, builds up and makes the body strong and healthy, not only to throw off this hard cough, but to fortify the system against further attacks. If you are run down or emaciated you should certainly take this nourishing food medicine.

Briefs Daily.

—James McTriplett of Waterloo was a caller today.

—D. L. Moody, the evangelist died yesterday at east Northfield Mass.

—With a citizen whose initials are P. D. Q., you can hardly call Auburn a slow town.

—A trust exists among the coal dealers at Goshen and Elkhart and prices are away out of sight.

—John Shull, an Allen county farmer lost his right hand in a corn shredder a few days ago. The list is growing.

—Henry B. Eckhart, west of town paid up into 1901 today and says he is going to sleep sound.

—Mr. and Mrs George Himes of DeKalb were here today. He has been sick for two or three weeks.

—A smart Auburn boy was asked the other day to define a dimple. His answer was. "It's a wart turned inside out."

—Englishmen are said to be trying to get recruits in New York State to join the Canadian regiment for South Africa.

—Mrs. Martha Tonkel, postmistress at Cedarville, was married yesterday to Charles Zoler, a well-to-do farmer living near that place.

—At Waco, Texas, last week, a frightened wolf ran into town, and was chased till it hid under an old building. It was forced to come out and was then killed.

—The Wisconsin Central trains now use the Illinois Central station on the Lake Front Chicago. They ceased using the Grand Central on December 10.

—Luther J. Loveland of Newville was in town today on his way to visit friends in Ohio. While here he called on his old army comrade, George Everett of the Courier.

—The meeting of the Knights of Pythias for the first district, composed of the counties of Steuben, DeKalb, Noble and Lagrange, will be held at Garrett January 17.

—A certain fellow who has whooped for war with England until he hasn't voice enough left to whistle for a dog, made his wife go to the door the other evening when someone knocked. He was afraid to go.

—Kendallville News:—Wilson Dancer, of DeKalb county, a prominent farmer and good democrat, was in the city yesterday. He is a brother of Dr. Dancer, deceased, and was on his way home from attending the funeral of George Dancer's wife. George accompanied him home.

—John Lumm fixed up the Old Reliable Weekly into 1900 last evening. He is still in charge of the Wabash track from Auburn Junction to Moores, his section being seven miles. He came into this position when his brother Mike was promoted to track master. Both are evidently faithful men.

—We are in receipt of a copy of the Hastings, Neb., Weekly Record. It is chuck full of good reading matter, but does not contain the advertisements of a single local business man, except a 4-inch single column ad for a restaurant. It does not take much of a prophet to predict that in a few years Hastings "will be a plowed field."

—I. N. Turner came up from Fort Wayne last evening and reported Mrs. Turner doing well after the operation. It was performed at St. Joseph hospital, by Dr. Myers assisted by Dr. Nusbaum. Auburn friends are now sympathizing with three patients down there: one at Hope and two at St. Joseph hospital. Mrs. Ford, Miss George and Mrs. Turner.

—Key West is a great center for the manufacture of Cuban cigars, because the Cuban leaf tobacco can be imported on a light duty. But the manufactured cigars would have to pay a duty of $1 a mile for the distance brought, on each 100 cigars. That looks like a queer law but when we consider that the distance from Havana to Cuba is 88 miles one can see that $88 a thousand makes it quite an object to make the cigars at Key West. But the Key West fold don't seem to realize that they are cheating Uncle Sam out of the duty.

—A GOOD MOTTO:—Crack and try before you buy. Next time you go to the grocers for crackers remember this and put it into practice. If you are a good judge Fox's "Forex" New Shape Butter Crackers will please you best, no matter how many brands you try.

—Melt like mist:—They melt like mist in the mouth and tickle the taste with a toothsome touch. You ask "What?" Just sample Fox's New Design "Forex" Butter Crackers and you'll get the answer through the sense of taste. If all the food experts and "Crack" bakers in the world should combine their efforts they couldn't produce a more delightful and wholesome cracker.

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE EARTH.

An Important Record of the Week As Told by the Telegraph—Latest from Foreign Shores—Crimes, Casualties, Fires, Etc.

Colonel Milligan Dead.

Col. L. P. Milligan, who more than a third of a century ago was a national figure, and during the war was one of the ablest and most prominent of the pro-secession leaders in the North, died at his residence in Huntington, Ind., after an illness covering a period of three months. Death resulted from ravages of old age, Col. Milligan being within three months of eighty-eight years old. Col. Milligan was one of the oldest lawyers in the West, and in his intellectual prime was a man of pre-eminent abilities. It was, however, as a leader of the Knights of the Golden Circle and as a man condemned to die for treason that national interest centered about him.

Elephant Trainer Is Killed.

Columbus (O.) special: M. J. Meagher, an elephant trainer, better known as Patsy Forepaugh, was instantly killed by an elephant at Sellsville. The elephant, known as "Sid," has been in captivity for twenty years and was never regarded as vicious. Meagher led the elephants into the training circle for their daily exercise, when Sid became unruly and the trainer jabbed the animal with his stick. Sid became furious and hurled the trainer to the ground with his trunk. The elephant then fell on his victim, piercing Meagher's body with one of his tusks.

Army and Navy Co-operate.

That the army and navy are in co-operation in the Philippines is shown by a dispatch from Admiral Watson, which says that the Concord, under Ackley, and the Pampaga, under Leigh, on the 8th instant, with two companies of infantry captured Romelon. John James, a seaman, was wounded in the knee, and was the only casualty of the navy. The Newark's battalion landed from Calloa and occupied Pamplone. Burwell and Wheeling are co-operating with Gen. Young like one service. Romelon is a small island between Luzon and Panay.

New Torpedo-Boat Defective.

Paris special: The optimistic accounts which were printed recently regarding the trial of the submarine torpedo boat Narvel, are discounted by the fact that an order has been issued to cease work on two sister boats until the defects in the Narvel have been remedied. The chief difficulty seems to be in changing the motor power from steam when the vessel is traveling on the surface to electricity, which is used while she is under water. During the trials it was shown that this change was made slowly and was unsafe.

A Jourdalist Dead.

Hepburn Johns, dramatic critic of the Chicago Chronicle, died in that city of pneumonia. Mr. Johns was formerly connected with various New York papers and in 1885 was managing editor of the Harrisburg, Pa., Telegram. Later he was a member of the editorial staff of the Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Suicide of a Prominent Man.

James Duane Taylor, one of the important officers in New York City of the Wagner Palace Car Company, and a son-in-law of the founder of the company, committed suicide at the Grafton Hotel, in Washington, by cutting his throat with a razor.

Murder Avenged.

At Dunbar, Pa., Sanford White, superintendent of construction of the W. J. Rainey Coke Company, was shot and killed by David Pierce, a colored employe. Pierce then fled to the mountains, followed by an angry mob, which riddled him with bullets.

Street Car Dynamited.

For the third time since the strike was declared against the Springfield (Ill.) Consolidated Railway, Nov. 10, a street car was dynamited at 11:30 o'clock Friday night. The car was blown off the track and completely wrecked. No one was hurt.

Pension for Mrs. Lawton.

Mr. Fairbanks of Indiana, introduced a bill in the Senate to grant a pension of $2,000 a year to the widow of the late Gen. Henry W. Lawton. A similar bill was introduced in the House by Representative Landis of Indiana.

Rough Riders for South Africa.

The British War Office plans are to organize a cavalry contingent of 3,000 British yeomanry for South Africa. The yeomanry are experienced rough riders.

Several Barges Burn.

Several barges, two thousand bales of hay and the same quantity of straw were burned in the North River, New York. The loss is $25,000.

Ladysmith Is Safe.

The London Daily News says: "We understand that news has arrived from Gen. White to the effect that Ladysmith is well supplied with food and ammunition, and can hold out much longer than has been estimated. The troops are described as in good spirits and anxious to fight."

Mahmud Pasha a Fugitive.

It is reported from Constantinople that Mahmud Pasha, a brother-in-law of the Sultan, has fled to France. The Porte has asked the French Government to apprehend him.

Ohio Grain Men Organize.

A secret meeting of grain dealers was held at Lima, O., over 100 being present from northwestern Ohio. They formed an organization to control prices and fight the increase of freight rates proposed by the railroads and to head off the demoralization of their business.

Put Over Until Spring Term.

Miss Viola Herlocker, charged with the attempted murder of Mrs. C. F. Morey by poison May 10 last, was arraigned in the District Court at Hastings, Neb., and her case was continued until the spring term. Her bond was renewed with the original sureties.

DEPRESSION IN STOCKS.

Productive and Speculative Interests Show a Divergence.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "Unusual depression in stocks this week has displayed the great divergence between the trading and the productive industries of the country and its speculation. Never has production been greater, the number of hands employed larger, the wages distributed higher, or the purchasing power, based upon earnings, greater than at this time, and never have conditions of trade or returns of earnings and traffic given certainty of greater business for transporters. Yet as the earnings of the railway and manufacturing companies mount upward their stocks decline as if it were disastrous for a road to double its earnings and ruinous for a mill to realize unprecedented profits. Inflated capitalization has of course done much harm and speculative excitement has counted profits in many cases long before they were earned. Money markets here and abroad have been strained by British reverses in South Africa. In spite of an advance of 2.1 cents in prices cotton exports in November decreased $13,020,926 in value, amounting to only 710,351 bales, against 1,483,126 last year. Wool did not advance further, though sales scarcely diminish and have been 22,075,000 pounds in two weeks at the three chief markets. Failures for the week were 218 in the United States, against 261 last year, and 26 in Canada, against 31 last year."

FATAL FIRES IN NEW YORK.

Seven Burned to Death, Several Seriously Injured, in Tenements.

Seven lives were lost in two big tenement houses which were destroyed by fire in New York. Five charred bodies were found on the upper floors of a burned tenement at 102d street and Third avenue, known as the Mentor, and five women and a little girl, all badly burned, were carried from the blazing house to near-by hospitals. Several other persons only escaped from the flames and dense smoke with cuts and bruises. A few hours earlier a deadly fire attacked the five-story tenement in Tenth avenue, near Thirty-eighth street, burning to death Mrs. Martin Fox and her child, George, 2½ years old. The charred remains of both were found after the fire. Mr. Fox is a hackman and was not at home. The first fire is supposed to have started in the cellar. The air shaft in the building and the stairs aided the fire, which had gained tremendous headway when the firemen arrived.

HOMESEEKERS ARE IN CAMP.

They Await the Opening of Southwestern Indian Reservation.

The introduction by Senator Chilton of Texas of a bill to open the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache Indian reservations has caused excitement among the land boomers. For the last year homeseekers and others have been camping near these lands, waiting for the opening hour to roll around. The announcement that this new country may be opened soon has increased these land seekers. Another reason for the unusual activity is the fact that the Wichita mountains, which pass through these Indian reservations, are reported to be rich with gold. The country is well adapted to the growing of wheat, oats, corn, cotton and stock raising. It is understood that the cattlemen, who have a considerable portion of these lands leased for grazing cattle, will fight Senator Chilton's bill.

TEN PASSENGERS HURT.

Engine Collide with Suburban Train at New Albany.

Engine No. 19 of the Air Line road and a Pennsylvania suburban train, running between Louisville and New Albany, collided at Vincennes and Main streets, in New Albany. The Pennsylvania train consisted of an engine and two coaches. It had 150 passengers. One of the coaches was struck in the center and thrown over on its side, knocked off the trucks and badly demolished. Ten passengers were injured, mostly women, but with possibly one exception it is not thought any of them are seriously hurt. The engineers on both the Air Line and Pennsylvania engines claim they were given the right of way by the flagman.

FATAL DUEL ABOUT A WOMAN.

Jealous Husband Meets Supposed Rival and Both Shoot to Kill.

Horace Riddle encountered William Schoenwald, a stockman, on the public square at Randolph, Kan., the other night in company with his wife, from whom he had been separated. With a pistol Riddle mortally wounded Schoenwald, and before he fell Schoenwald shot Riddle in the mouth, causing a serious wound. Schoenwald died in a few hours and Riddle was arrested.

Murderer Is Shot to Pieces.

Sanford White, superintendent of construction of the W. J. Rainey Coke Company, was shot and killed at Dunbar, Pa., by David Pierce, a colored employe. Pierce then fled to the mountains, followed by an angry mob. He was discerned in hiding and riddled with bullets. Death was instantaneous.

Fruit Men Lose by Fire.

Fire broke out in the four-story building at the southeast corner of Dearborn and South Water streets, Chicago. The following firms were burned out: Ginocchi, Costa & Co., Arado, Casati & Co., John Zucca & Co. All of them are in the fruit commission business, and their aggregate loss will probably reach $10,000.

Keenes Win $2,500,000 Each.

While Wall street speculators bewailed the losses by the shrinkage in the value of the stocks they held, every one of them agreed that the two biggest winners were James R. Keene, $2,500,000, and Mrs. James R. Keene, $2,500,000.

Burglar and Officer Are Shot.

Chief of Police Murphy of Moorhead, Minn., was shot while attempting to arrest a burglar of the name of Collins. Collins shot and ran, but fell, dropping his revolver, which Murphy secured and shot Collins in the head.

Mother and Children Drowned.

Near Greenbrier, Ark., the residence of George Roberts was burned and his wife and two small children were cremated. Mrs. Roberts was ill, and it is supposed was asleep. The children were too small to give the alarm.

New York Companies Suspend.

Excitement in Wall street caused the suspension of two large trading houses—the Produce Exchange Trust Company and Henry Allen & Co., bankers and brokers.

School Building Burned.

Fire completely destroyed the school annex building of St. Michael's orphan asylum on Pius street, Pittsburg. Loss $90,000, insurance $50,000.

Hawaii Sugar Crop.

Reports received for this season's sugar crop in the Hawaiian Islands give the total product as 282,807 tons, which is one of the largest for years.

Child's Play Kills Four.

An accident cost the lives of Nelson Hamilton and three of his children near Alliance Postoffice, Ky. Hamilton, preparatory to doing some blasting, was pouring powder from a keg, when his 4-year-old son flung a handful into the open grate fire. The resultant shock exploded the keg of powder, and the house burned over the insensible inmates.

FATAL COLLISION IN OHIO.

Passenger Train Crashes Into a Switch Engine at Cleveland.

A Cleveland, Akron and Columbus passenger train collided with a switch engine near the State insane asylum at Cleveland, killing two men and fatally injuring another. Both engines were hurled from the rails and landed bottom up in the ditches, one on each side of the track. The coupling pin behind the passenger engine's tender broke and none of the passenger coaches left the track. In the cab of the switch engine were the engineer, A. G. Sherman; the fireman, Charles Ehlers, and the conductor, Harry Schultz. They were crushed under the tender and terribly scalded by escaping steam. One of Sherman's legs were crushed. Both of Ehler's legs were cut off. These men died later at St. Alexis' hospital. The engineer of the passenger train, George Carson, applied the sand and air brakes when he saw the danger and jumped, breaking one of his arms. His fireman, William A. Moore, also jumped, but escaped with a few bruises.

BANDITS ROB THE PASSENGERS.

Two Masked Men Go Through a Train Near Kansas City.

The passengers on the Missouri Pacific's Omaha and Nebraska City passenger train, which left Kansas City at 9:15 the other night, were robbed by two masked men, who boarded the train in Kansas City, Kan. They levied their forced contribution after the train started, holding up the passengers in the Pullman and the day coach. The conductor was among the persons robbed. At Nearman, Kan., six miles out of the city, the train slowed up for the station and the bandits dropped off and disappeared. The booty secured was five gold watches and about $100 in money. No shots were fired and no one was injured.

BLOWS UP MOUNTAIN OF ROCK.

Pike's Peak Power Company Gets Rid of a Huge Obstruction.

Vesuvius, a butte which towered 500 feet above Beaver creek, near Cameron, Cripple Creek district, is no more. The Pike's Peak Power Company found it in the way of a dam under construction there. A tunnel 100 feet long was run into the bluff, 30,000 pounds of dynamite was planted, and the great mass of rock was blown up.

Treachery of an Old Pistol.

Henry Andree, a magician at Proctor's Pleasure Palace, New York, while trying to fool an audience fooled himself and accidentally shot off a section of his left hand. It was the same old excuse—Andree did not know the revolver was loaded.

Dewey's Flag Officer Dies.

Lieut. Thomas M. Brumby, Admiral Dewey's flag lieutenant while the admiral was in command of the Asiatic station, died of typhoid fever at the Garfield hospital in Washington.

Rival of Sugar Trust.

The Colonial Sugar Refining Company, the alleged rival of the American Sugar Refining Company, was incorporated at Dover, Del., its capital being $100,000, with the privilege of increasing it to $100,000,000.

Morphine Causes His Death.

At Salt Lake City, John Smith took morphine with suicidal intent and died. Smith declared that his real name was Louis James and that he was a cousin of Jesse and Frank James.

Sol Smith Russell Ill.

Comedian Sol Smith Russell suffered an attack of mental paralysis while playing at the Grand Opera House, Chicago, and was compelled to dismiss his audience.

Costly Work of Snowslide.

Telluride, Colo., reports the wrecking of the stamp mill of Thomas lode in the Bear Creek basin and the death of T. E. Thomas by a snowslide. The mill was destroyed, entailing a loss of $5,000.

Four Are Killed in a Wreck.

The engineers and firemen of a double-header steel train on the Northern Pacific were killed at Kendrick, Idaho. The train got beyond control on a down grade and ditched.

Perish in a Burning Home.

Samuel Reynolds' three small children, aged 6, 3 and 1 year, were burned to death at Nicholsville, Ky. They had been locked in the house while Reynolds and his wife were visitng a neighbor.

Martin Re-Elected Senator.

At Richmond, Va., United States Senator Thomas Martin was re-elected for the term beginning March 4, 1901, by both houses of the Assembly, acting separately.

Gen. Lawton Killed.

Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton has been shot and killed at San Mateo, P. I. He was standing in front of his troops, was shot in the breast and died immediately.

Sampson Joins the G. A. R.

Rear Admiral Sampson has been mustered into James A. Garfield Post, No. 193, G. A. R., at Palmyra, N. Y.

LAWTON SHOT DEAD.

FAMOUS FIGHTER KILLED AT HEAD OF HIS TROOPS.

Falls While About to Assault Insurgents—Won His Rank by Gallantry—Hero of Civil, Indian and Spanish Wars—Sketch of a Noble Life.

A Manila dispatch Tuesday reported that Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton had been killed at San Mateo. He was standing in front of his troops, the dispatch stated, and was shot in the breast and instantly killed by a Filipino sharpshooter. Gen. Lawton, according to a dispatch from Manila Monday night, started out with the Eleventh Cavalry and two battalions of infantry during the evening to capture San Mateo, where three hundred insurgents had entrenched themselves. The press dispatch announcing Gen. Lawton's death, when received in Washington, was sent immediately to the White House, where the cabinet meeting was in progress. The news was received with expressions of profound sorrow and regret.

GEN. LAWTON.

At the War Department instructions had been received Monday from the President to prepare Gen. Lawton's commission as a brigadier general in the regular army, to fill one of the existing vacancies and the adjutant general's clerks were at work on the commission when the information of Gen. Lawton's death was conveyed to the department.

Gen. Lawton was a native of Indiana and won his commission in the army by signal gallantry during the war between the States and in the Indian wars. It comes only to a great nation that has been rent with civil war, menaced by frontier strife with fierce Indians and burdened with the responsibilities of a contest like the Spanish war and the subsequent actions in the tropical Philippines, to produce such a typical fighter as Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton. Personally leading troops in battle, where it would appear that no soldier could escape the death-dealing bullet, Gen. Lawton went through an experience that would have covered his breast with medals had he fought beneath the flag of an empire. When death came to him it was as if a personal blow had been dealt to every loyal American who had read of the deeds of the brave man.

Gen. Lawton was one of the "born fighting machines" that the United States army acquired at the outbreak of the rebellion, from private life. Acts of heroism marked his honorable career in the volunteer army that saved the nation, and, bearing the brevet of colonel for distinguished services in action, and proud in the possession of a medal of honor for signal acts of bravery before Atlanta in 1864, Gen. Lawton elected to make war his profession.

He was made a lieutenant in the regular army, first serving with the Forty-first infantry, but subsequently joining the cavalry arm of the service. When President McKinley made him a major general May 4, 1898, he was a lieutenant colonel in the regular army. To millions the story of the "hero of El Caney" is much fresher and much more vivid than the work of the intrepid Indian fighter who clung doggedly to the trail of that wily chieftain of the murderous Apaches, Geronimo, until he had successfully carried out his plan for the Indian's capture.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S CHRISTMAS PRESENT TO TOMMY ATKINS.

Each of these boxes contains half a pound of fine chocolate. The Queen herself chose the design for the cover, which is enameled in red, with the embossed medallion in gold. As soon as the 90,000 boxes were made, the dies were broken, so that no one but Tommy Atkins at the front may have one of the boxes. The present cost the Queen about $15,000.

"BLACK WEEK" IN LONDON.

Total British Losses Since War Began Are Now 7,630.

"Black week," as last week is now universally called in London, has evidently aroused the British Government and the war office to a full sense of their responsibility and of the magnitude of the task before them. The papers unanimously applaud this awakening, despite the fact that they recognize that the heroic measures now decided upon savor rather of weakness than of strength. It was high time that something very energetic was done. The British losses in killed, wounded, prisoners and missing throughout the campaign now reach the enormous total of 7,630.

As a result of the British reverses the whole South African country northwest is in rebellion. The natives there, as well as those in Basutoland, are said to be much disturbed and losing heart respecting the strength of the British.

A dispatch from Rome says that all the news of the British reverses have been telegraphed to Abyssinia as far as the wires go, and then rushed by couriers to Menelek. It is believed Menelek is contemplating war against Britain and is only awaiting the opportunity when the British are weaker.

Church Row Prompts Crime.

As a result of a change of choirs at the La Fayette Methodist Episcopal Church south, of St. Louis, Frank L. Shaw, manager of the D. M. Osborne Company, has received two anonymous letters of a threatening tone and a box of candy, said to contain poison.

Victory Without a Battle.

In the Senate on Friday Mr. Aldrich presented a special order fixing the standing committees and their personnel for the Fifty-sixth Congress. The order was adopted without dissent. Adjourned until Monday. Debate on financial bill concluded in the House.

In the House on Saturday the currency bill was read for amendment under five-minute rule. Senate resolution adopted for the appointment of three members of the Senate and five of the House to make arrangements for the unveiling of the statue of Daniel Webster, presented to the Government by Stilson Hutchins, on Jan. 18, 1900.

Numerous petitions expressing sympathy with the South African republics in their war with Great Britain were presented in the Senate on Monday by Mr. Mason of Illinois. Resolutions in opposition to the retention of the Philippines introduced by Mr. Tillman and Mr. Bacon. Speech by Mr. Morgan in favor of his resolution to prohibit trade combinations interfering with interstate commerce. The House passed currency bill providing for gold standard by vote of 190 to 150, eleven Democrats voting with Republicans in affirmative. Committees announced by Speaker.

The Senate on Tuesday substituted Senate for House financial bill and received notice from Mr. Aldrich that he would call up the former Jan. 4, 1900, and press it to passage. Received from Mr. Stewart a resolution granting the Commercial Cable Company the right to lay a cable to Cuba. Passed a bill creating a commission of five to revise and codify the pension laws. Mr. Allen, appointed from Nebraska, took the oath of office. The House referred the President's message to the various committees and listened to speeches by Mr. Grow (Rep., Pa.) in support of the administration's policy in the Philippines and by Mr. Bell (Pop., Colo.) criticising the President's utterances on prosperity. Received from Mr. De Armond (Dem., Mo.) a resolution declaring against retention of the Philippines.

On Wednesday the Senate laid upon the table resolution from regents of Smithsonian Institution asking that Richard Olney be appointed to vacancy on the board, Mr. Hoar saying Supreme Court justices might as well suggest who should fill vacancy on that bench. Referred to judiciary committee resolution by Mr. Butler for constitutional amendment providing that chief justice and United States judges be elected by popular vote. Received from Mr. Hoar resolution declaring in effect for withdrawal from the Philippines. Passed resolution requesting the President, if not incompatible with public interests, to communicate to the Senate all the testimony and findings of the commission which investigated the conduct of the Spanish-American war. Adjourned to Jan. 3, 1900. In the House no quorum was present and time of brief session was occupied by humorous filibustering prior to adjournment to Jan. 3, 1900.

GILMORE IS SAFE.

Yorktown Lieutenant and Other American Captives Rescued.

A report from Gen. Young, who is at Vigan, P. I., sent by boat to San Fabian and thence by telegraph to Manila, says that Col. Howze's column has all the American prisoners who were captured by the insurgents, including Lieut. Gilmore of the Yorktown, who was captured some months ago near Baler.

Since his capture by Aguinaldo April 13, while operating near the town of Baler on the eastern coast of Luzon, Lieut. J. C. Gilmore of the gunboat Yorktown has been the rebel chieftain's star prisoner and is taken by him in all his many and rapid moves to escape the American forces. There has been much mystery surrounding the capture of the lieutenant. April 13 he, with a party of fifteen men, left the Yorktown in a launch to go to the relief of a Spanish garrison at Baler which was being besieged by the Filipinos. He left an ensign and one sailor at the mouth of a creek, densely wooded on both sides, and then passed in out of sight. This was the last seen of him or his crew. The ensign heard shouts up the stream, but no reports of guns. For three days the Yorktown patrolled the coast and then, the lieutenant not appearing, started for Manila.

Diagram Showing the Recent Astronomical Phenomenon.

A view of the recent almost total eclipse of the moon was obscured in many localities because of a cloudy sky. The sight was a most interesting one where visible, and was more satisfying when observed by the naked eye than through a telescope.

The accompanying illustration clearly demonstrates the relation of the moon to the earth's shadow, the large black

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Muncie Resort Wrecked with Dynamite—Work of a Bold Thief at Elwood—Man and Wife Successfully Seek Klondike Gold.

The Maple Grove garden, owned by Bert Foster, the ex-heavyweight champion of Indiana, was destroyed by fire at Muncie. Mr. Foster, his 7-year-old son and his housekeeper, Miss Myrtle Lynn, escaped with their lives in their night clothes. Three tramps, who were sleeping in the athletic garden, barely escaped being cremated, two of whom were horribly burned. At an investigation the next day it was learned that the building was blown up with dynamite, there having been for the last six months considerable opposition by the residents of that portion of the city against the garden.

Steals Weekly Pay Roll.

The most daring robbery ever perpetrated in Madison County occurred at noon the other day in Elwood, when some unknown thief stole the pay roll of the Model Radiator factory, owned by C. M. Converse of Chicago. The local manager took the money, $450, out of the bank and stopped at his home en route to the factory to eat dinner. He hung his overcoat in the parlor and was only away from it about ten minutes, but during that time the thief entered the door, slit the pocket down the side, grabbed the sack of money and disappeared.

Gain a Fortune in the Klondike.

With several hundred thousand dollars Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Howe have just returned to their home in Indianapolis, after a year and a half in the Klondike. The husband and wife trudged together from Skaguay over the White Pass to Lake Tagish. There the doctor built an open boat and they crossed to the Dawson country. They lived for months with the mercury 56 degrees below zero. They declare the best days in the Klondike are yet to come. They hold fine claims adjoining, one of which has paid $250,000.

Aged Engineer Dies.

Davis Verrill, the oldest engineer in point of service on the Lake Shore Railroad, died at South Bend. He began railroading as a fireman in 1846 and was made an engineer in 1852. Since 1866 he has been with the Lake Shore road. He was 73 years old.

WHEN PEGGY GOES TO MARKET

When Peggy takes her basket up
And off to market goes,
I'm stupefied with wonder at
How very much she knows,
She makes her way between the stalls
And with judicial air
Decides that this is "so and so"
And that is "pretty fair."

She knows if fish are fresh or not,
And, wise as any owl,
She differentiates between
A chicken and a fowl,
She thumbs the breastbone of the one
And pulls the other's legs;
She squints her pretty little eyes
To test the new-laid eggs.

The veg'tables must be just right,
For with a critic's eye
She scans them, not inclined to pass
Their imperfections by.
She calls the market folks by name;
Ah, what a lot she knows,
When Peggy takes her basket up
And off to market goes!

When Peggy does the marketing
My heart with pride she fills;
I go along, a useless thing,
Except to pay the bills.

In the Nick of Time.

THE Widow Carney came out of her two-room shanty beyond the dump. She stood erect in the spring sunshine, looking over a network of railroad tracks, across to the switchouse where Kathleen had taken Fergus O'Hare's dinner. Nellie Carney was still little more than a girl. Her face was arch and sweet, her eyes bright, her hair black and curly. The wind blew her calico dress away from her fine figure.

"And you say that she's a widow," John Conover remarked to Fergus. "Not long I venture."

"Three year," said Fergus, panting a little. "Not for any fault of the b'ys. She's a little uppish, is Nellie Carney. Phil were a fireman an' like to be engineer wan day, but the greasers down Coyote pass finished him wan night when they attacked the train. Company gives her the rint av the hoose thar, an' she keeps boarders for meals."

That is how John Conover met Nelly Carney. He was getting ready to go to the mines. He had just come from the Eastern States and had a claim up about Toby's creek that his brother had left him when he died the year before. He did not say much about himself to anyone. He took his meals with the widow Carney for a week or so, and bunked in with Fergus O'Hare. He said he was getting his outfit. Nellie Carney did some sewing for him, and they sat together evenings, while Kathleen slept beside them.

One of these evenings John Conover seemed to be very thoughtful. At last he took a sudden resolution.

"Nelly," he began, gently, "I'm going up to a rough place, but I've got a notion to take you along."

"It takes two to make a bargain, Mr. Conover."

"Not this bargain. I know you'll go, dear. I'm only wondering if it'll pay you. Jim always stuck to it that creek claim was bound to pan out. If it does, you and Kathleen will be fixed for life. If it don't you might have a tough time. Shall we go down to the 'squire to-morrow, Nell?"

Nelly took a night's sleep on it, and in the morning consented to go up country with John Conover. They were married one day, and set out the next, taking the little child with them.

It seemed a shame to John Conover that he had brought such a pretty creature to live in such a wild and lonesome spot. She was happy enough, apparently the same Nelly that he had seen on the dump that spring day. The more he loved her the more he brooded over her sacrifice of a home and friends among civilized people. He worked hard, and the next summer made a good find in a hole and sent her back to San Francisco with a small fortune and instructions to put Kathleen into a convent, where she could have schooling and he made a lady of for the future.

Life in a hotel is a great educator. Day after day Mrs. Conover went about, saw great plays, read novels, visited her child, and enjoyed existence. She received John's infrequent letters with a positive alarm. Suppose he should send for her to return. She could close her eyes and see the great, dark, snow-topped mountain wall, the rough cabin close under the shadow, the brawling waters of the mountain torrent. In dreams she heard the thrumming voice of the wind among the pine boughs, the scream of the wild eagles—that was all. She missed John at first with all the passion of her impulsive nature; but, as time went on, the longing grew less fierce, and she felt she would rather never return than to go now when life was so full of gaiety and novelty.

One day Fergus O'Hare came to see her. The colored servant told her with a grin that the visitor would not write his name on a card, maybe couldn't. Nelly flushed, for she knew it was but a little time since she had been ignorant of card formalities. She said she would see him in her own parlor, and the amused bellboy showed up the switchman. He looked rougher and more grimy than ever.

"How do you do, Fergus?" she said, with a little condescension.

Fergus had stopped in the middle of the little parlor.

"Nelly Conover! Oi can't belave it's the same," he said.

"It is," she laughed; then in her warm-hearted way, "Sit down, Fergus, I'm glad to see you. You should see Kathleen. She's a fine girl now."

Fergus would not sit down. He was evidently at a loss what to say. He shifted his hat uneasily.

"Nelly Carney, thot was, Oi must hurry my wurrd as Oi've Tim Blake in me place down in the yard. Oi've some wurrd of John Conover from a dirthy Chinese that Oi've befriended wunst or twice. He told me, Nelly Carney, thot John has made his foind at last, an' thot three ov the worst min in San Francisco are to be afther not only phwat he's taken oot aliddy, but it will be his life for his claim out there beyant."

Nelly Conover had risen. All the fine lady dropped from her. She ran to Fergus and caught his hand.

"Fergus, Fergus, ye're a friend indeed! Come away with me to John. Get Tim, Denny and Jerry and one of the other boys we can depend on. There's plenty of money. We will go faster than any one; O Fergus, help me for old-time's sake."

"We've no toime thin, to lose," quoth Fergus. "For thot gang is away three hours noo. Be ready whin I come with the b'ys."

An hour or two later Nelly was ready. She had been to the convent to kiss Kathleen, she had dressed herself in her coarse mountain clothing again. The next train north bore the Irishman and Nelly to the little station where she had decided to get off.

It was a short cut, rough and dangerous, that Nelly made up her mind to lead her followers. It was one by which John Conover used to secretly transport his gold. Several times she had tramped with him up and down the pass. She calculated that she could arrive an hour or two after the attacking party if they pushed forward all night. A terrible energy possessed Nelly. Her eyes shone with terror and anxiety. Could they reach John in time? As they plunged onward in the dark she registered a vow never to leave John Conover again if his life was spared.

Toward dawn the party were in sight of Toby's creek. Nelly pointed with shaking finger at the hut near the mountain side. There was a light in the cabin. The party crept up stealthily. Nelly crawled on her hands and knees to the back window. The sight within froze her blood. John Conover was tied and bound before the fire until he was perfectly helpless. Three men were torturing him, Indian fashion, by applying burning sticks to his feet. He would not sign away his claim.

Nelly drew back one second and Fergus took her place. A settled gray look came into the face of the big switchman. He motioned the next man, and all drew their pistols. Fergus crept to the door, motioning Nelly to protect herself. There was a sudden crash-in of the door, three shots and a dash at the window. Nelly fired the pistol that she held straight into the face of the man who came first.

John Conover was always a badly crippled man. He had expected no succor, but he knew Nelly well enough to think she would never relinquish the claim only over his own signature, hardly then. He had resigned himself to die that she might have a fortune. It was a snatch from the grave for him.

Every one knows the Conovers on the two continents. The claim was one of the three best in California. Kathleen was such a fabulous heiress she could have married a dozen titles, but she chose a plain American. She had a young half brother, who, strange as it may seem, was called Fergus from the first. He was a famous athlete in an Eastern college in the '70s, and married an English girl of family. Nelly Conover, a lovely, white-haired old lady, may often be seen in the picture galleries and pleasure gardens of continental cities, walking beside the wheel chair of a genial old gentleman. She kept her vow. No time since that awful hour on the mountain side has she been from John Conover's side.

HORSES NOT YET SUPERSEDED.

Automobiles Will Continue Too Expensive for Common Use.

When the bicycle became so popular, several years ago the enthusiasts claimed that the death knell of the horse had been sounded. They argued that it didn't cost anything to keep a bicycle, while a horse, when he wasn't being used, was eating his head off. But the horse survived and the bicycle fell from popular favor. Now the automobile appears on the scene, and we again hear talk of a horseless age. "To be sure, the automobile is very expensive as yet," the enthusiast will tell you, "but that condition of affairs cannot last long. See how the bicycle was forced down in price." Then he will tell you that the horse is doomed. He forgets that the mere cost of an automobile is only an item. A Philadelphia lawyer, who has just returned from Paris, which is automobile crazy, says that the cost of maintaining one would bankrupt the ordinary citizen. "There are plenty to choose from," he remarked, "with steam, gasoline, petroleum or electric motors. These range in price from $300 for a motor cycle to $3,000 for heavy rigs suitable for carrying four persons and a driver. While in Paris I busied myself to the extent of finding out how much it cost to operate one of these carriages. For a year it's about as follows: Gasoline, $87.50; lubricating oil, $5.45; repairs to carriage, $102.50; repairs to machinery, $185; repairs to tires, $27.50; sundries, $64.80; depreciation, $150; tax, $50; servant, $200. That makes a total of $872.75. Remember, this is for Paris, where my calculations are based upon the actual experience of a friend of mine. But they can't vary much in this country."—Philadelphia Record.

When Henry Irving Was Hissed.

"I was hissed every night for a week when I was playing the provinces about thirty-five years ago," said Henry Irving to a writer in Ainslee's, "I was given an engagement as leading man in a very small theater, and before I made my bow to the audience I learned that the man whose place I had taken was very popular in the vicinity, and that the people strongly disapproved of the way in which the management had forced him to retire, so that when I made my appearance the audience showed their disapproval of the manager by strongly hissing the successor to their favorite, and they kept it up for a week. It was a very unhappy week for me."

Pretty Stiff.

"Corn is pretty plentiful out here?" interrogated the new arrival at Atchison.

"Well, I should say so," responded the citizen. "Why corn is so plentiful out here, neighbor, that the laundries use cornstarch in your shirts. It's too common for pudding."

TALK INTO MEGAPHONE, THE TYPEWRITER DOES THE REST.

The invention of a phono-typewriter by Dr. Frank A. Traver of Racine, Wis., is causing no end of comment throughout the country, and the doctor's mail is becoming so large that he no longer is able to attend to all his correspondence. Inquiries about his wonderful machine are coming from all parts of the country, but so far the doctor refuses to divulge just how his machine works, because he says he is not yet protected by patents. The claim of the doctor is that by talking into a phonograph, which is connected with the typewriter by means of electricity, the machine can be set in motion and made to write on paper what has been dictated into the phonograph. Just how the vibration of the voice is going to set the keys of the typewriter in motion the doctor at this time refuses to disclose, but he says he has convinced his financial backers of the success of the invention and will soon begin the manufacture of the machine.

likely to do more mischief than good."

"But your citizens must read what is going on in the world?"

"Surely. We are not dullards. They buy newspapers from everywhere, north and south. But they get them by mail at their homes and see them in the public library."

"What about lawyers?"

"Well, we have no business for them. A lawyer would starve to death here, if he depended on an income from his business."

"How about doctors?"

"We must have doctors, of course. We have two of them and one dentist. We have four preachers, all picked men, and one photographer. You understand, our town aims at an ideal, and we must be careful. The record of every person who wants to live here or who comes here to seek employment is carefully investigated. His antecedents must be good or he cannot come. His conduct while here must be good or he cannot stay. He cannot own any real estate. The company leases it to him for a limited period on certain conditions. It is therefore no trouble at all for us to get rid of a disagreeable person. These nice stores and the handsome residences for the managers were all built and are leased and owned by the company. It controls every foot of land and everything there is on it."

One of the first things to strike a visitor is the absence of negroes. Not one of them is allowed to live within the city limits. A few of them live just over the line and are given housework to do by some residents of Pelzer. But Capt. Smythe, while not absolutely forbidding this, is doing his utmost to discourage it. It is his policy to do away with all household servants as much as possible and make everybody depend on themselves.

The public library, with free privileges to all residents, is well stocked with up-to-date literature, conveniently catalogued and capably managed. The cotton mills are a marvel. The machinery in them is operated by electricity, generated at a waterfall two miles from the city, on the Saluda river. There is no coal and no steam. The employes go from one floor to another in express elevators. Some of them are not more than 10 years old, but their work is easy and healthy. Their hours are short. They have light, airy rooms to eat their luncheon in. No grease is used in the machinery. The hot air is cooled by huge fans run by machinery.

At definite periods these children are required to leave the mills and go to a school belonging to the company. Education is compulsory. In one of the schools there are 300 pupils, from primary to the average high school grades. Pupils who show unusual ability are selected for a higher course of education. But while a young man or a young woman is getting this education they are also becoming proficient in a trade. In no event that can possibly be foreseen are they likely to become a burden on the State.

GERMAN COLONY IN BRAZIL.

Twenty Per Cent. of the Population in Certain Parts of the Republic.

Consular reports of recent date describe the German colony in southern Brazil—in Parana, Santa Catharina and Rio Grande do Sul, where the climate is bracing and the conditions favorable to the vigorous growth of Europeans. The Germans here number 300,000 out of a total population of 1,500,000. They do not intermarry with the other inhabitants, or "take any part in national politics, or, in anything emanating from the surrounding native element." In financial and commercial importance the German element is strong out of proportion to its numbers, but it prefers to live apart.

"They thus," says the consular report, "create for themselves a condition of isolation which has often given rise to the suspicion that they were endeavoring to establish a political commonwealth for themselves. Nothing could be more erroneous than this supposition. The great difficulty of mastering the Portuguese tongue, in sound and construction so utterly different from their own, and of assimilating with people of the Latin race, with whom they have so little in common, is the cause of their isolation, so often commented upon. They have great difficulty in increasing their ranks from the old country, inasmuch as, for economic and military reasons, the German government does not favor emigration, and there are at present very few Germans desirous of emigrating." Southern Brazil has become a large field for the investment of German capital.—Baltimore Sun.

THE NURSERY.

Some of the Things that the Children Need.

The room selected for the nursery should be if possible large and lofty, with a south aspect, says the St. Louis Star. The walls should be prettily papered and let the pictures and photographs be good, so that the children may be trained from their earliest years to appreciate artistic things. A good picture is full of teaching to a thoughtful child. Cork carpet is better than an ordinary carpet, and there should be a high fender, well secured, before the fire, to avoid accident.

A cupboard in a nursery is most useful and almost necessary. Children love to have a place of their own where they can board their hundred and one treasures, and many a wet morning can be pleasantly passed in turning out and rearranging them.

Gas should never be allowed in a nursery, as it vitiates the atmosphere. A good lamp should be used instead, on a bracket safely out of the way, so that there is no danger of its being overturned. There should be a good, roomy sofa, so that the little ones may lie down if not feeling very well, and a low rocking chair and footstool for the nurse, or, at any rate, a low chair, if the rocking one is not approved of.

A crawling rug is a capital thing for a baby, and it can be decorated and embroidered with all kinds of comic designs and representations of animals, birds, etc. A thermometer should hang on the wall and the temperature be kept as near 60 degrees as possible.

RUTHLESS SLAUGHTER.

The Boers Have Killed Over 60,000 Graceful Giraffes.

The creditable work of the Boers in freeing South Africa of the dreaded lions, which roamed in such numbers that life was rendered unsafe anywhere in the country, is offset by their ruthless destruction of the giraffe from Cape Colony to the Botletli River. If they killed 6,000 lions in the Transvaal before existence was made safe, they have killed 60,000 of the innocent, graceful giraffes. In the early days of South African history the giraffe was the most abundant game in the Transvaal, Matabeleland and Orange Free State, but the creature has been killed off like our American buffalo, and the few remaining representatives of a noble race gradually driven north. For years past the giraffe has been a profitable quarry for the Boer hunters, and the animal was valued by them only because the hides were articles of commercial use. They were not hunted, shot down in droves, and destroyed in the greatest number possible in every direction.

A good giraffe skin is worth from $10 to $20 in South Africa to-day, and much more in Europe. On their hunting trips 10 and 15 years ago it was a common matter for one hunter to kill 40 and 50 of these graceful animals in one day. The reason for this is that the giraffe is the most innocent of animals and is easily hunted. It is absolutely defenseless, and there is hardly a case on record where a wounded giraffe turned upon the hunter. It is true giraffes have great powers of speed, and they can dodge rapidly from tree to tree in the woods, but they offer such a fair mark that these tactics hardly ever save them.

The hide of the animal is its chief article of value. No wonder that the bullets often fail to penetrate this skin, for it is from three-quarters to an inch thick, and as tough as it is thick. The skin, when cured and tanned, makes excellent leather for certain purposes. The Boers make riding whips and sandals out of the skins they do not send to Europe. The bones of the giraffe have also a commercial value. The leg bones are solid instead of hollow, and in Europe they are in great demand for manufacturing buttons and other bone articles. The tendons of the giraffe are so strong that they will sustain an enormous dead weight, which gives to them pecuniary value.

Society for Sock-Darning.

In a neighboring Long Island village the young men have a new privilege. On paying ten cents a week they can have their socks darned by the belles of the village, who have organized themselves into the "Giddy Girls' Darning Club." One of the young ladies noticed a hole in the hose of a young man who was paying her a social visit the other night, and, on comparing notes, it was found that many of the other girls of the village had been impressed by the fact that the beaux of the place needed help in keeping their socks in order. The young man who was admitted to the privileges of the club must not be in the habit of smoking, drinking, playing cards, or doing anything real naughty. All he has to do then is to pay ten cents a week and wear his socks into as many holes as pleases him.—New York Cor. Pittsburg Dispatch.

POTTER PALMER, OF CHICAGO.

He Is Much More than the Husband of a Famous Woman.

The newspaper reading world knows much about Mrs. Potter Palmer, of Chicago. She sprang before the public eye as the president of the Woman's Board of Managers of the World's Fair. More recently, her successful management of the love affairs of Count Cantacuzene and Miss Julia Grant, her niece, has kept alive the public interest in this forceful and attractive woman. Like Mary Ellen Lease, she eclipsed her husband, of whom little ever appears in print. And yet Potter Palmer is a great business man, one of the real makers of Chicago and a power in the financial world—one of those silent forces, which contribute so much to the world's progress.

Potter Palmer was a young man when he located in Chicago fifty years ago. He invested a few thousand dollars in a dry goods store and soon had the cream of the city trade. His surplus cash went into real estate and the soil was fertile. He was a wealthy man when, at the close of the war, he took into partnership with him Marshall Field and Levi Leiter. State street, now Chicago's leading thoroughfare, was then a narrow, dirty lane. Lake street was the commercial center. Potter Palmer proposed to make State street the commercial center. Men ridiculed him, but he went over to the despised street, bought a mile of frontage and commenced building commercial palaces. His firm occupied the first and other firms quickly took others. When the fire of 1871 came, Potter Palmer owned thirty-two buildings on State street. All were destroyed. He borrowed $3,000,000 and rebuilt them, better and stronger than before. Then he looked about for a spot where he might build a home. What is now the magnificent boulevard known as the North Shore drive was then a heap of sand. Here he built and sold adjoining property to the best class of people. The boulevard is the result. Then he built the Palmer House, Chicago's finest hostelry in his day, which it is now said he will tear down in the near future and erect in its stead a commercial palace.

These are a few of the things he has done for Chicago. He has never desired political honors, never sought them. He might have won honors in this field, but they were not to his liking. He has preferred to be the simple business gentleman, eager for the welfare of his city, building always for the public weal as well as his own good. His later years are spent in the midst of artistic surroundings of his exquisite home. There has always been in his nature that vein of sentiment which never desired that Chicago should be of the material only. Parks, boulevards, art treasures, music have to him always seemed as much a legitimate part of the being of the city as mercantile establishments and steam roads. He has enriched Chicago in this direction also.

A GREAT BOER LEADER.

Gen. Cronje, Who Opposed the British at Modder River.

While Gen. Joubert, commander-in-chief of the Boer forces, is the tactician, Gen. Cronje, who commanded the Boers at the Modder River, is the burly fighter of the Transvaal army. Of the two Cronje is the more representative Boer. Joubert, possibly from his French ancestry, is a man of a certain polish, and can be indirect when policy requires. Cronje is blunt and always to the point. His craft is that of the hunter, and thinly disguises the force that awaits only the opportunity.

GEN. CRONJE.

Gen. Cronje is greatly admired by the Boers. They think Joubert is a wonderful tactician and organizer, but they love Cronje, the silent man, of sudden and violent action. He is no man's friend. His steel-gray eyes peer out from under huge, bushy brows. He never speaks unless necessary, and then in the fewest words. He never asks a favor. When time for action comes he acts, and that with the force of fate, and with no consideration for himself or his men.

Cronje is a soldier and nothing else. He hates form. He hates politics, though a born leader of men. He was strongly urged to oppose Kruger for the Presidency in 1898, but he would not. He will have none of any rule but that of the rifle. He despises cities. He is a man of the veld.

It was Cronje who rounded up the Jameson raiders and, says a writer, "his maneuvering on that occasion was that of a Cromwell. So far as my memory carries, Cronje was not even specifically thanked by the Volksraad for his great service to the state. He was a burgher; it was his duty to repel the invader; he repelled him—and there the matter rested.

"They would have censured him had he failed; they refrained from comment when he succeeded.

"Cronje, riding back to Pretoria, had no guard of honor to receive him, no great civic function to fete him, no sword of honor to adorn him. He was plain Peasant Cronje, returning, heavy-hearted, from his wounded son's pallet in Krugersdorp Hospital, somewhat weary in the bones from those long hours in the steaming saddle, nowise elated, nowise altered from his every-day demeanor.

"Since then Cronje has received a seat in the Executive Council, and is now a personage with a substantial state salary; but the man is in no way changed. He is as individual as Kruger, strong in the faith of his own generalship as Joubert."

PET SUPERSTITIONS.

Some that Influence Mostly All Sorts of People.

Dr. Samuel Johnson would never enter a room left foot foremost; the brave Marshal Saxe screamed in terror at the sight of a cat; Peter the Great was not equal to crossing a bridge when he came to it, unless to do so was absolutely necessary; Byron shared with less famous people than he the dislike to having the salt at table spilled between him and his neighbor. A sneeze is with half the nations of the world nothing to be sneezed at. To exclaim "God bless you" when any one sneezes in your presence is a relic of what the Roman did before us, and before him the Greek. Mohammed gives directions of the same kind to his followers, and the Hindu of to-day utters his pious ejaculation after the sneeze by way of prayer or good wish on behalf of the victim.

Many people will avoid going under a ladder if they can get around it. The belief that if you put on your stocking the wrong side out it is lucky is very general, or was until the schoolmaster returned from abroad; and I myself remember an old woman who was convinced that turning her stocking inside out saved her from being lost when the fairies, one pitch-dark night, had misled her on a trackless English moor.

What is to take the place of a lucky horseshoe when we all ride in automobiles? There is no room for the imagination in them. Some new mascot will have to be discovered. Charms of one kind or another are carried by people that have a pious contempt for heathen superstitious; a small potato, for example, to avert rheumatism, or a chestnut. The late journalist, George Augustus Sala, never traveled without carrying with him, as a lucky card, an ace of spades. Somehow it failed to save him from his creditors. But creditors are notoriously deficient in imagination. If Shylock had remembered this when he drew up his bond "The Merchant of Venice" would never have been written.—Rochester Post-Express.

Nobody Claimed the Watch.

"Great Scott! but that's a fine watch," came from a chorus. "Where'd you ever get it?"

"Stole it," answered its possessor, calmly. "You don't believe me, do you?" he went on. "Well, I'll tell you how it happened. I was on a western district which enjoyed the reputation of being the toughest one covered by the house. I had some time to kill and so went into one of the gambling joints. It isn't necessary to go into details as to what happened. As luck would have it there were a half dozen others in the place besides myself who might be considered as possible victims. When the time came the lights were put out suddenly and then we had 'rough house' for about ten minutes. In the middle of it I felt somebody grab my watch and reached out after him. I caught someone and felt that he was just putting a watch in his trousers pocket. I gave his wrist a hard wrench and got the timepiece. Then I broke away. When I got to the light I found the watch was this one. And as I never heard from the owner I have it to compensate for the loss of mine."

After which the waiter hurried over in response to six different signals.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Influenza Caused by Ozone.

On one occasion the present writer walked to the edge of Lake Michigan when a strong wind was blowing right from the lake. The bodily condition was as near perfect as could be, and yet in less than five minutes there was every evidence of having caught an extremely hard cold. The severe influenza continued until, on walking away, in less than 500 feet, it disappeared as if by magic. It is very certain that the temperature had nothing to do with this, nor the wind, but the influenza was directly due to the abundant ozone in the air. By inquiry it was learned that hundreds of residents who had lived upon the immediate edge of the lake had been obliged to move back three or four miles in order to relieve themselves from such experiences. Physicians readily admit that it is not always possible to say why one "catches" cold; it certainly cannot always be because of undue exposure or change in temperature, but probably also to changes in the electric condition of the air. Facts of this kind should lead to the extremest caution in studying the supposed relation between the weather and health.—Popular Science.

Advice to a Daughter.

If you want to please the men,
Daughter mine;
Learn a little bit of art,
Some good poetry by heart,
Languages to wit impart,
Music fine.
Know the proper way to dress,
How to comfort and caress,
Dance a little, gossip less,
Daughter mine.

If you want to please the men,
Daughter mine;
Study how to make a cake,
Learn to stew and boil and bake,
Say you cook for cooking's sake,
How divine—
Be a housewife, all the rest
Counts but little, truth confessed,
Such girls always marry best,

IT IS A QUEER TOWN.

WILL OF ONE MAN IS ITS ONLY LAW.

A South Carolina Community Which Thrives Without Municipal Officials, Newspapers, Lawyers or Saloons—Negroes Are Positively Not Admitted.

Pelzer, a South Carolina town of 7,000 population, is probably the queerest little city in the United States. It has existed for twelve years and has never had a mayor, municipal government, courts, police or newspapers. The town has four large cotton mills that employ about 3,000 operatives and consume 150,000 bales of cotton each year. In one of these great mills there are 60,000 spindles at work in one room, all run by electricity. In the working equipment all that is old is discarded; all that is new and progressive eagerly welcomed, no matter what the expense. Managed by one corporation on thoroughly altruistic principles, hundreds of children who work in these mills earn from 2 to 60 cents a day, and a certain portion of the machinery is shut down at stated intervals each working day to allow them to attend school.

Obedience is the constitution on which the government of the town rests. The word applies to only one thing—the will and wishes of Capt. John Smythe. His edict rules the city as absolutely as the famous "by order of the Czar" rules the Russians, and the moral persuasion he exercises over his population can be compared only to the deference shown to Oom Paul in the troubled Transvaal.

This kingdom-city is within from one to three hours' railway journey of Atlanta, Greenville, Charleston and a number of other prominent Southern cities involved in close business relations with it; it has a large export trade in special cotton stuffs to China; it is constantly purchasing raw material, everywhere. Yet if you ask a man who thinks he understands the South pretty well, who lives here, and who imagines he knows all that is going on here, where Pelzer is, he will not be able to tell you.

The recent experience of a roving lyceum lecturer is interesting. He was making a tour of the South in the hands of an advance agent and found the name Pelzer on his list. He asked the hotel clerk in Atlanta about it.

"Never heard of it," said the man who generally knows it all.

The lecturer consulted a map and could not find it. Finally he took a train for Greenville, where the station agent told him Pelzer was about twenty miles distant.

CAPTAIN JOHN SMYTHE.

"Never been there myself," he remarked, "but I've been told it's quite a place. Queer folks, but they're all right."

The lecturer settled back in his seat. He believed he was in for a dismal talk to forty or fifty persons; a dingy hall with a smoky lamp and rickety chairs; badly paved streets and no cab at the depot to take him to a wretched hotel. He made up his mind that he would have something unpleasant to say to that advance agent when he saw him again. When he reached Pelzer he thought he had made a mistake. There was a roomy, well-lighted railroad station, and a gentleman who introduced himself as the Democratic postmaster of the city was there to meet him.

"How does it look for an audience?" inquired the lecturer, with an anxious eye to business.

"Oh, very good. I think you will have at least 600 persons out to hear you."

"Wh-wh-a-t? How large is your town?"

"M-m. About 7,000. More, perhaps."

Night had come on and the lecturer looked around on well-lighted and well-paved streets. He saw no corner loiterers. In fact, most of the shops were shut. He had a comfortable meal at the hotel. The postmaster left him to himself, as he had to go home to take his folks to the lecture. An hour later the lecture hall—roomy, bright and cheerful as the usual Y. M. C. A. halls he had been speaking in elsewhere—was well filled with attentive and appreciative listeners. What the lecturer did say to his advance agent when he caught up with him was that it was one of the most charming stopping places on his route, and that he wanted to go there again.

There were no reporters at the lecture to take the synopsis that the speaker had prepared for them, and there was no newspaper account of it next morning because Ruler Smythe will not have a newspaper published in the town. Editors and reporters are forbidden to live there.

"We have no mayor," said a resident of the town. "No necessity for one. We have no aldermen, no courts, no municipal councils, no police. The residents keep the peace and get along comfortably without any buncombe of that sort. We have no drunkenness because we don't permit liquor within the city limits, and drunkenness furnishes more than half the business of a police force."

"What is your objection to newspapers?"

"Nothing personal, only the residents seem to think we get along better without them. Local papers publish a lot of local gossip, and gossip is always

C. C. WALTER, County chairman.
D. M. LINK, Secretary.

Hon. James M. Robinson.

From the Newspaper Correspondence of E. G. Siggers, Washington.

The debate on the currency bill in the House of Representateves was continued on Wednesday from 11 o'clock in the morning untill 10:30 in the evening. Among those who addressed the House in opposition to the bill, was Congressman James M. Robinson of Indiana who made a vigorous speech. Mr. Robinson declared that it was the design of the bill to retire the greenbacks, "the people's money", and to clothe the national banks with the power to issue money in lieu of the government greenbacks, the plan being but the first step in a policy which intends to destroy silver as a money, except as a subsidiary coin. Mr. Robinson also paid his respects at length to the Reed rules, which practically place the House at the mercy of the Speaker, and in the instance of the currency bill restrict the speakers of the minority to five minutes' discussion of a measure which is to change the entire banking and financial policy of the Nation. The speech was accorded careful attention and at several points was generously applauded.

The County Commissioners.

The Board of Commissioners met in special session today to clear up the county business for the past year and get ready to begin work under the new law. Among other business transacted was the awarding of contratts for supplies to be furnished the county farm for the quarter ending March 30.

For the groceries there were three bids, as follows: O. E. Clay, $57.25; Frank A. Hoff, $58.45; Geo. F. Leyda, $58.83. The contract was awarded to Mr. Clay. But one bid was made on dry goods, that of Schaab & Bro. for $15.75, and they were given the contract.

A Postmaster's View of it.

BLOOMINGDALE, Ind., Feb. 20, '99. Pepsin Syrup Co.

Gentlemen:—After having given Dr. Caldwell's Syrup a fair trial in my family, I unhesitatingly pronounce it a great boon to all suffering from indigestion, constipation and dyspepsia in all their forms with all their train of evil consequences I have fought constipation and dyspepsia of a severe character for 25 years, have employed the most skilled physicians that I could reach, have spent hundreds of dollars and now I find more relief in this pleasant remedy than I have in anything else. To all persons of sedentary occupations in life, I wish to say, buy it and use it. I have spent 12 years at the postmaster's desk, averaging 14 hours per day, and know now if I had had this remedy years ago it would have saved me much suffering.—Yours respectfully, W. M. McCOY, Postmaster, Bloomingdale, Ind.

A Unique Cane.

John C. Sommers, now at Pueblo, Colorado, sent Geo. McCord for a Christmas gift, a cane made by an inmate of their state prison. It is not only a queer cane but is the work of a man with a strange history.

In the winter of 1878-79, a man named Packard, and some partners, were mining in the Gunnison district. They ran out of provisions, and owing to the severity of the winter, the depth of the snow and the distance to a settlement they were reduced to starvation. Whether Packard was crazed by hunger and suffering, or from mere hunger alone, may never be known, but it is believed, and substantially proved later, that he killed his companions and subsisted that winter on their flesh. Probably the details of the horrible transaction will never be fully known. But Packark wus tried for the crime and given a life sentence in the state prison. During his long confinement as is the case with many prisoners, he occupied a part of his time in making various articles, and among them, was this cane. The most of us have seen the canes made in our own penitentiary, by rings of leather on a steel rod. But this cane, instead of leather has rings of horn, of various colors, so as to give it a striking appearance. The cane is quite heavy, the steel center rod being of good size, with a steel point and head of dark colored horn. The cane is highly polished and dressed to eight sides, and with it one could strike a terrible blow. Mr. Sommers received it as a gift from the employes of the St. Cloud hotel at Canyon City, and sends it to his former neighbor as a Christmas gift. He writes Mr. McCord, that efforts are being made to have Packard pardoned as he has served about twenty-one years, and besides, there is a feeling that under the terrible circumstances he was probably not in a condition to be responsible for his crime. We might add that Mr. Sommers' letter says his wife has been in poor health for several months.

A Christmas Entertainment

The teacher and pupils of district No. 6, in Fairfield township, gave an entertainment to the public, December 23. The school room was decoarted with evergreens, beautiful colored crayon drawings on the board, and a Christmas tree whose boughs were laden with candles and many presents of various kinds. After a well prepared programme of fourteen declamation, six dialogues and fourteen songs was delivered, sleigh bells were heard when presently, appeared Santa Clause dressed in great attire. The presents were then distributed, consisting mostly of candies and peanuts for the pupils, a large stocking full of dainties for Santa Clause, and a beautiful handkerchief box presented to the teacher by the pupils. At the close of the entertainment, which was well represented by the patrons of the school, a song was extended a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to All. "May the tender cords of love that have thus been united, grow so strong between teacher and pupils, that they may never be broken." CHAS M. REINOEHL.

FOR HOARSNESS.

Benj. Ingerson, of Hutton, Ind says: he had not spoken above a whisper for months, and one bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar restored his voice. It is used very largely by speakers and singers. H. B. McCord.

Has Many Strong Features.

In these degenerate days of peculiar farce and blood curdling melodrama, it seems like a ray of sunshine on a cloudy day to be able to announce the coming of an attraction that appeals to all that is best in amusement seekers. Mr. Hennessy Leroyal and his talentedcompany of players, among whom are Miss May Sargent, will be pleasently remembered for her strong performonce and of scheming coquette Kielka Van Sittart last season; Mr. Addison Pitt, son of the famous Harry M. Pitt who figured in the Frohman, Daly and Boston Museum Stock Company; Miss Helen Young, San Francisco's popular favorite; Nellie Jones and Delancy Barclay, four years with Harrigan productions. These clever people will present the jingling comedy "Other People's Money" at Henry's opera house tomorrow night.

IT HITS THE SPOT.

When Suffering from a severe cold and your throat and lungs feel sore, take a dose of Foleys Honey and Tar when the soreness will be at once relieved, a warm grateful feeling and healing of parts affected will be experienced and you will say: "It feels so good. IT HITS THE SPOT." Guaranteed. H. B. McCord.

Some Subscribers

As usual, at New Years we find a few subscribers to the Weekly COURIER who have allowed their accounts to go delinquent several years. We are obliged to drop them from our list, and arrange to secure the collection. These small accounts should not be permitted to run so long. Nearly every one on our books could settle up if he tried. Why not call or write? Now is a good time to catch up.

At the Reformed Church

This glad festival, at the coming of which all christian and non-christians rejoice, was preceded at the Reformed church by a preparatory service on Sunday morning, and the children's entertainment Sunday evening. Christmas morning after an earnest sermon by the pastor, holy supper was celebrated. All the members desired to be reunited with Christ. After the supper Mr. Chas. Gatrood and Miss Elizabeth Miser were united in holy wedlock. The ceremony was indeed impressive, and will be remembered by all present. The congregation is of good cheer, and is entertaining the best of hope for the future welfare and success of this church.

Fine Entertainment.

The world-famous DeMoss family will play and sing at the Presbyterian church next Monday evening, January 1, beginning at 8 o'clock. Admission, popular prices, 15, 25 and 35 cents. Tickets for sale at Fischler's drug store and Dr. Baxter's office. This will be the opportunity of the season to hear fine and varied music. Forty-two different instruments are used during this performance, showing that there is music in nearly everything, is we only know how to bring it out. One of the players plays two cornet at the same time, soprano on one and alto on the other.

This distinguished company had the honor to be engaged for the whole of the season during the world's fair at Chicago in 1893 and co inposed much of the music used during the great exposition. In many respects this company is unrivaled and in few surpassed you will surely fail to enjoy a rare treat if do not come to the Presbyteryan church next Monday evening. This entertainment will be fully up to the high standard of the entertainments given at this church lately. Nothing frivolous or improper about it. Educational and edifying throughout.

Family Reunion.

On Monday, Dec. 25, at the home of Mother McDowell on South Jackson street, her children, their wives, husbands and children to the number of thirty-two assembled to eat with her their Chrismas dinner. All the children except the youngest son, "Doc," who is in Chicago, were in attendance. The children present with their husbands and wives were Mr. and Mrs. Fowler McDowell, Ottowa Lake, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. H. C. McDowell of Petoskey, Mich; Mr. and Mrs. Al. McDowell, of Hudson, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. W. H. McDowell, Mr. and Mrs E. E. McDowell, Mr. and Mrs. Tim McDowell, Mr. and Mrs. James McDowell and Miss Eunice McDowell of Auburn; Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Boyer of Muncie and Rev. and Mrs. O. E Eagy of Reading, Mich. These together with twelve of the grandchildren made a pleasant and enjoyable company, who partook of a bountiful dinner of roast turkey backed up by all that goes to make up a first-class Christmas feast, not omitting "a cup of coffee like your mother used to make." After a number of snap-shot pictures of the table crowd and various groups the remainder of the day was spent in conversation and family reminices, and around the family fireside the oldest of them grew young once more and lived their happy boyhood and girlhood over again.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sample bottles at O. P Barber's, Corunna.

Latest News of the Day.

Saturday's Daily.

One of the strangest accidents ever recorded, happened in Italy yesterday afternoon at Amalfi, a popular tourist resort on the Gulf of Salerno. There was an enormous rock or cliff jutting into the sea and on this stood the largest resort hotel and another was at its base, as well as monastery and several villas. Suddenly and without warning the vast rock loosened and slid into the sea, carrying all the buildings named, along with it. Its course threw it onto four vessels, taking them and their crews to the bottom. The mass of earth that was slid off contained not less than 50,000 cubic yards. It is believed that the loss of life is heavy, including a number of monks and the occupants of the hotel. As yet it is impossible to ascertain the exact number.

It will be remembered that the author Winston Churchill, who is a youger brother of the Duke of Marlborough, was captured with the armored train near Colenso. He was only a correspondent, but was taking a leading part in the fight. He was carried to Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal, and been held with the other prisoners. He has managed to escape and has reached the sea at Delagoa Bay. It is believed he will bring interesting news.

Amalfi is a small, but lively town of 7,000 inhabitants, situated at the entrance of a deep ravine, surrounded by imposing rocks and mountains of the most picturesque forms. The Capuchin monastery was founded in 1212 by Cardinal Pietro Capuano for the Cisterians, but came into possession of the Capuchins in 1583. The building which stood in the hollow of the great rock that rose abruptly from the sea to a height of 230 feet, contained fine cloisters.

A Life and Death Fight.

Mr. W. A. Hines of Manchester, Ia., writing of his almost miraculous escape from death, says: "Exposure after measles induced serious lung trouble, which ended in Consumption. I had frequent hemorrhages and coughed night and day. All my doctors said I must soon die. Then I began to use Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption, which completely cured me. I would not be without it even if it cost $5 00 a bottle. Hundreds have used it on my recommendation and all say it never fails to cure Throat, Chest and Lung trouble." Regular size 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at McCORD'S Drug Store.

Art Calendar.

One of the handsomest calendars that has appeared for the new year represents children playing on the broad beach of one of our Atlantic Coast resorts. The youngest, a little tot, is defying the approaching tide of the ocean and in a spirit of bravado calls out to his companions who are eagerly watching him, "Who's Afraid?"

Copy of this calendar, carefully mailed in strawboard to protect in transmitting, will be mailed on receipt of 10 cents in postage stamps by W. B. Kniekern, G. P. & T. A., Chicago & North-Western Ry, Chicago, Ill.

Early application should be made as the edition is limited.

Family Reunion.

The following spent Christmas with Mr. A. L. McBride, wife and three children at Mark Center, Ohio:

Mr. A. D. Wade, wife and two children from Montpelier, Ohio; Mrs. Haley and son Emery, and Mr. and Mrs. Levi McBride from Butler; Mr. George Grund, wife and daughter, Ruth; Mr. C. C. McBride, wife and three children and the four children of F. M. Rush from Auburn.

All report a good time and plenty of good things to eat. There was a fine family picture taken, also, which all prized very highly.

NOTICE.

We, the undersigned, do hereby agree to refund the money on a 50 bottle of Downs' Elixir if it does not cure any cough, cold, croup, whooping cough or throat trouble. We also guarantee Downs' Elixir to cure consumption, when used according to directions, or money back. A full dose on going to bed and small doses during the day will cure the most severe cold and stop the most distressing cough. E. M. FISCHLER, F. E. DAVENPORT, HOWARD MCCORD.

Build 'em a Wagon.

(Hudson Banner.)

Auburn has doubtless the best cornet band in northern Indiana and has better backing financially of any other we know of, and wouldn't it be a great take for it to build in its factories there an automobile band wagon? There are no finer carriage manufactories in the state than are to be found in that city, and then they have a fine buggy bed manufactory also, and skilled machinists to build the power department, all these becoming advertisements for the city. A few automobile band concerts and the liberality of the manufacturers of that city would make a great drawing card wherever the band went, especially at the big political gatherings. We charge nothing for this suggestion, only so that we may hear the band play from the horseless wagon.

—Indianapols will entertain a number of democratic, republican and populist politicians this week, all preparing for the battle of 1900.

—The big DeWald store at Fort Wayne burned this morning. Loss said to exceed a million on building and contents. Partly insured, —E. G. Melendy of Fremont is one of the twenty-one canidates for the position of commandant of the state soldiers' home at Lafayette.

—Chapped hands, cracked lips and roughness of the skin cured quickly by Banner Salve, the most healing ointment in the world. 25c. H. B. McCord.

—We get our word "honeymoon" from the fact that our Saxon ancestors had a habit of drinking only diluted honey for the first thirty days after marriage.

—Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Ryan of Attica, Ind., are guests of relatives here. As this was their home many years they find many old neighbors to greet them.

—It is stated that Gov. Mount in behalf of the state, will bring suit against the Standard Oil Co. in order to test the constitutionality of the anti-trust law.

—LOST:—A lady's pocketbook with some money and a check and several tickets from Clay's store. Finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at this office.

—Roy VanAuken, a prominent stock buyer of Fayette, Ohio, was the guest of his cousin, J. J. VanAuken and family last night on his way home from Chicago.

—Fox's "Forex:"—The best butter crackers that ever went down the long red lane. No others taste like them. Distinctive and away above the best of other brands.

—Our mens' and boy's winter suits and overcoats will be sold at a sacrifice. We are going to sell every garment within the next two months.—G. H. YESBERA, Auburn.

—E. S. Lantzenheiser two miles north of Garrett will grind feed for you and do saw gumming in a satisfactory manner. Call on him when you want work done in his line.

—The person who disturbed the congregation last Sunday by coughing, is requested to call on H. B. McCord and get a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar, which always gives relief.

—The Continental limited on the Wabash last Saturday made the run from Peru to Danville, 102 miles, in 117 minutes, including three stops. This is thirty-eight minutes under the regular schedule time.

—Esquire Walter this morning rendered his decision in the case of E. E. Firestone against Smith & Higley publishers of the Dispatch, for damages for breach of contract, giving the plaintiff judgment for $6 and costs. The case will probably be appealed to the circuit court. Moody & Rickel were attorneys for the plaintiff and Rose & Rose for the defense.

—There was a pleasant gathering at the home of Gen. and Mrs. Blair in Waterloo yesterday when the following persons helped them to get away with a fine 24-pound turkey: Messrs. and Mesdames Geo. Smiley and Guy Schutt Carl Schutt and son, August Fetter, wife and son. We are sorry we could not have been present to enjoy the visit and the feast of good things.

—About the finest Christmas entertainment we ever witnessed was that at the Presbyterian church Saturday evening. The exercises were all excellent and in such good taste. They showed thorough drill and much thought, and all were delighted with them. We are told that Miss Ines Rose should have credit for most of the work that made it such a splendid success.

—A young man named Craig, who was a member of one of the Ft. Wayne companies during the Spanish-American war and later enlisted in a company of regulars, was tried a few days ago for desertion. He was found guilty and was sentenced to two years at hard labor in the military prison at Fort Sheridan.

—Place your confidence in a remedy that is guaranteed to cure. "I coughed constantly and my strength was all exhausted. I looked more like one dead than alive. Beggs' Cherry Cough Syrup entirely cured me."—Mrs. S. D. Harsh, Fairport Kan. For all throat and lung troubles. It has never failed. —Sold by H. B. MCCORD.

—F. K. Blake and wife of Chicago were here yesterday and today calling on old friends and neighbors. Both are well and appear to be prospering. As Mr. Blake is now an alderman, we expected to see him getting fat, but that is not the case. However, we were glad to see him, and always rejoice with the DeKalb boy that gets to the front.

—Several parties have come to the commissioners and complained of the character of refuse matter being dumped at the fill between the Wabash track and the wagon road bridge over the creek at the south end. Ordinary refuse is all right they say, but old tin and such things that scare horses makes it dangerous there, as the road is on an embankment and between the railroad and bridge.

Colic and Diarrhoea.

Cured and corrected by the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This rmeedy restores the natural action of the stomach and bowels, and is better than a remedy that checks, but does not correct the conditions. Sold and recommended by H. B. McCord.

WHITE & CUTTER.

Got it Wrong

Some one has been circulating a story, that the county commissioners, and county officers have not paid off the county debt, but that the money used by the treasurer to pay orders when presented, is borrowed money. This is not true. Since last spring, orders have been cashed when presented and from money in the treasury derived from the taxes paid in. Let those who believe otherwise, show where any money has been borrowed. And for what reason would the county borrow money and pay 8 per cent when its own orders would draw only 6? And there are plenty of people ready to take the orders. It will also be noticed that the last call for orders made by Treasurer Hines says "All" orders, and that interest has stopped. The only possible chance that the county may be obliged to borrow money lies in the provisions of the "reform" law. This goes into effect Jan. 1, 1900, and as we understand it, the various sums appropriated by the county council must be paid out of the funds derived from the taxes they levied, and which will not be in the treasury till the taxes come in next May.

Advance a Step.

If you have been in the habit of taking pills for your constipation and with no results, just try a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you will be surprised at the result. A very pleasant laxative. 10 cents, 50 cents and $1. Sold and recommended by H. B. McCord.

BUTLER.

Charley Metcalf continues very poorly.

W. H. Weber and wife of Ashley spent last Sabbath with Eli Bryan's. Mr. Weber is an engineer on the Wabash.

Peter Helwig was reported a little better at last reports. He has obtained a divorce from his late wife, Anna Rentch. Their union proved to be a transitory affair.

"If it was so soon done for,
What was it begun for?"

Oviatt Campbell, wife and babies, started across the country with a horse and buggy for VanWert, Ohio, last week. The cold weather will make their journey a very unpleasant one.

The writer, wife and Florence, left Butler for a short holiday visit in Michigan last Saturday morning over the Lake Shore by the way of Elkhart, White Pigeon and Kalamazoo. We reached our destination all right on Saturday morning, and are now snowbound in VanBuren county. Times are reported rather hard here, but the display of Christmas presents on a Christmas tree at Kendall, on Saturday night did not betray its immediate presence.

A failure of the peach crop and the wheat crop, and the low price of potatoes makes the farmers complain. Soft roads with about six inches of drifted snow makes travel nearly impossible. This may materially shorten and hinder our visit.

Died at her home two miles east of Butler, December 18, 1899, in the 86th year of her age. Nancy Gaff was born near Massillon, Ohio, June 6, 1814, where she grew to womanhood, and on January 29, 1842, was married to Joseph Brown. To this union were born five children, three of whom, Samantha, John and Jerome C., and her aged husband survive her. They removed to DeKalb county in October 1849, settling on the farm two miles east of Butler where she spent fifty-two years of her life. She became a member of the U. B. church in 1849, and remained a faithful member until death. Her funeral took place from the Gunsenhouser church at Big Run, December 21, 1899, Rev. McCloe officiating.

Santa Claus visited district No. 8 of Fairfield township in full uniform Saturday afternoon. He entered immediately at the close of the program. His work of distributing the presents from a beautiful Christmas tree was well performed. How pleased the little ones were to have good old Santa to pat them on their heads when they received a present. He presented the teacher with a beautiful necktie box, purchased by the scholars. As soon as possible he departed to be at No. 6 in the evening.

SEDAN.

A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to everybody.

Mr. Charlie Schweder is at home visiting his mother, (also his best girl.)

Mr. Nelson Trees and family of Ligonier are spending the holidays in Sedan.

Mr. O. L. Wheaton and wife were in Waterloo Sunday the guests of Mrs. Rorebaugh.

The protracted meeting at Maple Grove still continues with good success. May the good work go on.

Will Casselman and family are spending the holidays in Sedan. Will reports lots of work in Kendallville.

Mrs. Thomas Dilgard and children are spending the holidays with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Shiply Wilson.

Willis Wheaton is here for a short visit with his parents and other friends. Willis is employed in the railroad shops at Port Huron, Michigan.

Miss B. L. Hine spent last week in the vicinity of Lake James. We did not learn whether B. L. was hooking the finny tribe or prospecting, or what.

He Got the Watch.

There were several different versions last week as to that transaction by which the street fakir was cheated out of a gold watch or by which somebody was cheated by the fakir. It was said to implicate Emanuel Swander, but it turns out to have been George Swander, who lives near town, and his story puts a different light on the affair. He showed us last Saturday, the watch he got, and also dazzled our eyes with a right of the $20 gold piece he got at the same time. He said he had guessed the right one of the pocket books that had the $20 bill in and when the fakir handed him the twenty-five cents he had offered to anyone who could guess correctly, the fellow slyly slipped a $20 gold piece into his hand, with a wink, that meant for George to try it again, so he put up $15 to get the watch and a pocket book with a $20 bill in it. He got the watch all right but the $20 bill in the pocket book turned out to be a $1 bill. But he was not a loser as he already had a quarter and a $20 gold piece which made $21.25 cash, and the watch. The watch was runing all right when we saw it and the gold piece was genuine. Still we would advise all our readers to let these fakirs alone.

Court Proceeding.

As heretofore noted, business was resumed in the circuit court yesterday morning with Judge Adair of Columbia City on hand to try several cases in which Judge Hartman had been interested as attorney prior to his election.

The first case heard was that of Martin C. Sheets and others against Isolene L. and Irvin Rader, which has been on the docket since January, 1897. After hearing the arguments of attorneys the court took the case under advisement.

In the case of Samuel Stone vs. Margaret Swinehart, to quiet title, judgment was rendered for defendant at her costs.

David Maxwell appeared in court yesterday and asked privilege to adopt Paul Porter, whose mother died some time ago. Emmet Porter, the child's father, was in court and gave his consent to the adoption, whereupon the court granted the petition.

The case of Martha E. Love vs. James Love, for divorce, was heard today and attracted considerable attention. The grounds for complaint were cruel treatment and failure to provide, but the defendant made a vigorous defense. The parties are from Wilmington township.

Among the cases which Judge Adair has been asked to try are: Sisson & Lilly Co., vs. the town of Waterloo, on orders issued to pay for the town building. Frank S. Roby vs. Michael F. Long and others; this is the case growing out of the division of attorneys' fees in the Kelly-Wabash case.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

CRIMINAL AGGRESSION.

President McKinley has undoubtedly been guilty of criminal aggression in his assumption of war making power in the Philippines. In December, 1898, the President instructed Gen. Otis to enter upon a war of conquest and subjugation. This was before the peace treaty with Spain was signed.

Referring to this fact, Francis A. Brooks, a well-known Boston lawyer, says:

"But the crowning offense of President McKinley in this matter is the use made by him of the treaty-making power as the means of acquiring from Spain dominion and control by the United States over the political condition of a remote people against their will, and by employing the army and navy to accomplish that end. We suppose that the treaty-making power was conferred on the President by the constitution in the interest of peace, and that it is a gross abuse and perversion of that power to employ or avail of it as an excuse for subjecting an unwilling people to the dominion of the United States, as is now being done by the President."

President McKinley has taken upon himself a fearful responsibility. A responsibility ungranted by the constitution and unapproved by the people. There would have been no war in the Philippines if McKinley had offered the same terms there which were granted to the Cubans. Upon McKinley's conscience must rest the burden of causing the death of thousands of American soldiers and the expenditure of hundreds of millions of the people's money.

It is vain for the President to claim in his message to Congress that he has simply been engaged in maintaining the authority of our government. He has made war without authority, and Congress, with which body the war-making power rests, should recognize this fact and demand an accounting. But should Congress fail to do this, owing to the fact that it is now a creature of the Republican administration, the people will not fail to make such a demand and the result of the Presidential election of 1900 will be to deprive McKinley of any further power to usurp authority and to court criminal aggression.

Farmers and the Trusts.

Do the farmers realize that the Republican party proposes to keep the trusts in power? Realizing this, do they not also realize that they are taxed by the trusts much more heavily than by the Government, and that to vote the Republican ticket is to vote a continuance and an increase of this tax?

Take the matter of steel nails. Last year before the trust was fully organized the farmer sold his wheat for 65 cents a bushel and bought a keg of nails, needed on the farm, for $1.65. How is it this year, when the Republican party has encouraged, fostered and protected the nail trust? The farmer sells his wheat for 62 cents a bushel and pays $3.85 for a keg of nails. Somehow or another this farmer has been cheated out of three bushels and a half of wheat. Who did it? The Republican party, which upholds the nail trust.

Another illustration of just how these lovely Republican trusts work is given by the Cincinnati Enquirer as follows: "The workingman, earning $9 a week, who last year put a tin roof on his front porch, paid $2.45 for the box of tin, and had $6.55 left out of his week's wages. This year when he put a trust tin roof on his back porch he had to pay $4.85 for the box of tin and had $4.15 left out of his week's earnings. That man has no doubt discovered who stole the $2.40."

With these facts in view, what are the farmers and the workingmen going to do about the matter? It would seem the course of wisdom for them to vote against the Republican party, which is taxing them to the very limit of endurance. They know that they can hope for nothing but a continuance of this taxation as long as the Republican party remains in power. Will they continue to aid the oppressors and to place the yoke on their own necks?

Dilemma of the Protectionists.

There are things working together for good in our tariff system. We are pleading with the strongest for the the open-door policy. Can we justly prohibit trade at home which we demand abroad? We are seeking a world market for our manufactured product. Will our people submit to paying more for any of these products at home than they are sold for abroad? We are competing successfully with the so-called "pauper labor" of the world. Will we at home believe it is longer necessary to protect ourselves against it at home? We are aroused by the existence of trusts; we are determined to control or destroy them. Can we do either when, and so far as, they are protected by our tariff laws?

We have for these many years paid bounties to all sorts of private enterprises, indirectly and in unknown amounts. This tax was paid by the consumers in proportion to their necessities, and not in ratio to their ability. We are now asked to pay a bounty directly to ship owners out of the common treasury. Will the people stand it? The beneficiaries of the old system are grown bold and ask from the treasury as a right what they have before taken indirectly from the individuals. All these things and more are driving the system of protection to the wall. McKinley did not even mention it in his message. Protectionists are driven to a dilemma from which they cannot escape. The territorial expansion has forced them to it. Trade expansion would have done it, anyway. They cannot advocate either expansion and hold to protection at home.—Milwaukee Journal.

Seamen Denounce Ship Subsidies.

The action of the National Seamen's Union, at the annual convention in Chicago, on Saturday, may cost the Hanna-Payne ship subsidy bill the votes of some members of Congress who had been won to its support on the supposition that it would be popular among the seamen, as well as among the interested ship owners and shipbuilders. One of the strongest claims made for the bill is that it will tend to build up the merchant marine of the United States, and so give employment to a great number of American seamen. Special efforts have been made to secure the support of the labor interests for the measure on that ground. That element of the labor class most directly interested, the seamen, cannot be brought to look at it in this light. At the national convention a resolution was adopted severely condemning the scheme and declaring it "vicious, uncalled for, and of no benefit to labor in this country." President McKinley strongly recommended the principle of the bill in his recent message because it would bring "more work and wages to our countrymen." He will be pained to learn that the class of "our countrymen" he supposed would be most particularly benefited with "more work and wages" emphatically deny his proposition and reject his pet measure as "vicious."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

How "Opening the Mills" Has Worked.

McKinley hit upon a happy phrase three years ago, designed to keep the attention of the voters away from his attitude on the silver question. It was to the effect that it would be better to open the mills rather than to open the mints.

For a while after McKinley's election the process of opening the mills went on—not due in any way to his election, but because the United States was participating in the world-wide recovery from seven years of lean picking.

As soon as possible McKinley pushed through Congress a bill for higher tariff protection, the trusts sprung up in a night, and the process of shutting down the mills was begun and is in operation to this day. Scarce a day passes in which some trust does not shut down a few mills for the sake of limiting the output, creating an inadequate supply, and thus giving excuse for high prices and increasing prices. Consolidation of office forces, reduction of number of traveling men, economy in rents, reduction of advertising, and many other means have been employed by the trusts to make more money with less expense than formerly.—Helena (Mont.) Independent.

"I'll take care of you, grandma!"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Polygamous Utah Office-Holders.

A full disclosure will reveal that Mr. Roberts after all had sufficient reason to believe that his plural wives would not bar him from Congress. The State of Utah is full of polygamous office-holders and President McKinley has, over the protest of citizens, selected polygamists for important Federal offices. All this was known to Roberts, and why should he alone be barred?—Denver Post.

WOULDN'T FORFEIT GOOD NAME

Mistake of a Woman that Helped a Church Out of Difficulty.

The mistake a lady recently made caused her husband to pay $450 more than he had expected, but resulted in a large increase in the fund being raised to pay off a debt on a local church. The lady is the wife of one of the best known coal men in this vicinity, and at the time she made the mistake she and her husband were at a meeting of the church, of which they are members, in a near-by town.

The meeting had been called to raise funds to pay off a pressing debt against the church. The minister made an appeal to the congregation for money and appointed a committee to take around a paper for subscription. As the member of the committee came near the coal man he said in a whisper to his wife:

"Put your name down for fifty."

The wife wrote her name and placed the figures opposite, and when the paper reached the minister he looked over the congregation and, with a smile, said: "I am delighted to see that Sister Smith has so nobly responded to the call I made and to the needs of the church. She has put her name down for $500, and it is the largest subscription on the paper. I know many of you are worth more than the lady who has so nobly shown her love for the church, and I hope you will strive to emulate her noble conduct. To give you a chance I will again pass around the subscription paper, and I hope none of you will fall behind our generous sister."

While the paper was being again passed around the husband of the lady became very anxious, and, turning to his wife, he said: "How much did you put down?"

"Well," said the wife, "I intended to put down $50, but I guess I put one cipher too much, but for goodness' sake don't let them know that I don't know how to write $50."

He did not and paid the $500, and when the subscription paper was returned the second time the subscriptions had been largely increased.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

During the Quarrel.

Hubby (angrily)—Whatever I say goes.

Wife (sweetly)—Of course it does, dear. You say it so loud that it goes all over the neighborhood.—New York World.

Little Drops.

Mack O'Rell—We Americans are always hitting at the Britons about coming over here and dropping their h's.

Luke Warme—Yes; but no one ever objects to them coming over here and dropping their X's and Y's.

Chronic Consumers.

Stubb—I read about some man who drank a quart of whisky without stopping.

Penn—Why, that is nothing. Look at old Redder; drank barrel after barrel without stopping. And he wouldn't have stopped yet if he had lived.

Stage Realism.

Smith (after the performance)—Well, old man, what did you think of the show?

Jones—Great! That church scene was the acme of realism.

Smith—So it was. I actually went to sleep while it was on.

Sore on Everybody.

Muggins—That fellow looks as though he were sore on everybody. What's his name?

Buggins—Boyle.—Philadelphia Record.

The Alternative.

The doctor—Well, Mrs. Barnes, I must offer you my congratulations. I hear you've married again. And have you given up your occupation of washing?

Mrs. Barnes—O, no, sir. But, you see, if I 'adn't taken 'e, I'd 'a' 'ad to 'a' bought a donkey!—Punch.

Verbum Sat Sapienti.

Mrs. Neighbors—What a terrible cough you have! Why don't you consult your family physician?

Mrs. Winters—Impossible. He's traveling for his health.

Comforting.

Tom—So you loved and lost, did you?

Jack—On the contrary; I came out winner.

Tom—Why, how's that? Didn't you just tell me she married another?

Jack—Yes; but she returned all my presents and accidentally put in some of the other fellow's.

Those Loving Girls.

Clara—Did you notice that fine-looking gentleman turn and look back at me after he had passed?

Maude—Yes. Isn't it queer how little it takes to turn a man's head?

Unlucky in Love.

Harry—So you got the mitten twice?

Roland—Yes, but they were not a match.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

An Outraged Husband.

A.—No, sir; I have been grossly deceived in you! I can never take your hand again!

B.—For what reason?

A.—Why, I had been given to understand by mutual friends that you were about to run away with my wife, and—er—I find my wife is still at home!—Ally Sloper.

In His Favor.

Stubb—That man ought to be engaged in the busines of moving furniture.

Penn—Why so?

Stubb—Because his name begins with Van.

Cut It Short!

Mack O'Rell—That French barber is cute.

Luke Warme—Is he?

Mack O'Rell—Yes. I accused him of having hacks in his razor. He turned around with an oily smile and chuckled: "Did monsieur eakspect ze razor to have ze horseless carriages?"

Honest Boy!

"I am glad there are a few honest people left. Two years ago I sent a boy around the corner to buy a postal card. I have never seen the boy to this day."

"You don't call that boy honest?"

"Yes, sir! This morning I received a postal with this on the back: 'Dear Sir: Here is your postal. I started in business with the penny you gave me and have prospered. Thanks.'"

Friendly Advice.

Bluff—I'd have you know, sir, that I'm a self-made man.

Gruff—Well, I'm sorry for you, but keep it dark and don't worry, and perhaps you'll get along all right.

Natural Inference.

"It seems strange that you never received a proposal of marriage," remarked the sarcastic girl.

"Who says I never received a proposal of marriage?" demanded the other.

"Why, no one, of course, but I've always understood that you are a spinster."—Chicago Post.

Soda Water Relieves Hunger.

Doctors are using carbonic water (plain soda water) now to relieve hunger in the cases of patients to whom food cannot be given. The carbonic acid gas lessens the sense of hunger, not because it has any sustaining qualities, but because it presses on the solar plexus, and the solar plexus, besides being useful when one fellow wants to knock out another fellow man, is the seat of hunger. The sense of gnawing and "goneness" and of ravenous hunger all arises from irritation in this part of the body, and the carbonic acid gas often checks the symptoms absolutely. Of course, the remedy is useful only where the sense of hunger is due more to artificial irritation than to actual want of food. In the latter case soda water would prove decidedly useless. Beefsteak still holds the fort for that ailment known as appetite.

Swiss Co-operative Societies.

Switzerland has at present 328 co-operatives associations for buying food, with 104,920 members.

WOMAN'S HOME

A WOMAN'S WILL.

A FEMALE over 12 years of age in New Mexico and over 16 in New York may bequeath her personal property. But 18 is the age fixed for devising real estate in California, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, District of Columbia, Illinois, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, Utah and Washington, while in the other States the testatrix must be 21 years of age. Married women may devise their separate estates in Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Dakota, District of Columbia, Idaho, Kentucky, Maine, Missouri, Nevada, North Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming. It is necessary in the other States that a married woman have the written consent of her husband before disposing of her property by will. An unmarried woman's will is legally revoked by marriage, but her property may be arranged in such a manner as to permit her to dispose of it after marriage as she may desire. The person making the will is called the testator; feminine testatrix. A will is of no effect until the death of the testator, and may be changed or canceled at any time by him. A will may be revoked by marriage, a codicil, destruction of will, disposing of property devised in the will, or by the execution of another will, as the last will annuls the power of any preceding one. If real estate is conveyed by will, it should be done in accordance with the laws of the State or county in which the land is located, but personal property is conveyed in harmony with the laws of the place in which the testator resides.—Woman's Home Companion.

Dr. Lucy Wilson's Work.

Dr. Lucy Langdon Williams Wilson, who holds the chair of biology at the Girls' normal school, Philadelphia, has arranged an exhibit of the biological work of the school, which is to be sent to the Paris exposition. The collection, which has been made at Mrs. Wilson's own expense, costing probably about $500, consists of sixty-six charts, illustrating very clearly the course of study and the methods of instruction used at the school, and 100 neatly bound volumes of the pupils' work. One-half of the charts illustrate the nature work taught in the school of practice, and the other half represents the laboratory work of the students of the Normal school. The charts are printed in French and English, and pictures and drawings explain the work of each grade. The books contain the written exercises and drawings of plant and animal life done by the pupils.

Cecil Rhodes' Sisters.

These are the two sisters of the "Diamond King," Cecil J. Rhodes. Although their brother, who has made $75,000,000 mining diamonds in South Africa, showers the lustrous gems upon them the sensible young women never use diamonds for personal adornment. Both are genuine English girls, fond of outdoor life and devoted to horses. It is due to their influence that Mr. Rhodes no longer avoids the fair sex as once he did.

CECIL RHODES' TWO SISTERS.

Returns with a Title.

The wife of Count Forest-Divonne, who has been transferred to the French embassy at Washington, has been gladly welcomed back to the city of her girlhood conquests. The countess is extremely beautiful, and is one of the few American women who have been received with open arms by the old regime in France, and to whom all the salons in the Fauborg St. Germain stand wide open. She has not paid many visits to the States since her marriage some years ago, at which time Count Divonne was an attache of the French legation at Washington. The wedding was of such magnificence that it is still talked about in Washington's smart circles. It is to be said, too, that the marriage has been a far happier one than has been the rule with Franco-American alliances.

COUNTESS DIVONNE.

The Well-Dressed Woman.

The majority of European women are in one degree or another of a mind with the English woman who said that "there was no use in being well dressed at home, because everybody in the town knew who she was, and that there was no use of dressing well when she went elsewhere, because then nobody knew who she was."

This is an altogether different attitude from that of the American woman, who feels that she owes it to herself to be well dressed, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. American writers who go into raptures about the originality of the Parisienne ought to have these facts brought home to them.

The Busy Woman's Time.

The busy woman who has discovered how to use her time is certain to become successful. It is not the bustling, rushing, hurrying woman who uses it to the best advantage. She frequently imposes on people, who believe that she is a great worker, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. As a matter of fact, she is generally the one who does least. She spends her energy in talking, but it is the quiet, self-possessed woman who is the real busy one. Apart from the capacity of working quietly and persistently, there is the necessity for using the minutes to advantage—a very difficult task at all times.

Perhaps the greatest hindrance to work is the thoughtlessness of those acquaintances who drop in from time to time "just for a moment's chat," or "to wait for the next car." If one had nothing to do this would be extremely pleasant; but when it really means that the hours of work must be indefinitely lengthened until lost time has been made up the pleasantness of such a proceeding fails to strike the busy one. The housekeeping woman has no notion of the value of time. How can it be otherwise when she generally has too much of it on hand?

As to Invitations.

If you know that the friend whom you are inviting has a visitor staying with her, you should by all means include the visitor. If you cannot at that time invite your friend's guest to your dinner or luncheon it would be better to defer your invitation to your friend until a time when she has no one with her.

You may request an invitation for a dance for a stranger in town, for a young relative, or for a young man who dances whose acquaintance you know would be agreeable to the prospective hostess.

For card parties, luncheons and dinners you can never request an invitation, even for a guest staying in your house. You can only let your hostess know that you have a visitor, thus leaving her free to do what seems best to her. You are at liberty to take your guest to an afternoon tea, to a large evening reception or to any affair to which the number of guests is evidently unlimited, without previously notifying your hostess.

You cannot ask a hostess for an invitation for a resident of the same city unless this person is a newcomer. For most social events you can freely ask an invitation for a man or a distinguished stranger; less often is it proper to ask one for a married couple.—Woman's Home Companion.

Orange Blossoms.

There is a tendency toward the discarding of orange blossoms at weddings ultra-fashionable, which is termed iconoclasm by those who consider the use of these fragrant flowers indispensable by the bride who would be true to all the traditions regarding wedding finery. The orange branch bears flowers and fruit at one time, and is therefore looked upon as the fairest emblem of prosperity. The use of orange blossoms is older than the Anglo-Saxon race, and it is said that it was in Arabia the flowers first appeared in bridal wreaths.

No More Old Maids.

The tradition that if one does not wish to marry one must become what used to be known as an old maid is now quite obsolete. A woman in her thirties, whether married or single, is at her prime, and no one knows it better than she does. Her age is a distinct gain, not a loss; an asset, not a deficit. She is quite conscious of the advantage, and is, on the whole, rather proud than otherwise of her experience.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Beware of Birds.

Kissing a pet bird is one of the many things to be added to one's list of "dont's." It has been recently discovered that consumption is sometimes hidden in the cage of canaries, parrots and other feathered pets. Lung diseases are prevalent among pigeons, and the practice of placing the lips to the bird's beak is considered a dangerous proceeding, and is apt to spread germs.

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

Some Characteristics of the Famous American Labor Leader.

Samuel Gompers, the American labor leader, is as conservative as the English leader, Burns, is radical. Where the latter says strike, Gompers says arbitrate. "I cannot," he once said, "much as I hate oppression, endure the sight of hunger."

The nation owes a bigger debt of gratitude to Somuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, than most people imagine. Had it not been for the rock-like firmness with which for nearly a fortnight, this man stood against a continent-wide strike of sympathy with the Pullman men, there might have been an uprising of organized labor, compared with which the strikes and riots that really did occur would have been mere child's play.

Mr. Gompers' diplomacy was not less striking than his wisdom. He at no time said that he would not advise a strike. He simply, by delaying action, gave his followers time to think. When they had thought, they saw the masterfulness of his course. Mr. Gompers proved himself to be a general worthy of leading so great an organization as the Federation.

Samuel Gompers is an American by adoption. He is of German descent, as his name indicates, though of English birth. Thirty-eight years ago he was apprenticed to a shoemaker in London. Then he was a lad of 10, with no brighter prospects, no greater advantages than those of ten thousand other apprentice boys of the world's metropolis. To-day he is the executive head of the most extensive combination of labor unions in the world. In this capacity he wields a constant power by the side of which that of other labor leaders is nothing.

The lad did not like the shoemaker's trade, and, his release being secured, he learned to make cigars, becoming proficient by the time he was 13. Then, with his father's family, he came to America. Down to the time he began to work in the shoe shops, he attended day school regularly. After that he continued his studies at a night school, where he applied himself so eagerly as to excite the especial attention of his teachers.

Upon his arrival in America he joined a New York cigarmakers' union, and his gift of common sense and his power to express his thoughts logically and clearly quickly made him a prominent member. Later he was repeatedly sent as delegate to the International union.

When David B. Hill was Governor, he wished to make Mr. Gompers a member of the State Board of Arbitration at a salary of $3,000. The tender was courteously declined.

"If I should accept a political appointment," said Mr. Gompers, "my usefulness in labor organizations would be entirely and permanently destroyed."

In 1882 Mr. Gompers was made president of the American Federation of Labor, and now holds that office. His salary is but $1,000 a year, less than he could earn at his trade in good times, and a far smaller sum than could be commanded by a man of his unusual natural abilities and self-won acquirements in the business world.

A Matrimonial Lottery.

Every three months in the province of Smolensk, Russia, husbands and wives are chosen by the chance drawing of a lottery ticket. The tickets cost 1 ruble (60 cents) each. There is only one prize to be drawn, and it consists of the entire sum yielded by the sale of the tickets, amounting to 5,000 rubles ($3,000), together with a woman described as being of noble blood. The tickets are sold only to men, and the lucky winner of the prize will have to marry the damsel if he takes the 5,000 rubles. If, however, he be already married he is at liberty to turn over the money and the woman to any friend whom he may wish to put in for such a good thing. If the winner should be willing to marry, but is not found to be to the damsel's taste, then they are to be excused from matrimony and permitted to divide the rubles.

The Same to Him.

"How much for a photograph?" he queried, as he entered the room at the head of the stairs.

"My dear sir, you have made a mistake," replied the occupant of the office. "This is a dental parlor, while the photographer is next door."

"Oh, you pull teeth?"

"Yes, sir."

"How much?"

"Fifty cents apiece."

"Well, go ahead and yank out one or two. It's about the same to me."

The American Bird.

The turkey was first discovered in America, and brought to England in the early part of the sixteenth century. Since then it has been acclimatized in nearly all parts of the world.

To the Point.

When relations become strained between individuals, the last word is apt to be a pithy one. One of the important events which preceded the outbreak of the Revolutionary war was the burning of the British schooner Gaspee. The boat had become very obnoxious to the people of Newport, as its commander had insisted on boarding every vessel which left or entered the harbor. One June night the boat was captured and burned by a body of patriots commanded by Abraham Whipple.

Nothing positive was known of Whipple, but much was suspected, and upon his taking part in a further attack on the British, Capt. Sir James Wallace, of his majesty's ship Rose, in Newport harbor, wrote him as follows:

"Sir: You, Abraham Whipple, on the 10th June, 1772, burned his majesty's vessel, the Gaspee, and I will hang you at the yard-arm.

"JAMES WALLACE."

Whipple always answered his correspondents. His reply was brief.

"Sir James Wallace: Sir, always catch a man before you hang him.

"ABRAHAM WHIPPLE."

A MOTHER'S MERCY

Always Anxious to Save the Little Ones from Suffering.

Lack of Proper Care in Childhood Lays the Foundation for Habitual Constipation, Causing Lifelong Suffering.

Nothing so sweet and touching as a mother's care for her little ones.

What a tender, watchful eye her anxiety keeps on the young hopefuls.

In the young nearly all ailments are directly traceable to stomach and bowel complaints.

Physic and purges are the most common and most dangerous of all medicines. Nearly all contain opiates or mercurial and other mineral poisons, which permanently affect the tender bones and tissues of the child.

The only proper laxative for a child is a gentle, positive vegetable liver stimulant, like Cascarets Candy Cathartic. For the babe-in-arms the mother cuts a Cascaret. It makes her milk mildly purgative, and benefits the baby. Older children eat a piece of a Cascaret like candy. They taste good, make the liver lively, prevent sour stomach, purify the blood, and regulate the bowels perfectly.

Go buy and try Cascarets to-day. It's what they do, not what we say they do, that proves their merit. All druggists, 10c, 25c, or 50c, or mailed for price. Send for booklet and free sample. Address Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago; Montreal, Can.; or New York.

CCC This is the CASCARET tablet. Every tablet of the only genuine Cascarets bears the magic letters "CCC." Look at the tablet before you buy, and beware of frauds, imitations and substitutes.

THE RISE OF THE AWKWARD BOY.

He longed to be great and he longed to rise,
And they laughed at him;
He studied books till he strained his eyes,
And they laughed at him!
His tongue was thick, but his will was strong;
His ears were big and his legs were long,
In a hundred ways his plans went wrong,
And they laughed at him.

He held his course day after day,
And they laughed at him;
He packed his satchel and went away,
And they laughed at him!
They heard of the blunders he made in town,
In his awkward efforts to win renown—
To them he was merely a foolish clown,
And they laughed at him.

* * * * * * *

The papers began to mention his name,
They were proud of him;
He was getting up, he was winning fame,
They were proud of him!
Go down among them there to-day,
And you'll hear his wise old neighbors say
They "always knowed he'd make his way,"
And they're proud of him!

—S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Times-Herald.

A BOARDING-HOUSE ROMANCE.

We kept a boarding-house, Mitty and I.

To be sure, people said it was a shame that Mr. Fontaine's daughters should stoop so low in life as to deal out their hospitality for money. But Mitty said—and Mitty has a great deal of common sense—that we must live, and all the genteel company that came to visit us wouldn't put so much as a copper in our pockets toward coal and taxes. Mrs. Hall, who lived next door to us, said she knew we wouldn't make it pay. No one but an experienced housekeeper could make it pay. Mrs. Hall kept a colored man to open the door and wait on the table, and called her fourteen boarders "a few select friends." And when Mitty put up the little tin sign, "Boarding," at the right of the door, as you came up the steps, Mrs. Hall elevated her patrician nose and muttered something about "low and common." But, as Mitty said, what was the use of being above your business? It was a boarding-house, and all the big words in the dictionary wouldn't make anything else of it.

Mrs. Hall said that "the Fontaine girls were very queer." Miss Cynthia Caldwell thought that it would have been much nicer and more select to do fine sewing, or get a place as governess or something of that sort, which wouldn't have been quite so public. Old Squire Fernleaf said his daughters shouldn't visit a boarding-house keeper, and Dr. Millett looked the other way, when he brought his fashionable new bride to town and met Mitty face to face in the street.

"Dear me!" said Mitty, laughing. "What a queer world this is?"

But I was angry enough to cry.

"No matter, Mitty," said I, "we'll teach them that we can be quite independent without them."

Well, as time went on we had several boarders. Old Mr. Pedigrew and his niece Clarissa—the two Mr. Hendleys and the minister's niece, who gave lessons in wax flowers and water-color paintings. Our rooms were full, all except the little one over the wing.

"Kate," said Mitty triumphantly, "we are making money! I put eleven dollars in the savings bank, to-day, over and above all expenses for the past month!"

"I dare say Mrs. Hall saves more than that," said I.

"I think very likely," said Mitty. "Only, you see, Mrs. Hall does everything on a grander scale than we can pretend to keep up with. We do our marketing, wash and iron our own table linen and sift the ashes, on the sly, behind the fence, while Miss Henrietta Hall is practicing 'The Maiden's Prayer' on the piano.

"But then," observed I, "we are not such fine ladies as Mrs. Hall and Miss Henrietta. We are only two poor little old maids, who are obliged to earn our own living."

"Kate, you are not an old maid!" indignantly cried out Mittty.

"And you are as fresh as a rosebud beside Henrietta Hall," said I, patting her cheek. "Do you know, dear, I think hard work agrees with both of us!"

So things went on, until one summer evening, we were sitting out on our steps, when there was quite a commotion in the Brussels-carpeted hall of our neighbor, Mrs. Hall.

"Of course he must go," Mrs. Hall's voice shrilly announced. "It was a great imposition on me, that he should ever come here! I supposed he was an author or a lawyer or some such genteel occupation, and now, you see, he's nothing but a painter! A common painter!"

"An artist, ma'am," suggested Mr. Birdsey.

"And where's the difference I should like to know?" sputtered Mrs. Hall. "Except that one has, at least, daily wages to depend upon, and the other hasn't. And now here he is, down with scarlet fever, or small-pox, or some such hideous ailment, and——"

"Only a malignant form of intermittent fever, ma'am," again meekly put in Mr. Birdsey.

"No matter what name they call it by," said the landlady, waxing hotter and hotter in the ardor of discussion. "I don't keep a hospital here, and if I did I wouldn't harbor any such low trash! So the sooner he packs off the better I shall be pleased!"

"But where is he to go?" asked young Delderman, who was balancing himself on the balcony rails, cigar in mouth. "He has no friends that anybody knows of, and——"

"All the more reason I should get him off my hands as quickly as possible," said Mrs. Hall. "The idea of my becoming responsible for the funeral expenses of——"

"Hush! Waller will hear you," interrupted Mr. Birdsey. "His window is wide open."

"I don't care if he does hear me!" snapped Mrs. Hall. "He ought to have been ashamed of himself, coming here under such circumstances as this. But he clears, sick or well, before sunset this very night. There are public hospitals enough, I suppose."

"Plenty of 'em," said Mr. Birdsey, dryly; "and while he is waiting for all the red-tape forms to be gone through with, in order to gain admission, he will most likely die in the street."

"Well, let him die," said Mrs. Hall. "That's no business of mine that I know of."

Mitty looked at me. I looked at Mitty. Our eyes both sparkled mute telegraphic messages to each other—and I rose up and spoke, our of the choking, indignant fullness of my heart.

"Mrs. Hall," cried I, "Mr. Waller may come here, whoever he is, A sick man, friendless and alone, should be able to claim brotherhood with all the world. Mitty and I will take care of him until he is able to take care of himself."

Mrs. Hall took us at our word with extreme promptitude, and before nightfall poor Bernard Waller was snugly ensconced in the little vacant room over the wing—a pale, ghostly-looking creature, babbling idly of people and places on the Continent that we never had heard of. Dr. Millett shook his head gravely.

"He is a very sick man," was his verdict.

"Kate," whispered Mitty, when the doctor was gone and the sick man was all still and settled for the night, "suppose—suppose he should die!"

"In that case, Mitty, I don't think we should ever repent that we had done our duty."

"I am sure we should not," said Mitty, softly.

But Bernard Waller did not die. He got well—and, of course, according to all the rules of true love, he lost his heart to Mitty's porcelain-blue eyes and pretty face.

"You'll never allow your sister to marry a painter!" said Mrs. Hall, spitefully.

"I'm sure I've no objections to her becoming an artist's wife, as long as they love each other," said I, laughing.

"Well, really," said Mrs. Hall, "if it were my Henrietta——"

"But it isn't your Henrietta," I interrupted, a little sharply. "It is our Mitty. And she has chosen to suit herself, and I, for one, am entirely satisfied."

Well, they were married in a quiet sort of way. I am reaching the end of my story now—the romance that irradiated our lives, when the cake was cut, and the simple natural rose buds wilted, and Mitty and Bernard had gone on their tour, with humble little me along in the capacity of bridesmaid.

We had traveled all day, and toward night of a glorious winter day we drove into the gates of a spacious old place, where the octagonal towers and ivy-mantled walls gleamed whitely through the twilight.

"Oh, what a fine old place!" said Mitty. "Ah, look at that lovely, glittering fountain and the beds of scarlet geranium, and the pretty, timid deer eyeing us from beneath the drooping boughs of elm and beech. Bernard, are you going to sketch this place?"

"I may, in time," said my sister's husband, composedly, as he sprang out and opened the carriage door.

"Are we going to get out here, Bernard? Do you know the people?"

But before he could answer the great carved oak doors flew open, revealing a stately entrance hall, with a wood fire burning at the further end and a moss-colored carpet on the floor. Wax lights glowed softly, pictures gleamed down from the walls, chairs upholstered in violet velvet stood around. To Mitty and me it was like a glimpse of fairy land.

"Who lives here, Bernard?" still persisted Mitty, as she advanced timidly up the broad marble steps.

"I do. Welcome home, sweet wife; welcome home, sister."

I stared blankly at his bright face.

"But, Bernard, we thought you were poor."

"Did I ever say I was? When I came to Berwickville to sketch the Berwick Falls I certainly saw no occasion to proclaim my private affairs to the good people there. I engaged a room at Mrs. Hall's because it was convenient to the falls. When I was ill and delirious I could not tell the truth. When I knew how good and true you two dear girls were I resolved that I could wait and give you a surprise. I was only an amateur artist, dear. I am rich, but I am Bernard Waller still."

Now, wasn't that equal to anything you will find in a three-volume novel? And, you see, it really happened to Mitty and me, and we are fine ladies now and drive about in our open barouche and cream-colored horses, and arrange flowers out of our own conservatory, and have a cook a great deal grander than ourselves. And you can guess how discomfited Mrs. Hall and Henrietta were when they first heard of it.

So, you see, there is a little romance left in real life still.

But we keep the little tin sign, "Boarding," up somewhere in the store room. Mitty says it will do us good to look at it, if ever we get proud or puffed up.

Roses as Reformers.

Superintendent Sloan, of the House of Correction, in Chicago, is about to try an experiment in the reformation of women prisoners. He has just built three greenhouses, covering 4,000 square feet, in which he intends to grow roses for the Chicago market, employing the most hardened types of the gentler sex to be found in the big prison under his care.

The superintendent has hope that association with growing plants will soften the natures of these prisoners and lead them to healthier moral and physical lives. Carnations and chrysanthemums will also be raised in large quantities.

Cape Town, South Africa, enjoys certain distinctions in respect to the height of its constables. The tallest is six feet eight and a half inches, while there are thirty-eight others over six feet in height.

SEEKING MISSING SOLDIERS.

The Handbills That Are Distributed Among British Regiments.

From the London Mail:

In the whole copious realm of literature dealing with our wars, big and little, it is rather surprising that there should be only one passing mention made of the fact that periodically tens of thousands of circulars and handbills are issued by the relatives of supposedly dead young soldiers in the ranks asking for a detailed account of the last moments of the slain.

The writer has seen many of these circulars that have not only been circulated in the regiment to which the dead or missing man belonged, but have, in certain cases, been given to every surviving soldier of the particular campaign in which he was engaged. One of these latter handbills was periodically issued, literally by the hundred thousand, over a period covering ten years. It related to a young private of high connections, whose real name was Gordon, but who had enlisted in the name of Brassil. He was reported as "missing," and it is an army tradition that something like $150,000 was spent by his mother on advertisements and inquiries in all parts of the world, a regular army of non-commissioned officers of certain regiments—who never asked for and sometimes declined taking a penny—receiving "tips" for making strenuous inquiries among Sepoys.

Some of these circulars that have related to men killed in a very early engagement of a long-continued campaign have followed the dead man's comrades who participated in and survived the same action to the most outlandish places, where our troops seemed cut off from the whole world; and, in one case, a slender and delicate looking middle-aged woman herself bore her circular of inquiry into the very heart of Burmah.

As to the handbills that go with the tardy and scanty mail to isolated bodies of troops, here is an actual one which in 1879, just previous to the battle of Ulundi, arrived at the camp of "Conference Hill," in Zululand, where our troops were waiting to advance on the savage King Cetewayo. In texture and printing the bill is only of the sort that is given away by thousands in our streets; in its text it affords a tragically clear view of what many of these momentous and really vivid circulars are like.

It is notable that in this handbill no particular regiment—the man really belonged to the 24th—or regimental number is specified, nor does the advertiser insult the dead man's comrades by offering any semblance of a gratuity. But how terribly the tragedy of Isandlwana, where our brave fellows miscalculated the strength of the teeming thousands of Zulus, who chased them for miles, is indicated in such graphic clauses as the second! "Did he escape the carnage and get to that river where somany were cut down? Or was he with the poor remnant which depended on the bayonet alone, and which fought to the last gasp?"

These circulars are, in all the seeming simplicity of a few lines of print, such as we at home are accustomed to associate with a lost bracelet, most lurid reminders of the horrors of war, for there is a dreadful particularity of information asked for. The Soudan produced a whole sheaf of them, and in each one occurs the dreadful question, "Was he mutilated?"

Of course, many such circulars are issued to British troops everywhere—certain of them have been repeated at intervals for years—in regard to missing men who have never been in action in their lives, and one of these, which has again and again been repeated, and which palpably relates to some "neler-do-weel," states that the supposed private is "given much to drink wherever he is." A copy of it was to be seen posted at Aldershot only lately.

Where Feuds Generate.

The topographical situation to which Kentucky and Tennessee were relegated in the first half of the century is the situation that still encircles and enthrones them. Being neither hot nor cold of temperature, they became the scenes of impact between the North and the South, the battle grounds of the civil war. They still nurture the abnormal to some extent in the feuds between the Bakers and the Howards, the Griffins and the Philipots, because they are not inviting to the ironmakers, the wood-workers and the general factors of the North, nor entirely habitable to the people who live in the suns of the South. Their characteristics extend over into Arkansas, which, too, is rugged, and has been more rugged in some of its people. Yet Kentucky makes the gallantry of American history, because it is on the border, and Tennessee affords rural homes, which have been exemplars for the romancer and passions for the dramatist, while it installs in the gubernatorial chair men who write verse for their own inaugural odes. Tennessee lies picturesquely between the moonshiner and the sugar cane.—Ainslee's Magazine.

McHoo.

The new housemaid who had answered the ring of the postman glanced at the wrapper of the magazine, on which was inscribed:

"James Smith McHoo, and returned it to the man in the gray uniform, with the remark:

"That isn't for us. The name of the people who live here is Smith."

"That's all right," he said, handing it back.

"Well, but it isn't all right. Don't you suppose I know the name of the family? This is for somebody named McHoo. Can't you read?"

"Yes. That's how I got my job. You can read well enough to see that the first part of that name is James Smith, can't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, the McHoo means March, 1900, the time it's paid up to. Guess you'd better take it. You're a nice-looking girl, but your education is not quite complete. Good morning. See you again to-morrow."—Chicago Tribune.

Corean Claim Credit.

According to a recent article on Corea in one of our monthly magazines, that country lays claim to have cast the first font of metal type the world had ever seen. The art of xylography had existed for centuries, and clay type had alone been used in Japan, but Corea was the first to discern the need of the now permanent and durable form of metal type. Each type was built on the principle of the arch, being cylindrically concave on the under side. The purpose of this was to secure a firmer hold upon the bed of beeswax which constituted the form. A shallow tray was filled with wax, the type firmly embedded in it. The printer, sitting cross-legged before it, applied liquid ink by means of a soft brush, after which a sheet of paper was lightly laid upon the form. A piece of felt was brushed softly across the porous paper with the right hand, and the left removed the printed page. In this way it was possible to strike off 1,500 impressions in a day.

Prosperity for 1900.

Indications point to great prosperity for the coming year. This is a sign of a healthy nature. The success of a country, as well as of an individual, depends upon health. If you have any stomach trouble try Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which cures dyspepsia, indigestion and biliousness.

The Condor of Peru.

First of all the birds of Peru comes the condor, a sober, staid-looking individual with a black coat, white collar and a shaven crown. He has also a touch of white on his wings—cuffs one might call them. The females are distinctly black without a touch of color, though there is a little white on their wings. Hideous brutes they are to look at near to, and if you manage to shoot one you will find him swarming with the most loathsome parasites; but they are a grand sight up against the sky, sailing swiftly on their great twenty-foot spread of wing or hovering for hours as motionless as if they were painted against the blue.

Try Grain-O! Try Grain-O!

Ask your Grocer to-day to show you a package of GRAIN-O, the new food drink that takes the place of coffee. The children may drink it without injury as well as the adult. All who try it like it. GRAIN-O has that rich seal brown of Mocha and Java, but it is made of pure grains, and the most delicate stomach receives it without distress. ¼ the price of coffee. 15c and 25c per package. Sold by all grocers.

Similar but Different.

Court Proceeding.

Thursday's Daily.

Judge Adair has had several divorce cases to dispose of this week and so far he has rendered three judgments.

Martha Love was given the decree against James and in addition he will have to pay her $800 alimony in semi-annual instalments of $50 each with the usual rate of interest.

Emma Boots asked to be unhitched from James Boots. The traces were loosened and Emma gets $200 alimony with the privilege of resuming her former name, Emma Allen.

—Edward Sattison got the divorce he asked for from his wife Edith, but in addition to the costs he will have to pay her $300 in cash and also furnish clothing for the two minor daughters, who are left in care of the mother until further orders of the court.

The case of Hoff vs. Hoff, on rate, is on trial as we go to press.

Friday's Daily.

The Waterloo case now on is quite a case, and deserves more than a passing notice. In 1897 the town council thought it a wise thing and a benefit to the town to build a town hall and engine house. So they bought the site of the old mill that had burned, the land lying between the school ground and the business part of town, and after selling a strip off the east side to F. W. Willis for the present location of his Press establishment, they proceeded to build. The structure was of brick, and at the first estimate of cost, it was the opinion that $3,200 would be sufficient. They wanted a good room in which to keep the fire engine and apparatus, a good council room and a large room in which could be held public gatherings at reasonable expense. But as the work progressed, their plans expanded. Their old opera house had been destroyed by fire, and even the smaller room they now and then had used, was wiped out in the great fire of a year or so previous. So they concluded, while about it to put the building higher and make a room above that would be suitable for holding theaters and similar shows. This they did and the result was, they have a fine opera house in the second story and the whole building presents a fine appearance, and is not only useful, but a credit to the town.

But now, it appears, some people there object to the expense, which is said to have climbed up to $8,000. So someone suggested that the bonds given for the payment were void as the town council, though it had a right to build a council room and engine house, had no right to build an opera house. So suit was brought to have the bonds declared void. Attorney Phillips of Waterloo and P. V. Hoffman of Auburn are for those who want the bonds repudiated, while Rose & Rose and Welsheimer are for the Waterloo council and in favor of having the bonds declared to be valid. The case began yesterday afternoon, before Judge Adair and resulted in a hot fight. The members of the present council of Waterloo, as well as those who were members when the building was erected, were in court, as well as a number of prominent citizens who claim the council did wrong. From the several witnesses examined, we glean the above facts. It is tried by the Judge alone.

Saturday's Daily.

Before adjourning court over the New Year's, Judge Adair rendered judgment in several important cases.

In the case of Martin C. Sheets and others vs. Isolene L. Rader and Irvin Rader, on contract for the sale of real estate, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $200.

The case against the town of Waterloo, noted heretofore in these columns, was decided in favor of the plaintiff, the Sisson & Lilly Co. of Grand Rapids, holders of town orders issued to pay for the town building. The amount of the judgment is $591.04, but the town's attorneys excepted to the finding and were given sixty days to file a bill of exceptions.

After hearing the evidence in the case of Roby vs. Wickwire, and others, Judge Adair decided that the attorneys' fees in the Kelly case, $2,835.36, should be divided into three portions, one third to go to Mr. Roby, one-third to Shuman and Link and one-third to Wickwire. The division was made by Clerk Long today.

Still Doing Business

The commissioners kept on grinding away at county business today and cleared up several matters.

—The two telephone companies, through their local representatives, made a vigorous fight for the contract for next year. They kept cutting the price until the Central Union company made a figure of $35, when the Home company dropped out. The service rendered includes the use of four phones, three in the court house and one at the sheriff's residence, which makes the rental of each phone about 73 cents per month. The county council appropriated $100 for this service.

When we went to press yesterday the board was considering the matter of letting the contract for next year's printing. Under the new law country printing offices stand but little show against the outside houses and for this reason were the bids on this occasion were confined to two firms. W. B. Burford of Indianapolis and Wilson Humphrey & Co. of Logansport. When the bids were opened it was found that both were above the amount appropriated for this purpose by the county council and this point was fully discussed. The matter was held over until today, when the commissioners decided to accept the lowest bid provisionally, and ordered that the county council be called in special session to appropriate a sufficient sum to cover the additional cost. The bids were:

MOUNT DENOUNCES TRUSTS.

Big Combinations Hit Hard by the Indiana Governor.

(Inter Ocean.)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 28.—Governor Mount, in a carefully prepared speech this evening before the Indiana Hotel-Keepers' association, denounced trusts.

"Men become promoters of schemes to get rich quick," said he, "and often the money of the poor, through misrepresentation and betrayal of confidence, is taken to satisfy inordinate avarice. Shylocks with knives in their hands are still clamoring for the pound of flesh. I am in favor," said he, "of removing all tariff protection from such industries as may combine to destroy competition."

Governor Mount said the argument that trusts cheapen articles is misleading. He took the case of the Standard Oil company and held that great corporations had not been beneficial. Another potent danger to the public weal, he said, is the political influence of those great aggregations of capital.

"They are often able to control legislative bodies," said he. "Through plausible arguments they are able to print and scatter broadcast over the land, many are deceived and led to believe these gigantic monopolies are really benefactions."

P. E. Dow, president of the Commercial Travelers' National league, was quoted as saying that 85,000 commercial travelers have been thrown out of employment by the trusts. In this instance the Governor noted the hote interests were the great sufferers.

Our Saturday Evenings.

CHAPTER IX.

As the old year draws to a close, we think we ought to give our readers, on this last Saturday evening of 1899, a few personal stories, "founded on fact." Many things occur in Auburn, which if written up in novel style, whould be rather dramatic, and mostly of the kind known as comedy. For comedy, is that sort of drama that ends pleasantly with no one killed, not even the villian. We here introduce the first one:

NO FIRE ALARM NEEDED.

Fred Yesbera had a little blaze of his own the other morning, and didn't need to have a fire alarm turned in to inform him of it either. Like a foolish good-natured man, he builds the morning fire, when he could just as well have his wife do it. And it was this foolishness that got him into trouble. He had started the fire, on arising, without waiting to change his night robe for a more substantial and permanent suit. The fire, however, was a little slow to rise, having "been out late the night before." So Fred stepped out to the woodshed and got more kindling. Returning, he put the dry stuff on the fire, started it to blazing and turned about to attend to something else leaving the stove door open. His night robe of fluffy outing flannel swished into the blaze and flashed up like guncotton. Fred is reported to be a church member, but Mrs. Yesbera refuses to report the exact language he used on this occasion. But it is lucky for him that he was not burned to death with such words on his lips. He is all right now, but that garment of flannel will never again, be as warm as it was for a few seconds that morning.

THE LONG MAN AND THE SHORT MAN.

Dave Hodge is one of the "mildest mannered men that ever cut a throat or sacked a city," to quote some old fellow who wrote in that strain. But there are times when human nature will assert itself. It happened not many centuries ago, that Mr. Hodge was one evening strolling down the street, when he ran into an incident. Two men, more or less drunk on raw whisky were having trouble. It seems there had been trouble between them some time before. And now the smaller was the drunker of the two and the big one proposed to get even. The small man had fallen and was partly helpless, and just as Mr. Hodge came up, the big man had dealt him a vicious kick in the stomach. The small man tried to make a defense, when the big one turned on him again, and began kicking him in the face. This mean attack made Dave flare up and in a twink he was slapping the big man first on one side of his face and then the other, sending in his blows "hot from the gun." The big man was surprised and bewildered, at the suddenness and fierceness of the onslaught, and though he was big enough to chaw up his assailant, he didn't seem to have that kind of an appetite, and began backing off, and finally retreated to the Hollister house, where just as Dave got in a parting whack, his friends rescued him and got him into a room where he was safe. In the morning he was all right, but the misty memory of the incident of the evening before, nettled him, and he swore vengeance. Just give him a chance when sober, to get at his assailant; that was all he asked. If some kind angel would press the button to bring them together, he would do the rest.

A day or so later, Mr. Hodge, who had heard of the desires of his enemy, happened to see the latter talking under the shade of the trees on the public square. Not stopping to finish cleaning the watch he was working at, he hurried, "across to the other side," and went up to the fellow, spoke to him, walked around him, nearly trod on his toes, made himself familiar with the others standing by. He looked up into the face of the big man, and the big man looked down at him. But the big man had evidently "seen a vision," and to this day, has never mentioned fight.

People not well posted on fighting incidents may think the big man was Hank Stroh, but he wasn't.

—Mr. Dancer, who buys timber for Verge DeWitt at his mill in the south part of the state, is home for a time.

A Thousand Tongues

Could not express the rapture of Annie E. Springer, of 1125 Howard-st., Philadelphia, Pa., when she found that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption had completely cured her of a hacking cough that for many years had made life a burden. All other remedies and doctors could give her no help, but she says of this Royal Cure—"it soon removed the pain in my chest and I can sleep soundly, something I can scarcely remember doing before. I feel like sounding its praises throughout the Universe." So will every one who tries Dr. King's New Discovery for any trouble of the Throat, Chest or Lungs. Price 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drugstore, every bottle guaranteed.

Two Hurt.

Yesterday the Madden Marble Works recieved a car of heavy granite blocks and Wm. Elson and Charles Du Wan were unloading the heavy pieces. In moving one of them the crowbar slipped and flew, striking Mr. Elson on the foot and mashing the big toe. The giving way of the bar caused Du Wan to slip and fall, giving him a painful but not dangerous hurt on the knee. Both men are rather sore today, and Mr. Elson will have trouble with his toe for some days. But they were forcenate that it was no worse.

Good in Figgers.

Arthur Griffith of Milford in Kosciusko county is creating quite a sensation at the Indiana University at Bloomington, and indeed all over the country, by his wonderful power of performing arithmetical calculations. It is claimed, it is due partly to a retentive memory, which enables him to have a multiplication table up to 130, and he has squares and cubes of numbers almost without limit. Then too, he has many short methods of multiplying, dividing, etc., many of which he has discovered himself, though long known to others.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties—A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

American Commerce Stopped.

New York special: Secretary of State John Hay has communicated with United States Ambassador Choate in London regarding the seizure off the coast of South Africa of three vessels loaded with American goods and consigned to merchants in Lorenzo Marquez, Delagoa Bay. R. W. Geldart, an export merchant, of South Williams street, is one of the sufferers by the confiscation of the goods, consisting of flour, beef and lard, in transit and he has laid the facts before Secretary Hay. Mr. Geldart said:

"I notified Mr. Hay about the seizure, and in reply, he sent me a letter saying he had communicated with the United States Ambassador in London. I am going to have the matter brought up in Congress, and see what redress Americans have for these seizures. The proceeding was a most highhanded one and without precedent, I believe."

Britain Makes a Protest.

A special from Washington says: The British Embassy, it is understood, has called the attention of the State Department to the pro-Boer feeling in the United States, with the suggestion that this Government exercise the utmost precaution in preventing the sailing of filibustering expeditions to South Africa. The State Department replied that it would do its best to preserve the law of neutrality and cited the fact that a vessel which sailed recently from Baltimore to Philadelphia, presumably destined for Lorenzo Marquez, is being closely watched by the revenue cutter service. This vessel, it is said, was secured for the shipment of 800 men from the United States to South Africa for participation in the South African War.

Pinnacle Rock Falls Down.

A dispatch from Cumberland Gapp, Tenn., says: The Pinnacle rock, overhanging Cumberland Gap, and one of the natural wonders of which the State was proud, fell from its perch, recently. The immense mass of stone, weighing several hundred tons, shook the town as it tumbled down, as if an earthquake had occurred. The direction taken by the rock in its fall was not toward the town, and it is believed no lives were lost. Considerable property has been destroyed, however. The cause of the fall has not been explained.

Boutelle Must Die.

A special to the New York Press from Bangor says: The report comes from a trustworthy Portland man who talked with a physician acquainted with the case, that Congressman Boutelle is suffering from Bright's disease in its last stages, and that the violent attacks bordering on delirium, which he has experienced in the last few days, have been caused by uraemic poisoning, which results in convulsions, resembling symptoms of insanity.

Charged with Wife Murder.

Jesse Springer was arrested at Indianapolis recently for causing the death of his wife. The woman is dead at her parents' home in Mooresville. FEW PARALLELS IN VOLUME.

Wholesale and Retail Business Near Its Highest Mark.

Bradstreet's statement of trade says: "Holiday trade activity, of course, reaches its highest development during the week before Christmas, and it is significant of the prosperous conditions underlying the general business situation that reports almost without exception point to a volume of business having few, if any, parallels in previous years. Another significant feature developed also is that the demand for such goods embraces a higher class and a more expensive grade of materials, a conclusion among trade reporters being that a larger buying capacity exists now than in any previous year in the country's history. Wholesale trade at this season usually shows a quieting tendency, but it is questionable whether this tendency is as marked this year as in former periods. Prices generally have shown exceptional strength. The great majority of staple quotations remaining unchanged as a result of the week's operations. As exceptions to this might be instanced four, pork, coffee and lead, which are higher, while copper, cotton and tin are lower. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 2,813,714 bushels, against 3,258,040 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 3,910,000 bushels, against 4,017,185 bushels last week."

ERNEST AUSTIN FOUND GUILTY.

Spanish War Veteran Convicted of the Murder of His Brother.

At Bellefontaine, Ohio, Dec. 22, Ernest Austin was convicted of murder in the first degree, with recommendation of mercy. This will send the prisoner to the penitentiary for life without hope of pardon or parole unless his innocence should be established. The jury required but twelve hours to seal the verdict. The crime consisted in the murder of his brother and mother last May and the burning of their bodies in their home. The murder of the brother was the indictment on which he was charged. The prisoner is 23 years old and served as a volunteer in the Spanish war.

WHEN ONE GOES DOWN THE OTHER GOES UP.

PERISH IN A STORM.

Twenty-one English Sailors Lose Their Lives.

In a terrific storm the British steamship Ariosto was wrecked on Diamond shoals, off Cape Hatteras, and twenty-one of the crew were drowned. Had they remained on the ship until the life savers succeeded in making a connection from the shore to the wreck all would have been saved. The captain and eight men remained on the boat till a breeches buoy was rigged up and they were saved. The twenty-one men who chose to risk their fate in the ship's lifeboat were drowned between the vessel and the shore.

The Ariosto, 2,265 tons net register, sailed from Galveston bound for Hamburg via Norfolk, where she meant to touch for coal. Dense fog has prevailed off this coast for several days, and, although it lifted the night before, it is believed that the ship had previously lost her bearings and got too close inshore. Soon after the Ariosto struck the waves began to roll over her, and twenty-one men of her crew launched three of her boats and attempted to come ashore.

Within plain sight of the watchers, including the crews of the life-saving stations, who stood upon the beach, powerless to help them, the boats' crews lost their lives. One after another the three boats foundered in the heavy seas. Not one succeeded in reaching the shore, and not one of the occupants escaped with his life. Captain Baines and eight men, the remainder of the thirty aboard the vessel, elected to remain aboard the ship after she struck, and this saved their lives.

Strenuous efforts were made by the crews of the Hatteras and Ocracoke life-saving stations to save the imperiled men on the Ariosto. After several ineffectual efforts to land a line aboard the doomed ship by firing it from the gun ashore, it was accomplished. A line which reached the stranded steamer was by those aboard made fast to the mast, and the breeches buoy of the Ocracoke station's crew was sent out to the ship by Captain Howard. Soon above the boiling seas a man in the buoy slid ashore on the life line, while wild cheers arose from those on ship and shore.

FORTY KNOWN TO BE DEAD.

List of Victims of Braznell Mine Explosion Is Very Large.

The horror of the Braznell mine explosion near Brownsville, Pa., is worse than first estimated. Tuesday morning the number of dead was known to be over forty.

The explosion was terrific, and was heard plainly at Brownsville, four miles distant. The main shaft was totally wrecked and rendered helpless. About four score of men had gone down to work. Mr. Thomas, the cageman, on his fourth trip, went to the bottom with fourteen men, and gave the signal for the cage to rise, when the explosion occurred. The cage was blown with terrific force to the top of the shaft, and fell back to the bottom, completely blocking across the mine. Timbers were hurled hundreds of feet; the lower ring of brick work in one shaft was completely wrecked, and had to be tunneled to get into the mine at all.

The explosion was caused by a miner's naked light coming into contact with gas in a room where no gas was supposed to exist. The tipple was wrecked and the buildings over the fan and the engine were shattered to splinters. The iron work at the bottom of the shaft was twisted in all imaginable shapes, telling plainly of the awful force of the explosion. Immediately following the roar of the underground inferno black damp poured out of the pit mouth, inviting suffocation and death to those who would gladly have entered and gone to the rescue. A temporary cage was rigged up at the air shaft and rescuers went down. A ghastly sight met their gaze. Mangled bodies were found on all sides. The mine looked like a total wreck. The rescuers pushed on and soon fourteen men were taken out. Some of these were dying, and nearly all were horribly mangled. Fire broke out in the mines, and if any of the men still there were alive there was every indication that they would be suffocated by smoke and their bodies burned.

TO MONOPOLIZE BANKING.

Great Central Financial House Is Said to Be Planned.

A New York dispatch says a great financial institution, to be called the National Bank of the United States, or the National United States Bank, is forming. The bank is to be a consolidation of the National City Bank and the Hanover National Bank of New York, both of which, it is stated, are controlled by the Rockefellers, and a smaller concern. This consolidated institution is to be, according to present plans, the central money power of the United States. Secretary of the Treasury Lyman J. Gage, after his retirement from the cabinet, is to become the head of the bank.

The National City Bank, according to the dispatch, is now practically what its promoters aim to have it become in fact, the financial agent of the national government. The bank, it says, in support of this assumption, acted as the receiver of the Government of the money paid to the Government by the Pacific railroads; it acted as the representative of the Government in the payment of the $20,000,000 to Spain for the Philippine Islands; it has been the favored national depository of Government funds, having control of one-fifth of all the Government moneys deposited in all the banks of the country

EARTHQUAKES IN CALIFORNIA.

Many Towns on the Coast Severely Shaken by Heavy Shock.

Christmas morning at 4:25 o'clock a severe earthquake visited Southern California and caused extensive disaster. At San Jacinto, a town in Riverside County, the shock seemed to have had its center. It lasted twelve seconds only, but the severity was great. At the Baboda Indian reservation six squaws were killed by falling walls, two fatally and many seriously injured. The main shock was preceded by a loud, roaring sound and awakening many just in time to escape from the doomed buildings. The business street was such a wreck tons of debris had to be removed before buildings could be entered. Over $50,000 damage is estimated at San Jacinto and at Hemit, a small town near by. At the latter place the large tourist hotel was badly damaged and also the hospital at San Jacinto. The rear wall of the Johnston block in Hemit fell. Fortunately no person was injured at either place so far as is known.

Other places where the shock was severely felt were Santa Ana, Anheim, San Bernardina and Riverside. However, no heavy damage is reported from any of those places. In Santa Ana guests of hotels were almost rolled from their beds, clocks were stopped and brick walls of several buildings were badly cracked. People roused from their beds, rushed to the streets, some in their night clothing, and remained up until daylight. The shock was terrific at Needles, but no serious damage was reported. At Ventura houses were damaged and the shock was followed by a high wind and heavy sea.

The heaviest earthquake ever known occurred at Anaheim. It lasted ten seconds and was violent from the beginning. Lodging houses were emptied and the streets were filled with shivering people. A number of buildings were cracked, but no serious damage was done. The county hospital at Bowers was damaged by the earthquake. The shock almost shook Hemit to pieces. There are but two chimneys left in town. At Redlands the shock lasted one minute and a quarter.

PICTURE OF WAR'S HORRORS.

Incident of Boer Struggle Where Lancer Spears Two Burghers.

The accompanying illustration, the spearing of two Boers by an English lancer, brings before the eye a vivid picture of war's horrors. The incident, which occurred at Elandslaagte, near Ladysmith, was sketched by an artist of the Illustrated London News, to which publication we are indebted for the picture. The description reads:

"One of the Boers stood firing until the cavalry (Fifth Lancers) were within twenty yards. He then jumped up behind another Boer and the British corporal ran both through. The lancer, who could not withdraw his lance, was shortly afterward killed."

Supplementary to this, it may be said that according to British accounts the lancers inspire great fear among the Boers. The latter stand rifle and artillery fire with the composure of veterans, but the sight of the charging lancers, with their long spears pointed toward the heart, demoralizes them.

WAR NEWS IN BRIEF.

Sixty-five cases of enteric fever are reported from Ladysmith.

Russian officers and privates continue to join the Boer army.

British censored reports say only 400 wounded at Tugela river Friday.

From lack of horses the Rough Rider force will be cut down to 10,000.

Conan Doyle, the novelist, has volunteered for South African service.

Cape Town advices say the Boers are massing a great force at Stormberg.

French press express sympathy for Gen. Buller in his alleged disgrace.

Lord Roberts denounces as untrue stories of disloyalty among the Irish troops.

The Umbria and three Allen Line steamers have been chartered as transports.

Queen Victoria entertained on Dec. 26, at Windsor Castle, the wives and children of soldiers in South Africa.

The British wounded who fell into the Boers' hands at Stormberg have been removed to Burghersdorp, ten miles north.

HAPPENINGS OF 1899.

SUMMARY OF A YEAR'S IMPORTANT EVENTS.

War in Philippine Islands and South Africa, the Dreyfus Trial, Political Difficulties in Samoa, Death and Destruction by Fire, Wind and Flood.

Many causes have combined to make the year 1899 a rather remarkable one. Its opening was signalized by Spain's surrender of the last vestige of her sovereignty in the western hemisphere; its progress brought forth the declaration of war between England and the Transvaal Republic, and its close leaves these nations still engaged in a bloody contest, that may result in important political changes in South Africa. During the year the fighting between the natives and United States troops in the Philippines has continued and the war is yet on.

Other events, aside from warfare, that have occupied public attention to a greater or less extent have been: Signing of the treaty of peace with Spain; settlement of difficulties in the Samoan Islands; trial, conviction and pardon of Captain Alfred Dreyfus in France; numerous large fires that have destroyed many lives and much property; tornadoes that caused disaster and death at Kirksville, Mo., in April, and at New Richmond, Wis., in June; several fatal shipwrecks; deaths of prominent men, among them President Felix Faure of France, Garret A. Hobart, Vice-President of the United States, and Robert G. Ingersoll; great street car strike at Cleveland and labor riots at Pana and Carterville, Ill.

A brief chronological transcript of the year's events is given below:

Why Fishes Are Slippery.

Fish of almost every sort are, when fresh caught, slippery and hard to hold. This slipperiness is due to a sort of mucus exuded through the scale, and is of the greatest importance to all slimy creatures.

One of the important functions of the fish's slimy coating is to protect it from the attacks of fungus, a form of plant life found in all waters, salt and fresh, foul and pure. If the fish is so injured that some spot becomes uncovered by the slime, a barely visible fungus will be likely to lodge there, and when it is once lodged the process of reproduction is very rapid. It soon extends over the gills and kills the fish.

The primary purpose of the slime of the fish is to reduce its friction when in motion through the water and increase its speed. It also serves as a cushion to the scales, which it thus protects from many injuries.

A Remarkable Shawl.

The Duchess of Northumberland possesses a shawl given her by Charles X. of France, which cost a fabulous sum. It is manufactured from the fur of a species of Persian cat, the hair of which is so fine that one strand is hardly visible to the naked eye. The spinning, weaving, and fashioning of the material required several years of labor and thousands of cat skins.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Young Girl Returns Stolen Money—Powell Convicted of Shooting His Divorced Wife—Burglars Unsuccessful—Throws Himself on Judge's Mercy.

Mamie Galvin, an Elwood girl of 14, returned $500.40, stolen recently from Manager C. S. Creighton of the Elwood Radiator works. She refuses to tell how she came in possession of the money. The stolen cash constituted the week's pay roll of the radiator works. It was in a pocketbook in Mr. Creighton's overcoat while he was eating dinner and was stolen during meal time, the thief having to go within a few feet of Mr. Creighton to secure it. Mamie Gavin threw the pocketbook over the fence of Mr. Creighton's home and then ran away, but she was speedily overtaken. It is believed she returned it at the instigation of the real thief.

Finds Grant Powell Guilty.

At Rushville the jury returned a verdict holding Grant Powell guilty of shooting his former wife, Mrs. Ruby Powell, with the intention of committing manslaughter. The penalty fixed by the indeterminate sentence law is from two to fourteen years at Michigan City prison. The shooting occurred Aug. 27 last after midnight. Concealed in the bushes, Powell fired into the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Veatch, wounding Mrs. Powell, William Searcy, a farm hand, and Mrs. Veatch. Mrs. Powell lost her left eye and Searcy his left arm as the result of the shooting. Powell and his wife were divorced in June. He desired to remarry her and was jealous of Searcy.

Accepts Sentence to Prison.

William E. Miller, the Rushville insurance agent and forger, has been given an indeterminate sentence in the Michigan City prison of from two to fourteen years. Miller has been in jail since his arrest in June. His case was called for trial about a month ago, but the jury disagreed, ten jurors favoring conviction. Miller's defense was insanity. His second trial was set, but the prosecution has been so active in bringing to light facts concerning Miller's former career that he decided to chance his case with Judge Morris.

Burglars Try to Rob a Safe.

Burglars made an unsuccessful attempt to rob the safe of William Charpe, banker and grain buyer at New Paris. They used nitroglycerin and blew off the outer door, but failed to get into the burglar-proof vault, containing $1,000. The explosion aroused the citizens, and ten shots were exchanged with the robbers, who escaped. There were five men in the gang. The building was damaged $500 by the explosion, the front door and windows being blown out.

BE A GOOD BOY; GOOD-BYE.

How oft in my dreams I go back to the day
When I stood at our old wooden gate,
And started to school in full battle array,
Well armed with a primer and slate.
And as the latch fell I thought myself free,
And gloried, I fear, on the sly,
Till I heard a kind voice that whispered to me:
"Be a good boy; good-bye."

"Be a good boy; good-by." It seems
They have followed me all these years;
They have given a form to my youthful dreams
And scattered my foolish fears.
They have stayed my feet on many a brink,
Unseen by a blinded eye;
For just in time I would pause and think:
"Be a good boy; good-bye."

Oh, brother of mine, in the battle of life,
Just starting or nearing its close,
This motto aloft, in the midst of the strife,
Will conquer wherever it goes.

Mistakes you will make, for each of us errs,
But, brother, just honestly try
To accomplish your best. In whatever occurs,
"Be a good boy; good-bye."

Lassoing a Burglar.

THERE was really no one at the Collingsworths who approved of Tony except perhaps the twins, and they were not at all responsible authorities.

"We just like her 'cause she's Tony," Tad would say, emphatically, when cornered for a logical reason. "And she tells us Indian stories, and knows about birds and bugs and snakes and things, and don't say, 'Run away, children,' the minute she sees somebody that's grown up, the way Marion does."

"And she isn't afraid of anything—not even mamma," Roy would add, solemnly.

It was nearly two months since Tony had come from far-off Wyoming to make her home with her uncle's family. Aunt Henriette had disapproved of her from the first morning when she entered the dainty reception room and stood there proudly, a tall, tanned and healthy young person, with frank eyes and rough curly hair, which positively refused to stay in place under her red Tam O'Shanter. And then there was Rattles, and on this point words failed Mrs. Collingsworth. Rattles was very large, long of limb and lean, and immediately appropriated the twin's playroom as his happy hunting ground.

"Finest hound in the whole State, Uncle Otis," Tony said, enthusiastically. "Why, last year when the gray wolves came down and carried off some of the sheep papa and I started out with only Rattles and his brother, Hoodoo, and we tracked them clear up the valley, you know, where the shoulder of the Big Horn comes around in a sort of curl, and Rattles found them. Hoodoo was killed, but I've got the pelts on my wall home at the ranch—three of them—and when papa died he told me to bring Rattles on to Chicago with me. You don't care, do you?"

Mr. Collingsworth looked up at the stalwart young figure standing on the hearth with the great hound crouched at her feet, and as he listened to her a breath of the old free life came back to him again and he half wished he had stayed, like Dave, Tony's father, on the home ranch. But he caught Aunt Henriette's eyes and remembered with a sigh that he was in Chicago and president of a bank and with Wyoming farther away from him than mere miles. But he liked the dog and the twins adored it, so Rattles remained with Tony and shared her trials and troubles in the new life.

"What makes you have funny names?" Tad had asked bluntly, the first time he and Roy found themselves along with their new cousin. "Tony's a boy's name, and Rattles isn't any kind of a name."

"Well, his whole name's Rattlesnake Billie, and he's named after one of papa's cowboys—the one who taught me how to throw a lariat, but it was too long to yell good, you know, so I just cut it down to Rattles. And my name is Marie Antoinette, but papa said I might get off on the hills or in front of the cattle and get killed before he could remember it all, so he called me Tony."

"Oh," said Tad, reflectively, and then added, after a pause: "You're an awfully funny girl, but I guess we'll like you. Mamma won't and Marion won't, and papa's afraid of mamma, so even if he does he won't dare to show it much, but Roy and I'll like you, and if you get lonesome come on down here in our den and we'll take care of you."

Before the two months were up Tony had discovered how true a prophet Tad was, and the little cozy room back of the library became her place of refuge in many a time of need, although Rattles was banished from it to the back yard whenever Aunt Henriette's nerves were in a particularly irritable condition.

"And she says we mustn't throw the lariat in the house," Roy said, ruefully, one day when he and Tad had been having a high old time with Tony's "rope" and saddle and Indian trophies, and it had ended in Shakespeare being lassoed and yanked unceremoniously from his pedestal in the library and hauled at the end of the lariat by a whooping brave until a plaintive voice came from the regions above calling for "Antoinette."

So the "rope" was looped up and hung on a peg in the den, and Tony tried to be dignified and graceful like Marion, and not rush up the stairs two steps at a time, or whistle, or tell the twins blood-curdling narratives that savored of the adventures of Rattlesnake Bill and his kind. But still she felt that she was far from being a satisfactory representative of the Collingsworths in her aunt's eyes, and many a time, after every one had retired and the house was still, a white-robed girl would steal softly down the broad staircase and into the den to have a quiet cry all by herself, with Rattles' head on her lap as he watched her with his deep-set, solemn eyes.

It was on one of these nights that the great event happened which changed the whole aspect of things so far as Tony was concerned. She had been in disgrace that day. There had been a swell function of some kind, and the twins had been summarily called from the den to appear before a select company. But instead of two pretty figures in black velvet and point lace there had come forth two full-fledged Indian braves in feathers and war paint, bubbling over with laughter and all ready for a powwow.

Of course, Tony was blamed, and she would not have cared if only a dismal wail of woe from the nursery had not told her that others shared her punishment, so it was a great relief that night to steal down to the den to have the usual cry, with Rattles as chief consoler.

The hour was very late. Tony heard the clock in the library chime 12 and then half-past, and Rattles moved uneasily once or twice, his head raised in the air as if he scented danger, but the girl was too tired and heartsore to notice him, and at last, with a parting pat on Rattles' nose, Tony left the den and started through the long, dark corridor toward the stairs, when, all at once, she noticed that the door of her uncle's private room and study was ajar and saw a faint, wavering glimmer of light shine through the aperture.

Alert and soft-footed as one of her own Wyoming wildcats, she tiptoed across the hall and looked in. A broad mahogany desk stood in the center of the room, and just beyond this was a small safe, a light steel one, in which Mr. Collingsworth kept his papers and all articles of value. On the desk was a carefully wrapped bundle suggestive of silverware and other things portable as well as valuable, and kneeling on the floor in front of the safe, with his back to the door, was a man working steadily at the combination lock.

Tony hesitated an instant, her first impulse being to run upstairs and tell her uncle. The burglar alarm was at the front door and another at the drawing-room windows opening on the veranda, and she thought that while she was trying to reach them her presence might be discovered and there would be trouble. And, besides, she suddenly remembered Aunt Henriette's nervous condition. She would have hysterics or something just as dreadful if she heard a commotion downstairs. Tony decided, and with a new idea in her head she turned and went back to the den.

Rattles was settled on the rug, and with a long yawn stretched himself when he saw the familiar figure; but she did not rouse him. Taking the lariat from its peg, she withdrew on tiptoe, leaving the door unlatched. There was a little smile on her lips as she stood again outside the study door, this time with Rattles crouching by her side and with the long rope coiled in Rattlesnake Billie's favorite style in her left hand. After all, it was such a joke for her to be using it here in Chicago, just as it might have been thrown about the throat of any half-breed or criminal off on the plains, and she wished in that moment of hesitancy that her father were there to see her throw. Then noiselessly she moved the door open, and her heart beat faster as the dark head raised a bit higher over by the safe. The next moment there was a swift swish as the long, curling rope cut the air with true, sure aim; then the quick, tightening jerk as it drew taught about the man's neck, tighter and tighter, for it was not Marion's slim, soft hands that were pulling on the other end, but a pair of strong, firm ones that had made several self-respecting bronchos come to their senses before now.

Tony knew that the burglar had struck the corner of the big desk when the lariat jerked him backward, and as the dog leaped forward with a growl, she stepped into the room to see how matters stood. The burglar was lying as he had fallen, his face darkening to dull red, his eyes closed, and all at once a natural girlish fear swept over her, and before she knew it she had slipped out and shut the door, leaving Rattles on guard.

A few seconds later Mr. Collingsworth was awakened by a soft tap on his door.

"It's me; Tony," said a low voice that shook a trifle. "I want to see you, uncle."

"I'm awfully sorry to wake you up," she went on when he had slipped on a dressing gown and met her, bright-eyed and pale. "But I've caught a man down there—in the study—oh, it's all right!" as he gave a quick exclamation and turned back for a weapon. "I—I lassoed him, you know, and Rattles is watching him."

Mr. Collingsworth looked down an instant at the face upturned to him, and his tone was unsteady as he said, quietly:

"Go to your room, dear. I'll do the rest."

But, as the twins said when they heard the whole story and had glorified their heroine to their heart's content the next day, there wasn't any rest to do. The lariat had settled the whole matter, and it was a very limp, half-strangled burglar that the police removed from the house after Rattles had been relieved from his vigilance. As for Aunt Henriette, she had no words to express her admiration and wonder, and the lariat was hung in a place of honor over the great antlers in the library and Tony was taken once and for all time into the bosom of the family.—Chicago Record.

SHE ENJOYED PERFORMANCE.

Retort of Young Girl at the Theater to a Rude Man's Apology.

It was at one of the leading theaters of Chicago, says the Chronicle, that the incident happened. It was not an unusual incident, by any means, but the dialogue proved of exceptional interest to all who were fortunate enough to hear it. In fact, much of the interest was transferred for a while from the stage to the two-part show which was going on in front of the footlights. It was a case of suave politeness and courtesy in the person of a lovely young girl opposed to rudeness and a tardy apology from a big, red-faced, ungallant man. This is the manner of the performance not cast in the programme.

He was, as has been said, large, red of face, wheezy of breath by reason of an expanse of waistcoat and shortness of neck. He occupied a seat in the center of the row in the orchestra chairs. She was a gentle, sweet-faced girl, calm and sedate, dressed in a gauzy gown heavily crusted with jet spangles. She also wore a fur and tulle hat which, with her opera glass case and her wrap, she held in her lap in compliance with the Plotke law. She had a seat to be removes nearer the aisle than the one occupied by the wheezy man.

She was on the improvised stage first. That is, she reached her seat before he did and was comfortably settled to enjoy the performance. He was late and she rose to let him pass. He wanted to see a man after the first act and she was compelled to rise again to let him out. This byplay occurred a third time when he had seen the man. Then the second act was reeled off and the big man found it necessary to go out again. Fourth rise for the lady. Then she made the fifth ascension as he struggled in when the third act—the most exciting of the play—was well under way. Some faint glimmering of propriety penetrated his intellect. He paused just before completing his clumsy evolution.

"I beg your pardon," he muttered. Then he plunged on and smashed the hat, already badly battered out of all original semblance to itself, tore off a few more spangles and twisted his frame through to where his seat was.

"I hope you will not mention it," said the girl sweetly as she resumed her seat and arranged things. "Please don't mention it. I enjoy it so much."

She delivered the words in a cultivated voice, to be sure, but she elevated that same voice so that her words were heard some half a dozen rows back of her. The fat man gasped, fell into his seat and mopped his face. He sat in that seat until the end of the play, gazing fixedly at a small window in the set as if fascinated. The red expanded well back on his neck as he listened to the twitter of laughter and comment of others on the byplay. A round of applause following the girl's speech only tended to make him more miserable.

"I HOPE YOU WON'T MENTION IT," SAID THE GIRL, SWEETLY.

INVENTIONS RUN IN CURRENTS.

Several Brains Generally Evolve the Same Idea Simultaneously.

"A man in my line of business," said a local attorney who makes a specialty of patents, "has an exceptional opportunity for finding out that great minds run in the same direction. It is a remarkable fact that fully seven-eighths of the important mechanical appliances of the past fifty years have been the subject of litigation on the ground of priority of invention. In almost every instance it was clearly shown that different people, sometimes as many as five or six, were at work on the same idea at the same time, each unknown to the other. A somewhat plausible explanation has been advanced for these remarkable coincidences," continued the lawyer. "It is, in brief, that certain universal needs suggest similar trains of thought to active minds and in searching for the best remedy they fall insensibly into the same channel. This is only another way of saying that necessity is the mother of invention, but it is hard to apply the theory to scores of devices that were certainly not the subject of any specified demand. Take the telephone, for instance.

"At the time Prof. Bell was perfecting his instrument at least three other inventors were developing the same thing and he beat them to the patent office by a mere scratch. Everybody remembers the long and bitter contest that ensued, and I believe, personally, that each of the parties to it was in entire good faith, although it is almost impossible to convince an inventor, under such circumstances, that there has been no fraud. Every man believes firmly that the other fellows have stolen his idea. The arc light, the incandescent light, the X-ray apparatus, the typewriter and the gas engine are a few of the big things I call to mind at random in which there was the same coincidence of thought.

"Two of the latest and most remarkable instances in point are wireless telegraphy and liquid air. The fundamental principles of both were old and had been experimented with and discarded as impractical. Then suddenly, after the lapse of years, two groups of inventors begun the task of development. In wireless telegraph Marconi had three rivals—one an American, but he was fortunate enough to get out his patents ahead of the others. Who built the first liquid air apparatus is at present in dispute, and two companies, each headed by a claimant, are now in full blast in New York. If ever you have an extra good idea you would do well to secure the protection of a patent without delay. It is 50 to 1 that some other chap is pegging away at exactly the same thing."—New Orleans Times Democrat.

WHITTIER'S PREDICAMENT.

"The Quaker Poet" Blinded Himself to a Military Salute.

Whittier held "Gail Hamilton" (Abigail Dodge) in the highest esteem, and the letters that passed between them are really most delightful. These are now published for the first time in the Ladies' Home Journal. Here is one of the series that is truly characteristic of Whittier. It was written in 1866:

"I must tell thee something droll. Last week the Amoskeag Veterans from New Hampshire, and a Massachusetts company, with military bands, came and paraded before our house, and Governor Smyth, of New Hampshire, and one or two officers called on me. When they left and I stepped out to see them civilly off, the men in epaulettes got up a grand military salute, with music and three cheers to wind up with! Was ever a Quaker in such a predicament? I did, I fear, somewhat compromise myself by lifting, almost involuntarily, my hand to my hat—but I resisted the temptation and only pulled my hat lower down over my brows by way of testimony."

Two Fads of Joseph Chamberlain.

Long before the Transvaal trouble the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, present Minister of State for the British Colonies, was famous the world over two things: his orchids and his monocle. His costly collection of orchids is one of the finest in the world. It is said that once in Paris he saw a rare orchid, the duplicate of one he had recently added to his own collection. He asked the price. "Twenty thousand francs," replied the dealer.

The Englishman paid the money, and then, throwing his flower on the floor, crushed it with his heel. However reliable this incident may be, the following is vouched for: Since boyhood Mr. Chamberlain has worn a monocle. When the young man first entered Parliament his fame as a municipal reformer had preceded him. Among the visitors who were present on that occasion were Lords Beaconsfield and Carnarvon. The commoner had won his election to the house by his vigorous opposition to the great Conservative's methods. As he came into the chamber Lord Carnarvon leaned forward and said:

"Here comes young Chamberlain."

"Ah!" replied Beaconsfield, as he took in the young man from tip to toe.

"What do you think of him?"

"He wears his monocle like a gentleman," replied the premier.—Philadelphia Post.

Diplomacy of an Editor.

Editors of newspapers are often in jeopardy of their lives, and only by coolness and discretion do they escape from the harm which might otherwise come to them from cranks. The editor of a certain newspaper in a New Jersey town was approached by a well-known general whose death had been published in the paper several days before.

"I want that statement taken back, sir," cried the general, "or I'll have your life."

The editor looked frightened, but retaining his presence of mind answered: "I am very sorry, my dear sir, but we do not take back anything we have published, nor can we contradict mistakes, but," with a broad smile, "tomorrow we'll publish your name in the column of 'births.'" The humor of the remark struck the general and his anger was appeased.—Philadelphia Call.

Responsibility of Riches.

No sovereign is so rich as the Czar, and no sovereign has such heavy calls upon his purse. The grand dukes Michael, Vladimir, Alexis, Serge and Paul Alexandrovitch, as the sons of Emperors of Russia, receive from the head of the house an annual sum of 185,000 roubles (£26,200) each, which, added to private means, makes them very rich. The wives and widows of Russian grand dukes receive 40,000 roubles each; their sons 150,000 roubles. It was the Czar Alexander III. who decreed that every member of the imperial family must spend a part of the year in Russia, or else lose a third of his or her allowance.

The great libraries of Pekin contain volumes of books numbered by the hundreds of thousands. In the archives of the government are still to be found the ancient predictions of eclipses made with great accuracy, together with works on astronomy which show a fair knowledge of that science.

In some towns of Germany the telephone is introduced by tobacconists as an additional attraction to customers. Any one who buys a cigar may, if he desires, speak over the tobacconist's instrument.

FACTS ABOUT GINGER.

IT IS THE ROOT OF A TROPICAL REED.

Import Tables Show that It Ranks Second to Pepper Only Among the Spices, About Even with Cassia, and Ahead of Cloves.

Ginger is the root of a kind of reed, grown both in the East and West Indies and China, also largely in Malabar, and to a certain extent in nearly all tropical countries; it is also to be found, though of poor quality, in most of our gulf states. The stem or reed is an annual, and grows directly from the root every spring to the height of about three feet, with long blades or lanceolate leaves, resembling very much in style and color our American maize or corn. This reed or stalk terminates in an oblong scaly spike, and from each of the scales grows a little blue and white flower. This plant is now cultivated in very great quantities in the West Indies, especially in the Island of Jamaica, from which place the finest and most esteemed is imported.

Jamaica ginger is not only cultivated to very great perfection, but the selecting, scraping, drying and all the necessary details in its preparation are observed with the utmost care and nicety. Ginger is imported into this country either in the form of the dried roots or as a preserve in syrup and comes from Cochin China. Africa and the East or West Indies. The preserved ginger from the West Indies is much esteemed and commands a very high price. The ginger root grows in knotty branched pieces, in low, fenny or marshy soils, and has a pleasant aromatic odor and biting taste. There are two kinds of ginger, viz., the black and the white. Black ginger consists of the inferior roots, which have been steeped in boiling water previous to being dried in the sun. The color of the darkest kinds, however, is not black, but more of a dirty brown or stone color. White ginger consists of the roundest and finest roots scraped clean and then dried carefully without being scalded. It is firmer, less fibrous and more pungent than the black, and from the fact that the finest and soundest roots are always selected, white ginger is, independent of the manner of its preparation, superior to black, and always realizes a much higher price in the market; but the difference of color depends wholly upon the manner of curing or preparing. For both of these kinds the tubes or roots are allowed to ripen; that is, they are not dug up until after the annual stalks are withered.

The principal varieties of ginger known in commerce are, white ginger—Jamaica, Cochin China. African, East Indian or Bengal and Tellicheri; black or dark ginger—Jamacia and Malabar. Gingers imported into Europe are subjected to various modes of treatment, which tend greatly to improve and preserve them, for the finer its quality the more susceptible is ginger to the ravages of the fly or ginger worm. These various modes of treatment are washing, brightening and bleaching, and the gingers are consequently known in the trade as "originals," viz., the ginger as imported; "washed," that which has been cleaned in water slightly acidified; "bright," the ginger which has undergone the preparatory course of bleaching, and "bleached," that which has received a coating or dressing of lime, etc. These latter modes of treatment of ginger until recently were carried on exclusively by experts in Europe, and it is only within the last few years that the art has been introduced into this country. Preserved ginger as manufactured here and in Europe is dark and fibrous, but when prepared in the East or West Indies or China, the West Indies especially, from the young roots, it is almost transparent. It is imported in jars, and should be of a bright, yellow color. Ginger is imported from Jamaica in barrels of about 100 pounds each, with actual tare allowance; from Cochin China and Malabar in cases of about 200 pounds each, also with actual tare allowance. African and East Indian ginger comes in bags of 100 pounds each bag.

Ginger is one of the most important members of the spice family. The import tables show that between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 pounds of the dried root is used annually in this country, about the same quantity as is taken of cassia. Between 250,000 and 500,000 pounds of preserved ginger is imported annually, the average import price for the preserved article and the root being about four cents a pound in each case.

In order of importance, as shown by the import tables, ginger ranks with cassia next to pepper, which is twice as popular as any other spice, and cloves are a good third.

LARGE PROFITS OF A BEGGAR.

Legless Man Received Charity that Made Him Rich.

There was a man in New York who had lost both legs, and who, seated in a wicker basket, pushed himself along where people could see him. Coins came to him in small showers. The basket was a part of his business outfit. When off duty, that is, when not soliciting alms, he wore two well-made artificial legs and walked on crutches.

One of his most fruitful fields was Coney Island in the season, and having gained the good-will of a resident of the place he used to deposit his legs at the man's house when he went abroad to touch the hearts and the pursestrings of the pleasure-seekers. One evening, when he returned from "work," he found that the closet in which his legs had been placed was locked and the custodian of the key gone for the night.

"Never mind," said his friend. "Stay here over night and I'll give you a shakedown."

"No I must be in New York tonight," he said, "and I've got to have my legs too!"

"But why not stay here and save car fare and be on time for work in the morning?" his friend asked.

Neither argument nor persuasion had any influence on the man, whose nervousness increased perceptibly, and as his friend was making ready to break down the door behind which the legs were stored he asked: "Why must you be in New York to-night and why do you compel me to force this closet door?"

"Well the truth is," said the legless man, "I bought an apartment-house last week and promised to pay $10,000 on the bargain to-night, and unless I get away pretty soon I'll get there too late and forfeit the amount already paid down."

The friend was speechless with amazement and his astonishment grew when he heard a few weeks later, that the apartment-house which the poor man spoke to him about was the third which he had purchased since he went into the begging business.—New York Tribune.

ISLE OF MONTE CRISTO.

Prince of Naples Presents It as a Gift to His Wife.

Now the story comes that the young Prince of Naples has purchased the Island of Monte Cristo as a present for his charming wife and erected there a hunting lodge, which he proposes to make his headquarters whenever the fancy seizes him to flee from the glare and bustle of court life.

Outside of Dumas' work you will find very little mention of the island. Yet that it has had a romantic history is pretty clear. Situated as it is in the Mediterranean, twenty-seven miles south of Elba, it is manifestly impossible that it was always as isolated and as desolate as it has been within the last few centuries.

There are grottoes on the island, but hardly such a one as Dumas describes—the one in which the marvelous treasure was found. At the same time there are few places in the world where a treasure is more likely to be buried, and for the very good reason that in bygone ages this Island of Monte Cristo was a favorite resort of smugglers and pirates. Neither does it contain anything likely to attract the ordinary tourist. The ground is mainly covered with bowlders, and there is not an acre of land which can be cultivated. On the other hand, the sportsman and the naturalist will find many treasures amid this mass of rock.

That the Prince and Princess of Naples will heartily enjoy whatever days they may spend on this rugged and romantic spot is certain. Both of them are fond of outdoor life, and there are few better sportsmen than the Prince in Europe. For that matter there are very few women who are more skilled than the Princess with a shotgun or a rifle.

If the Prince and Princess so desire they can be as isolated on their island as they would be in the heart of Africa, and with this difference—that within a few hours after the whim siezes them they can be transported from their oasis to the heart of Italy.—Detroit Free Press.

MONKS AND MONKEYS.

Ancient Metropolis of Amber Given Over to Friars and Simians.

Mrs. Clara Erskine Clement describes in part a visit to the ancient city of Amber, in India, which is inhabited only by a few priests and thousands of monkeys. Elephants from the stables of the maharajah of Jeypore conveyed her party. The hill on which the old city stands is surrounded by other high hills, crowned with towers and ramparts and covered with trees. The great castle fortress stands out boldly. The old zenana, or woman's apartments—an extensive block of buildings, surrounded by a court—is the only place which is inhabited. This is a well populated and lively quarter, since a tribe of languor or hoonoomaun monkeys have taken possession and dwell here in comfort and freedom. The Hindoos religiously refrain from hurting or killing any animal, and the monkeys, having no fear, are monarchs of all they choose to take.

The hoonoomaun, or languor, is the sacred monkey, and the largest found in India. Its height is from two and a half to four feet; its body is singularly slender and supple; its face is black and smooth, except for long white whiskers; the hair on the body is gray on the back and white under the stomach; its tail is long and bare, with a single tuft of hair on the end. The Hindoos have a legend which explains its very black face. It says that ages ago Hoonoomaun, the king of the monkeys, went to assist Rama in the conquest of Ceylon. The demon king of the island had carried off Lita, the wife of Rama, and he was determined to rescue her. As they came near to the island Hoonoomaun easily leaped over the straits, so skillful a jumper was he, and, finding Lita, he was comforting her with the news that her husband was approaching, when Ravana, the demon king, appeared and made Hoonoomaun prisoner. After setting fire to the monkey's long tail he gave him his freedom, that he might return to Rama. Hoonoomaun succeeded in blowing out the fire at the end of his tail, but in so doing he blackened his face and singed his hair in a most unbecoming fashion. The loss of his beauty so saddened the poor beast that Rama made all the monkeys of his kind kalamoukh, or black-faced, which they remain to this day.—St. Nicholas.

How Missourians Were Made.

There are many ways of settling a State, according to Ainslee's Magazine. Here's the story of Missouri:

"Tennessee mountaineers took advantage of the more level lands of Missouri to fill that state in an incredibly short space of time after the treaty with the Osages, and in the state's rich and abundant soil and water they might have made one of the largest and greatest of the American commonwealths nearly half a century ago had not the vicinity been so tempting to the Confederacy and so important to the North. In the terrific contest that waged over the freeing of the slaves, the young men and the adventurous of the community found it easier to migrate than to remain at home, easier even at the cost of facing the unexplored regions of Kansas, New Mexico and Arizona. The enduring ones tarried, suffered the emotions of war, posted the sacrifice of $40,000,000 to be free of serfdom, and stamped upon Missouri the characteristics of combative endurance."

Austria is the country most lenient to murderers. In ten years over 800 persons were found guilty of murder, of whom only twenty-three were put to death.

JOHN JOKER.

Lady—A gentleman called, you say? Did he leave any name? Parlor Maid—Oh, yes'm. He said it was immaterial.

It is said that a burnt child dreads the fire. Probably that's why the newly-married man tries to avoid his old flames.

Critics (looking at a picture of the impressionist school)—If that's high art, then I'm an idiot. Cynicus—Well, that is high art.

He (in an argument)—Well, thank goodness, I'm not two faced. She—You ought to be thankful. One face like yours is enough.

"Do you know that you talk in your sleep, Henry?" asked Mrs. Peck. "Well, do you begrudge me even those few words?" he snapped back.

"What is a winter resort, Uncle Jim?" "A winter resort? Well, any place you go where you don't let yourself think it is as cold as it is at home."

"Aincher workin' now, Jimmy?" "Naw. Strike." "Chee." "Tree of 'em. I strikes de ole man fer a raise, he strikes a attitude, an' den I strikes de sidewalk."

Police officer (to organ-grinder)—"Have you a license to play? If not, you must accompany me." Organ-grinder—"With pleasure! What will you sing?"

"You haven't another cigar like the one you gave me the other day, have you?" "Yes; here's one." "Thanks, old man. I'm trying to break my boy off smoking."

Emma—And, Charlie, dear, would you have really shot yourself if I had refused you? Charlie—Indeed, I would. I had already sent to four gunsmiths for price lists of revolvers.

Beggar (to gentleman on the promenade)—Do you happen, sir, to have lost your purse? Gent (feeling in his pockets)—No! Beggar—Then you can let me have a little assistance.

It is difficult for the belated clubman to realize that the towering female who stands at the head of the stairs is the timid little girl who once fainted in his arms at the sight of a mouse.

Miss Howler (who sings)—"That gentleman you just introduced me to said he would give anything if he had my voice. By the way, what business does he follow?" Friend—"He's an auctioneer."

Little Boy (writing to his schoolmaster)—Everybody at home is delighted with the progress I have made at your school. Why, when I came to you I knew nothing, and now, even in this short time, I know ten times as much! —Punch.

"I remember as well as if it only happened yesterday, that in my younger days I once walked twenty miles at a stretch for the purpose of thrashing a hated rival." "And did you return on foot?" "No, they brought me back in an ambulance."

Mrs. De Fine—"Here's my new bonnet. Isn't it a darling? Only four pounds ten shillings!" Mr. De Fine—"Great snakes! You said bonnets could be bought at from seven shillings and sixpence up." Mrs. De Fine—"Yes, dear. This is one of the 'ups.'"

"No!" said the cheerful man; "a man can't be too careful about writing letters." "I quite agree with you," replied the nervous individual. "I wrote three once that have kept me in hot water ever since." "Love letters, I suppose?" "No, sir; 'I O U.'"

Pusher—"Gusher is not very happy in his choice of adjectives." Usher—"Why so?" Pusher—"Miss Gumms fished for a compliment by asking him what he thought of her slippers." Usher—"And what did he say?" Pusher—"He said they were immense."

Kitchen Maid (at crockery shop)—What! only a half-crown tip? During the past year I have broken three soup tureens, twenty-six cups, thirty-five saucers, five meat dishes, and fifty-six plates. Shopman—Well, then, here's another florin; and don't forget me, you know.

Little Dot—"Mamma, I was playing with your best tea set while you were away, an' when you bring it out for company you'll be shocked, 'cause you'll think one of the cups has a hair in it, but it isn't a hair." Mamma—"What is it?" Little Dot—"It's only a crack."

"Good morning, uncle. How are you to-day?" "Ah, nephew, I am well. How are you?" "First-rate. Guess what brought me here?" "Oh, the old story, I suppose!" "I'll bet you five shillings you can't guess!" "I'll take it! You came here to borrow some money." "You've lost! Pay me the five shillings. I only wanted to inquire how aunt is to-day!"

A story is told of a British soldier in Egypt. His colonel, observing him one morning wending his way to camp with a fine Egyptian rooster in his arms, halted him to know if he had been stealing chickens. "No, Colonel," was the reply; "I just saw the old fellow sitting on the wall, and I ordered him to crow for old England, and he wouldn't, when I confiscated him for a rebel."

Traveler (to an Irishman)—"Well, Mike, I see you have a small garden!" Mike—"Yes, sorr." "What are you going to set in it for next season?" "Nothing, sorr. I set it with potatoes last year, and not one of them came up." "That's strange. How do you explain it?" "Well, sorr, the man next door to me set his garden full of onions." "Well, had that anything to do with your potatoes not growing?" "Yes, sorr. Bedad, them onions was that strong that my potatoes couldn't see to grow for their eyes watering."

Advice.

SEMI-ANNUAL CLEARANCE SALE

12 Days To Secure These BARGAINS.

Commencing Saturday, Jan. 6, ending Saturday, Jan. 20, 1900.

12 Days To Secure These BARGAINS.

We are going to give the buying public of DeKalb County an opportunity of buying Reliable Shoes at prices unheard of in the sea of shoe selling. Prices which on the present advancing market would seem like business suicide for us to make. Our reasons for thus sacrificing seasonable goods is simply this: We have thrown aside the middle-man and bought largely for SPOT CASH direct from the manufacturers and are thus able to save fully 25 per cent. on our spring purchases. It takes MONEY to do this, and this is our method to raise same; believing it better policy than to borrow the money and carry our stock over and get the advance price on same next season. Below we give you a partial list of the bargains waiting here for you. Come early and get first choice.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....JANUARY 4, 1900.

Democratic Convention.

To the Democrats of the Twelfth Congressional District:—Pursuant to the orders of the democratic state central committee notice is hereby given that a convention will be held in the town of Auburn, at 1 o'clock p. m., on Tuesday, the 9th day of January, 1900, for the purpose of electing a member of the state central committee for the Twelfth congressional district of Indiana, to serve for the ensuing two years. In said convention the counties will be entitled to the following representation:

Allen county, forty-two votes.
DeKalb county, fourteen votes.
Noble county, fourteen votes.
Lagrange county, six votes.
Steuben county, seven votes.
Whitley county, eleven votes.

The chairmen of the several county committees will take the necessary steps prior to said date for the election of delegates to said convention. In this connection I desire to thank the democracy of the district for the honor bestowed upon me heretofore and to announce that I will not be a candidate for re-election.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
District Chairman.

December 16, 1899.

Election of Delegates.

To the Democrats of DeKalb county and all others who desire to act with them in the coming campaign:

Pursuant to the call and notice of the District Chairman you are requested to meet at your usual places of meeting in the different townships on Saturday, the 6th day of January, 1900 at 1 p. m., to select delegates to the district convention to be held in Auburn, Tuesday January 9, 1900, for the purpose of electing a district chairman for the ensuing campaign. The various townships are entitled to representations as follows:

Butler	One
Concord	One
Jackson	One
Newville	One-third
Stafford	One-third
Troy	One-third
Wilmington	One
Union	Two
Keyser	Two
Richland	One
Grant	One
Fairfield	One
Smithfield	One
Franklin	One

About the Court House.

Tuesday's Daily.

It was expected that Judge Watkins of Huntington would be here at noon to take up the work in the circuit court but he sent a message that he was detained and could not reach here until this evening. He will begin work in the morning, and the first case set for trial is that of the McClellan estate and L. J. Miller against Mrs. Coffinberry, DeKalb county, and John Yarde, administrator of the Coffinberry estate, to recovery money paid by the plaintiffs on the official bond of Coffinberry as county auditor. This is an important case, and the attorneys employed are among the best in this part of the state.

A suit was filed today by William R. Edwards against Elmira Edwards, for divorce. The plaintiff makes some sensational charges against the defendant, and as that he also be given the custody of the two children, a boy and girl. The parties live at Butler and were married in 1892. Frank A. Brink is attorney for the plaintiff.

The commissioners met in regular session yesterday, but so far little business of importance has been transacted. The county printing matter was again taken up this afternoon, and the board may conclude, instead of calling the county council together to make provision for the difference between their appropriation and the amount of the lowest bid, to purchase from the Burford schedule only such goods as will be needed until funds can be secured in the regular way to make up the balance.

Tomorrow will be liquor license day, but there will be few if any applicants.

Treasurer Hines returned Saturday evening from Indianapolis where he made his settlement with the treasurer of state. Auditor Seiler has also made his report to the state auditor.

ENGAGEMENT BROKEN OFF.

A girl in Montgomery broke her engagement with one of the wealthiest young men in the county, because he had indigestion so bad he was a menace to her happiness and no good to himself. What a relief just one bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin would have been to that man, and what a boon it is today to many a household, where it keeps all the family in a state of health that warrants true love, confidence and happiness in the home. Try it yourself. At H. B. McCord's.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our sincere thanks unto all our friends for their favors of love and kindly assistance rendered Mr. Jackman and ourselves during his sickness and our great sorrow.—MRS. EDWARD JACKMAN AND FAMILY.

Has DeKalb a Kangaroo?

That is the question that Frank Cosper is now wrestling with. He is quite a hunter and has quite a weakness for rabbits. Saturday he was out gathering in the cottontails when he came across a track of unusual size and whose "leaps" would evidently make the figures in the old mental arithmetics look small. The tracks were about eight feet apart on ordinary ground, but on coming to a brush heap, the animal went straight over it, making a leap of twenty-four feet. And the question is, have we a kangaroo, or is it a jack rabbit strayed in from the west?

HAVE YOU A COLD?

—If so, then instead of taking so much quinine take a pleasant and mild stomach and bowel remedy which will cleanse the system, and you will be surprised how quickly the cold will leave you. We sell Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for just this purpose. Try it. 10c, 50c and $1. For sale by H. B. McCORD.

OBITUARY.

Catharine Clark was born in Clark Co. Ia. Feb. 26th 1829. Died in De Kalb Co. Ind. Dec. 28th 1899 aged 70 years 10 months 2 days.

She married D. H. Hamman May 20th 1845. To which union were born two sons and three daughters. A. C. Hamman, B. F. Bamman, Sarah Zentz Elizabeth and Amanda all of whom survive her.

She came to DeKalb county in 1846. Bereft of the husband of her youth she was again married to John Bowers, and to them was born a son Peter Bowers, who still survives her. John N. Clark at DeKalb county Ind., and Daniel N Clark of Kent county Mich., and a sister Mrs. Annie Hammon, still survive to morn her, also sixteen grandchilnren and ten greatgrandchildren. She had the blessing of christian teaching by parents of the faith, who presented her to the Lord in a baptismal christening, performed by one Rev. Geiger on the 14th day of May 1826. John Bordner and Catharine his wife standing sponcern. Her life was one of faith in God and she died a member of the Dunkard church.

The funeral services were chnducted by Rev. W. O. Butler at Hamilton and was largely attendid.

OBITUARY.

Ida May (Metcalf) Eberly, daughter of Daniel D. and Catherine Metcalf, was born five miles east of Auburn, Sept. 7, 1866, and departed this life at her home in Auburn between the hours of four and five o'clock a. m., Dec. 30, 1899, aged 33 years, 3 months and 23 days. Her mother died Oct. 30, 1872, and she was then placed among friends until on May 10, 1874, her father was again married to Margaret J. Bair who ever since has been to her a kind, loving and sympathetic parent. She was married December 20, 1885, to Joshua Eberly. To this union were born two children, Flora Mabel and Howard D. When she was about fourteen years of age under the ministry of Rev. H. J. Morris, at the Chapel bearing his name she was happily converted to God, and united at once with the M. E. church. During a part of the period from her conversion to her death, owing largely to the fact that she did not have the best of church advantages, she was not so active in the service of her Master. Two years ago she united with the M. E. church at Auburn where she has remained a faithful and persistent member until her death. She suffered much during her illness, but during it all remained very patient and was fully reconciled to the will of God. During her last moments on earth she was exultant in praises to God, fully demonstrating to all around her bedside that she died the death of the righteous Her last words were: "Come, take me, take me."

The deceased leaves to mourn her departure, a husband, two children, father and stepmother, three sisters and two brothers, besides a host of other relatives and friends.

"A dear one has gone from our circle,
On earth we shall meet her no more;
She has gone to her home in heaven,
And all her afflictions are o'er."

Consumption Threatened.

O. Unger, 212 Maple St., Champaign, Ill., writes: "I was troubled with a hacking cough for a year and I thought I had the consumption. I tried a great many remedies and was under the care of physicians for several months. I used one bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar and it cured me, and I have not been troubled since.

—Several Auburn republicans are after appointments as census enumerators. The democrats have not had control of that branch of government for lo these many years, their opponents being in power at the end of each decade since 1860.

Stop coughing, as it irritates the lungs, and doesn't give them any chance to heal. Foley's Honey and Tar cures without causing a strain in throwing off the phlegm like common cough expectorants. H. B. McCORD, DRUGGIST.

The Coffinbury Case.

This case is one brought by the estate of the late Judge McClellan to recover from the estate of the late H. N. Coffinbury or that of his widow, the money paid out by Judge McClellan and his estate. The settlement of this case will also settle the same matter in regard to J. L. Davis and L. J. Miller, the other bondsmen of Coffinbury. It will be remembered that a judgment of $7,000 in all had been rendered against these bondsmen, and a part of the judgment had been paid. Judge McClellan and his estate had paid $2,000; Miller had paid $2,000, and J. L. Davis had paid $1,758, to which Miller and McClellan added $375 in order to help get the matter settled, making a total credit for the J. L. Davis part of $2,133. The case as stated is to ask that Mrs. Coffinbury be made to refund the money, as the plaintiffs claim that the money that went into the Coffinbury residence, was Mr. Coffinbury's money and not his wife's. It is a case very much involved and difficult. The attorneys on both sides are able and will make a hard fight. For the plaintiff, are Roby and Sharpless; for Mrs. Coffinbury are Rose & Rose, and Daniel Fraser of Fowler, Ind.

The attorney for plaintiff had read the several steps taken in appointing an administrator for the Coffinbury estate, John Yarde jr., the report of appraisers of the personal property and similar matters. It appears that the personal property all told was put at $496 which Mrs. Coffinbury took as so much of the $500 allowed a widow by law. It was also shown that the real estate is in her name. It appears the lots, seven in number, were bought of Geo. Behler in 1893, for $750, and Coffinbury bound himself to build a house for not less that $2,500 on the same. In March '96 deed was made to Mrs. Coffinbury, but was recorded in December 29, of that year.

The first witness called was James H. Rose. He was attorney for the county at the time the county troubles were going on, and also when judgment was rendered against McClellan, Miller and Davis as bondsmen.

Tried Five Doctors.

Mr. Frances L. Sales of Missouri Valley, Ia., writes she had severe kidney trouble for years, had tried five doctors without benefit, but three bottles of Foley's Kidney Cure effected a perfect cure. H. B. McCORD, DRUGGIST.

WEIGLE & CUTLER.

OBITUARY.

Nora E. Titler was born May 29, 1873, died December 24, 1899, aged 26 years, 6 months and 25 days.

She was the daughter of Franklin and Catharine Titler, who resided in Smithfield township at the time of her birth. Orphaned by the death of her father, she remained with mother during her widowhood, and after her stepfather, C. Welch came to comfort and support them, she still had a home with the family.

She was married to William Swager May 29, 1892, and has always resided in DeKalb county Three children came to gladden her life, one of whom died in infancy. Clio and Leon still survive. She united with the Christian church at the age of fifteen under the pastorate of Rev. Ackman, and has lived a faithful adherent in the faith to the end. She was an exceptionally dutiful child, a faithful, loving wife and a tender mother.

An ominous cloud foreshadowing that impending disease, consumption, hung upon the horizon of her life and toned it to seriousness, for the past five years The last two years past, have been filled with suffering to her, and sadness to the patient, faithful husband, who has endured the discouragements with commendable fortitude. The obsequies were conducted by Rev. Higgs, assisted by Rev. Butler, in the U B church and the interment was made in the Waterloo cemetery, where ten months ago her sister Daisy, was also laid to rest.

The Road, Poll and Dog tax are included in first installment.

Taxes of 1899 are due the first day of January, 1900, and may be paid in full or in two installments. The first installment must be paid on or before the first Monday in May, 1900; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1900. If the first installment is not paid when due both installments become delinquent. Ten per cent will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of property.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty and charges on delinquent taxes resulting from any omission of the person paying to state definitely on what property, in whose name and in what township and corporation it was assessed.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once. The law is of such a character that there is no option left to the Treasurer but to enforce the collection of delinquent taxes, however much he may regret to collect the same by sale of property.

"The owner of property on the first day of April of each year shall be liable for the taxes of that year. The purchaser of property on the first day of April shall be considered the owner on that day."

Examine your receipts before leaving the office and see that all your property is included.

No county order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of land and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday in February, 1900.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days. We have 6,000 receipts to make, and all cannot be made in the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the first Monday in May and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipts will be made out for any party until they are ready to pay.

Assignees, guardians, administrators, and others who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as individual estates, etc., are earnestly requested to settle such taxes before the last few days as it requires considerable time to make the divisions and separate receipts therefor. As the Treasurer cannot know the location of each person's property, taxpayers should designate the property on which they wish to pay taxes and see that all property is specified on their receipts. If they have land in more than one township or town, or desire to pay taxes on lands not in their name, call the Treasurer's attention to the matter.

FRANCIS M. HINES, Treasurer.

Examine receipt before leaving office, see if all personal property is included

Monday's Daily.

—Frank Fretz of Rochester, Ind., has been in town a few days.

—Read the big ad of Schaab & Bro. They give you these big bargains every New Year.

—Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Palmer of Larwill are visiting with his brotners, Wm. and John Palmer.

—Albert Palmer and family of Garrett were Sunday visitors with Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Palmer.

—Mrs. T. C. Ford was able to walk out a short distance today. We are glad to hear of her improvement.

—Invitations are out for the marriage of Miss Flora Thompson and Mr. Norman Jones of Garrett at an early date.

—W. C. Hartman reports over fifty loads of logs delivered Saturday at the Roann hoop mill, besides many loads of stave bolts.

—Lew Willis and wife of Indianapolis came down Saturday and are guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Willis and the other relatives.

—Today, new freight rates go into effect on many roads, raising the cost of transportation on hay 20 per cent, and on most articles about that much.

—The Pullman and the Wagner sleeping car companies have combined into a big trust, so that the country now has practically only one company.

—Fort Wayne is to have a post of the "Spanish American War Veterans." Among those mentioned as members are H. K. Scott and N. W. Gilbert of Angola.

—Wm. Dawson is now paid ahead on the COURIER. We are pleased to note his prosperity, for he has just built an $1,800 dwelling but owes not a cent as the new year starts in.

—J. A. Lambert of Rachel, N. C. writes: "I heartily endorse Foley's Kidney Cure. It does what you claim it will do, and there is nothing equal to it and I thank you for the good it has done me." H. B. McCORD.

—Chauncy C. Sherck of Concord came up town today with his father, Abram Sherck, and took the noon train for Angola, where he is a student in the Tri-State College. Of course he wants the COURIER so as to have the home news.

—St. Joe News.—A large audience greeted H. G. Provines at the Christian church last Sunday evening, and they were well repaid for going, by being permitted to hear an excellent sermon. H. G. is making fine progress in his chosen profession and will no doubt make his mark in the world.

—Hugh Harter returned to Ft. Wayne today after a few days pleasently spent with young friends here. Next week he goes back to the universiny at Ann Arbor.

—A correspondent asked yesterday how this date would look. "Auburn, Ind., 1—1—'00". It looks all right and is correct though of course the combination is a little strange at first.

—The time of year is at hand when the fellow who is too stingy to take a newspaper, and depends upon the patent medicine almanac for his reading matter is in the height of his glory.

—W. H. McIntosh was the first patron in the New Year, to pay up on his COURIER. As he pays in advance, he is now on the 1901 list. The office force also, thank him for a New Year gift, a sack of fine apples. We hope his trees will be loaded next year.

—"It has become a household medicine with us,—we cannot get along without it," writes Mrs. R. R. Wilson, Gordon, Ark., of Beggs' Cherry Cough Syrup, the guaranteed remedy for coughs, colds, la grippe, consumption and all kinds of bronchial affections. Never fails.—Sold by H. B. McCORD.

—George Shugers and wife return to Coldwater this evening after a pleasant visit with relatives and friends here. Mr. Shugers says his firm is at work on a new motor carriage, but that it is not fully perfected. He says when the machine is finally got in running he will probably run over here and give his friends a ride.

—Butler Herald:—Treasurer Hines, of Auburn, was in the city Wednesday on official business. He is one of the most popular officials who ever occupied that office, and is always careful, courteous and attentive to all. His official elevation has not given him a swelled head, but he is the same genial Dr. Hines as of old. It is always a pleasure to support such men.

—Judge Wilson of Goshen has made a rule governing change of venue cases, wherein there shall be no court charges other than those actually incurred. In some counties it has been the practice to fill out the entire bill of costs, whether or not the duties have been performed; trial or no trial. Under the present fee and salary law this really makes little difference, for the counties generally manage to even up when opportunity affords.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Mrs. Amy R. Kelley is another name on our list of 1901.

—Forty-one marriage licenses were issued by county clerk Long during the month of December.

—Miss Leone Hinman of Waterloo was the guest of Miss Nettie Olinger during the holidays.

—Dewey has again been honored by having a new postoffice in Laporte county named after him.

—W. B. Brown, left yesterday for Des Moines, Iowa, where he will resume his business in the West.

—Wm. Marvin who was visiting his sister Mrs. Amy R. Kelley, has returned to his home at Findlay, Ohio.

—Cal Husselman is at Indianapolis looking after his candidacy for member of the state board of agriculture.

—Miss Nettie Olinger of this place and Miss Leone Hinman of Waterloo spent Sunday with M. H. Olinger and wife of Garrett.

—The first new subscriber to the Weekly in the new year, is our old friend Daniel Mottinger of Franklin. Glad to see his name on our 1900 list.

—Mrs. Mary Boyer went to Fort Wayne on the forenoon train. She goes for treatment at Hope hospital, and her father, Wm. Walsworth, accompanied her.

—The South Bend Times is now located in a fine new building of its own, fitted with all modern conveniences. The Times is one of the best papers in the state and deserves prosperity.

—Bill Hilker, who was tried at Fort Wayne for assult and battery upon the person of a young girl whom he took out buggy riding one day last summer, was sentenced to six months in jail and and to pay a fine of $800. In addition to this he will have to pay costs amounting to about $250. Serves him right.

—Miss Laura Keeran came home from Chicago yesterday afternoon, and is now out at Adam Prosser's, to take care of Mrs. Prosser, who is sick. While in Chicago she visited with Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Merica and found them nicely situated. She also had visits with Frank Davenport and family and with Ella Gregg.

—The Columbia City Post says there is a freak in the Ohio Legislature. He hails from Coshocton county and with his pockets full of passes walked to the state capitol, to show his contempt for railroads. Indiana had an overall freak in her last legislature who would no doubt make a good mate for the Buckeye statesman of pedestrian tendencies.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian church will give their usual anniversary dinner on January 17. Full notices will follow.

—Germany alone of all the nations of the earth celebrated New Year's Day as the beginning of a new century. The emperor thinks he don't have to wait for the opinion of any one else.

—The safe in the office of Dr. Moore at Merriam, Noble county, was blown open Sunday night and robbed of $125. A pair of bloodhounds were put on the trail, but failed to catch the burglars.

—Hunters in Michigan and some other states, have been a sorto f profit to the localities where they go. But now that they have to pay a license of about $25, they don't go. Guides and other interested people are asking to have the license law repealed.

—Place your confidence in a remedy that is guaranteed to cure. "I coughed constantly and my strength was all exhausted. I looked more like one dead than alive. Beggs' Cherry Cough Syrup entirely cured me."—Mrs. S. D. Harsh, Fairport Kan. For all throat and lung troubles. It has never failed. —Sold by H. B. McCORD.

The G. A. R. and W. R. C. held a public installation of their newly elected officers at their hall last night and it was an enjoyable affair to all concerned. G. W. Gordon installed the officers of the Post, while W. H. McIntosh performed the same service for the Relief Corps. After the work was completed all did full justice to a fine lunch served by the ladies and everybody present enjoyed a general good time.

Amos Sweigart and wife came home yesterday from a week's visit with friends in Franklin, especially with the family of Daniel Mottinger. Mrs. Mottinger is Mr. Sweigart's mother and has been sick, but is now getting better. He brings word that Mrs. Katie Hammon was buried Saturday, at the age of over 70 years, and that Edward Jackman was buried Sunday. Both were old residents and well known in that section.

—A special dispatch from Logansport states that $2,500,000 worth of bonds will be issued on the electric railway to be built from that city to Rochester, Warsaw, Albion and Kendallville. The bonds have already been sold, so that the money for the building and equipment of the road will soon be available.

—George Till, the popular clerk at Lester's lunch room, and Miss Clara Helfrich of Elkhart were married at that place last Thursday. They returned to this place Monday and for the present will make their home with his brother Lester on north Main street. The COURIER extends congratulations and good wishes.

—At the trial in regard to the Waterloo opera house, Attorney Phillips recalled the fact that many years ago, the city of Jeffersonville wanted to get the county seat away from Charlestown and passed an ordinance to appropriate $87,000 to build a court house, jail, etc. The matter got into court and it was decided that the city council had no legal right to build a court house.

—A man named Walters at Fort Wayne had both legs and both arms crushed by being run over by a train Monday evening. He was taken to St. Joseph hospital where seven surgeons amputated the four members, and it was reported this morning that he was still alive with a bare chance of recovery. It is the only quadruple amputation ever attempted at one operation.

—In the Monroe county circuit court a decision has been handed down which is of interest to every township trustee in the state. The decision holds that all of the books provided by the law must be kept, and county boards have no right to give authority to curtail this itemizing. A trustee can be impeached for failure to keep a proper kind of books, and can be fined $500. The advisory board has no jurisdiction over the employment of teachers and simply pass on the trustee's appointments.

Butler Man Disappears.

There is quite a bit of excitement at Butler over the unaccountable disappearance of W. H. Curtis, the secretary and treasurer of the Butler Canning Co. He went to Chicago last Wednesday to collect money due his compnay and was expected home on Friday, but has not yet returned. Yesterday was pay day for the farmers who had furnished tomatoes for the plant, and they came in to get their last installment. But they waited in vain. No Curtis came.

All that is known of Curtis in his transactions at Chicago, is that he collected $1,200 of a firm there and asked for the cash instead of a check, and that he started for his train home Thursday evening. He is an Indianapolis man, but he has a wife and small family in Butler. He has $2,000 stock in the canning factory, which makes it seem unlikely that he would run off with $1,200. The chances are that he has been robbed. Steps are being taken to get information of his fate.

Advance a Step.

If you have been in the habit of taking pills for your constipation and with poor results, just try a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you will be surprised at the results. Very pleasant to take. 10 cents, 50 cents and $1. Sold and recommended by H. B. McCord.

—Wm. Baily came home yesterday from Bethel, Mich., where he had visited the family of G. W. St. Clair. They had heard from Fred Sodtman, that he had arrived in Oklahoma all right.

—Several months have passed since Nickum, the famous light man, has offered to give a public exhibition. The silence is so profound that the people of Logansport are calling upon Nickum to say something.

A PROMINENT LAWYER.

Of Greenville, Ill., Mr. C. E. Cook, writes- "I have been troubled with billiousness, sick headache, sour stomach, constipation, etc., for several years I sought long and tried many remedies, but was disappointed until I tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I can cheerfully recommend it to any suffering from above complaints." H. B. McCORD.

—M. H. Olinger at Garrett was much surprised last Sunday on reaching home, to find his friends and relatives assembled to celebrate his twenty-third birthday. All report a good time and plenty of good things to eat.

TEN CENTS WORTH OF PREVENTION

If you are subject to colds, the very best thing you can do is to keep your system in as open and perfect condition as possible. If you do this you are much less liable to take cold. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is as pleasant to take as pure maple syrup and is the most effective stomach remedy to be had. Trial sizes, 10c (10 doses 10 cents); large sizes, 50c and $1. At H. B. McCord's.

After having spent ten years suffering, the doctors finally confessed they were unable to cure me or do me any good. I moved to Texas in search of health, but found it not. One day, while suffering intensely, a lady brought me a bottle of Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier and insisted that I take it. Without faith, I began to take the medicine, and to my glad surprise I found, before I had taken one-half of a 50c bottle, I began to improve. After taking four or five bottles I became well —LULA BERRY.

Baron Alderson once remarked to an advocate who was notorious for the personal nature of the questions he addressed to witnesses, "Really, you seem to think that the art of cross-examination is to examine crossly."

The late Lord Watson had a habit of interrupting counsel, and this often caused irritation. One distinguished advocate once reproached him on this account in private. "Eh, man," said Lord Watson, "you need not complain, for I never interrupt a fool!"

William T. Stead was moved to send a copy of his brochure, "Shall I Slay My Brother Boer?" to two London editors. One reply ran somewhat thus: "Dear Mr. Stead: What, in heaven's name, have I to do with your family affairs? Yours sincerely, ——." And the other: "My Dear Sir: By all means—if he insists upon it. Yours faithfully, ——."

"It is a constant wonder to me," said the student of human nature, "to see how quickly the minds of some men act. I met a man the other evening who had an intellectual grasp that was astounding. I met him in the hall just as he was reaching for an umbrella. 'Is that your umbrella?' he inquired. 'No,' replied I. 'In that case,' he answered, 'it's mine.'"

Tom Corwin had an enormous mouth. He once said he had been insulted by Deacon Smith. The good brother asked for further explanation. "Well," said Corwin, "when I stood up at the lecture-room to relate my experience, and I opened my mouth, Deacon Smith rose up in front, and said: 'Will some brother please close that window and keep it closed?'"

Dr. Emily Blackwell, one of the pioneers of her sex in medicine, heard a physician deliver a fierce diatribe against opening the doors of the profession to women. When he ceased, she asked: "Will you please tell me one reason why they should not practice medicine?" "Certainly, madam; they haven't the muscle, the brawn, the physical strength." "I see, sir. Your conception of a sick-room is a slaughter-house; mine is not."

Half a dozen back-country Boers once went to Pretoria, and during the day President Krueger showed them over the government buildings. In one of the rooms an electric lamp was burning, and as they passed out the President, with his hand on the switch, asked them to blow out the light from where they stood. One after another drew a deep breath, blew out his cheeks, and sent forth a tremendous puff, but all in vain. Then the President bade them look, and, blowing out his cheeks, slyly turned the switch, blew, and out went the light. The Boers were amazed, and as they left the buildings one of them who had been more observant than the rest, remarked: "The President must have a wonderfully strong breath, for, did you notice, the light was entirely inclosed in glass."

On one occasion Lord Norbury observed an attorney of doubtful reputation prospecting in the dock for business, and determined to make an example of him. Just as the attorney was climbing over the rails of the dock into the court, his lordship called out: "Jailer, one of your prisoners is escaping. Put him back." Back the attorney was thrust, and the following colloquy ensued: "My lord, there is a mistake here. I am an attorney." "I am very sorry, indeed," said Lord Norbury, "to see one of your profession in the dock." "But, my lord, I am innocent." "Yes, they all say that," was the judge's reply; "a jury of your own fellow-countrymen must settle it." "But, my lord," exclaimed the now desperate man, "there is no indictment against me." "Then," said his lordship, "you will be put back, and if no one appears to prosecute, you will be discharged by public proclamation at the end of the assizes."

SOLDIERS DIG FOR TREASURE.

Our Men Are Dreaming of Becoming Monte Cristos.

"I have a cousin in the Thirty-third Infantry, now in Manila," said an employe of one of the city hotels to a New Orleans Times-Democrat man, "and he says in a letter which I received from him the other day that all the men in his company are badly worked up on the subject of buried treasure.

"It seems that one of the privates, while prowling about a deserted Filipino house a few weeks before the letter was written, found a small wooden box buried in the yard, containing $600 in Spanish gold. He reported the discovery, and an effort was made to locate the owner of the money, but he had disappeared in the hurly-burly, and the supposition is that he was probably killed in some engagement. At any rate the soldier was allowed to retain the coin, and the episode naturally excited everybody in the ranks. My cousin says that a number of such finds have been made by men in other companies, and that the burying of money and articles of jewelry appears to have been a common practice among the Filipinos as they retreated before the American troops.

"The consequence is that the ground around their ruined homes is being industriously prodded with bayonets, and all our men are dreaming of becoming Monte Cristos."

Game Horse.

"I've seen many a thing on race tracks, but I think the greatest race I ever saw was at New Orleans a few years ago," remarked a track follower the other day.

"It was several years ago at New Orleans, and one of the best horses to bet on was Duke of Milpitas, owned by Ald. Casey, of Chicago. But he was a rogue, and whenever he took it into his head to run no one could beat him, but if he sulked nothing could budge him. On this particular day he was a warm favorite, as the distance was seven-eighths, the going heavy and all conditions just to the liking of the Duke. He went to the post all right, but he was soon out of sorts, and no amount of lashing could make him budge. Finally a "twitch" was sent for and the assistant starter soon had the Duke toeing the mark. Finally he showed inclinations to run, and down went the flag, with the Duke off in front. The 'twitch' had caught on his nose in some manner and the stick kept hitting him on the legs and chest. Despite this—or, perhaps, on account of it—the Duke ran faster than he ever did before. He won all the way, with the 'twitch' hanging to his nose. Ald. Casey won a small fortune on his horse, and has the same old 'twitch' hanging in his private office to this day."

"CON" MAN.

Caused a Well-Known Firm to Withdraw Its Bank Deposit.

"Do you know that thieves have often caused trouble among business firms?" remarked a well-known detective the other day. "I know of a case right here where a bank lost a big depositor through a pair of swindlers. A few years ago a well-dressed man presented himself at a certain national bank and laid down a check for $3,000. It was signed by a well-known wholesale whisky house, and upon the back were the words 'identification waived.' At the same time a well-dressed man entered the office of a live stock firm at the stock yards and asked if he could wait in the office, as he expected a telephone message. He was told that he could, and he took a seat near the telephone. Down in the bank the paying teller was asking who the holder of the check knew. He said not very many firms as he was a stock dealer, but if the teller would call up Mr. Smith, of Jones & Smith, the well-known brokers at the stock yards, he would find out that he was all right. The teller called for the number, and when the ring answered he asked for Smith. The man on the end said he was Smith, and he at once gave Brown, the holder, the amount of the check. When it was discovered that the check was a forgery there was an awful kick, as Smith said Brown was as good as gold. Smith declared he had talked to no one, and the result was an argument between Smith and the bank teller. No one knew about the accomplice answering the 'phone, and the result was that Smith took his account from the bank and no one ever knew who it was who answered the telephone."

NEW USES FOR GLASS.

Pavement Tested in Lyons Has Proved Perfectly Satisfactory.

The United States consul at Lyons has recently reported upon a new kind of pavement which has for some months been in use in Lyons, and has satisfactorily withstood the effects of heavy traffic, says Chambers' Journal. It is made of glass prepared in a peculiar manner, the product being known as ceramic stone. The factories where this material is prepared are of great extent, and we are told that in the yards were seen many tons of broken bottles, which the superintendent described as their "raw material." The treatment consists in heating the broken glass to the melting point, and then compressing it by hydraulic pressure and forming it into molds. For paving purposes the glass is made into bricks eight inches square and is scored with crosslines, so that when the pavement is completed it resembles a huge chessboard. The glass loses its transparency and brittleness, and is said to be devitrified; it is as cheap as stone and far more durable. It will resist crushing, frost and heavy shocks and can be employed for tubes, vats, tiles, chimneys, etc. It is available for all kinds of decorative purposes; and a large building made of the material will form an attractive object at the Paris exhibition.

Scientific Guesswork.

Sir Joseph Prestwich, a distinguished English geologist, acquired extraordinary skill in making deductions from the surface formation of a piece of land. To some of his simpler neighbors his science seemed pure divination.

In 1864 Sir Joseph purchased an estate near Sevenoaks, and built a house upon it. The farmers about were amazed at his stupidity. His house was on a dry and treeless chalk hillside. There was not a drop of water to be had.

So confident was Prestwich in respect of water supply, however, that he at once engaged an old well-digger to sink a well one hundred and sixty-eight feet deep.

The boring proceeded, but when a depth of one hundred and sixty-six feet was reached the two workmen went to the city and sought an interview with their employer, whom they found at his desk. They explained to him that there was no sign of water, and that in their opinion it was useless to bore to a greater depth.

"Go on," was the quiet rejoinder. "You will come upon water to-morrow. You are within two feet of it."

The next day it proved exactly as Prestwich had foretold. And ever after, among many of the denizens of the valley, Sir Joseph had the reputation, much to his amusement, of not being quite "canny."

The "Smelling Cure."

Interesting experiments with the odors of herbs have from time to time been made, and it has been found that many species of microbes are easily distroyed by various smells. The odor of cloves has been known to destroy microbes in 35 minutes; cinnamon will kill some species in 12 minutes; thyme in 35. In 45 minutes common wild verbena is found effective, while the odor of mint has destroyed various forms of microbes in 55 minutes, and it is recorded as the most effective of all odors as an antiseptic. It is now believed that herbs which have been found in Egyptian mummies were placed on the bodies more for their antiseptic properties than as mere ornaments or objects of sentiment.

Needle-Threading.

An ingenious lady has suggested an improvement in the method of holding a needle for the purpose of threading it. It is to be held between the third and little fingers of the left hand instead of by the thumb and forefinger, palm uppermost. The advantage of this is that the thumb and first finger can be used to grip the smallest end of the thread as soon as it protrudes from the eye, a method preferable to that of letting go the thread and endeavoring to get hold of the end with the right hand. This prevents the weight of the cotton from dragging the end out of the eye again.

DOINGS OF WOMEN

WOMEN LACK GRATITUDE.

AVERAGE women are utterly lacking in gratitude. This sweeping statement is made from personal observation and personal experience. Women do not mean to be ungrateful, but they are a thoughtless lot, and the day after a service has been rendered them it somehow becomes deadened into the mistiest sort of a memory, and though they intended to be oh, everlastingly grateful, they forgot all about their emotion of that character, and rather take kindnesses shown them, favors bestowed upon them and service rendered them as quite their right and natural due, and grow decidedly cross and ugly when a hundredth service is denied them, retaining no memory of the ninety-and nine favors that have been their portion formerly.

When one discovers a grateful woman she appears to be a veritable rare avis and is regarded as possessing an unusually fine character, whereas she has only the decency to be properly appreciative. Men are largely responsible for this defect in woman's makeup. They flatter her into the belief that nothing on earth is good enough for her and then growl when they have so far succeeded in convincing her that these views are the right ones and tell her she demands more than they can give and isn't grateful for the small favors they bestow upon her.

Let me whisper to the vain little potentates that they can not always rule with the high-handed insolence of youth and beauty, and it is well to cultivate a characteristic of appreciation, so that what they can not demand will be meted out in the true spirit of friendliness and humanity. The day may come when on a bed of illness you are left to the mercies of strangers, your kith and kin having either died or deserted you. Then it is that the spirit of gratitude comes in very strong and apropos. Every one likes gratitude, and it is a quality worthy to be cultivated as the rarest flower in the garden of woman's nature.—Philadelphia Times.

Mason's Two Daughters.

Misses Ethel W. and Ruth W. Mason, daughters of the Illinois Senator, are studying law at Washington College. Ethel is 24 and Ruth 21. Both are singers of more than ordinary ability and culture and are well versed in all social attainments. At law school these sisters are prominent students.

ETHEL AND RUTH MASON.

They were refused admittance to the Columbian Law School because of its antipathy to co-education, but at Washington College they are expected to take high degree. In addition to her school work Miss Ethel fills a position in the Congressional library.

A Lack of Manners.

The authoritative tone that the majority of young women take with their mothers nowadays is not precisely an indication of good breeding; but then good breeding seems to be rapidly going out of fashion, complains a woman of the world. A few relics of it are still left, just enough to show how delightful a thing it was. A really courteous man is now described as being "of the old school." A really high-born woman is called "old-fashioned."

Nobody would like to see children go back to the stilted stiffness of the days when they called their parents "Sir" and "Madam." But their present demeanor is the reverse of polite or gentle, and reflects but little credit on themselves or on those who have brought them up. The mothers seem to get accustomed to this kind of brusquerie from their daughters, and do not perceive its effect upon people who hear and see it for the first time.

Woman County Treasurer.

Miss Nellie Tulley, of Silverton, is now treasurer of San Juan County, Col., and enjoys the distinction of being one of the women in the United States that have acted as custodians of county funds. She was elected on the Democratic ticket at the last election by a large majority over her opponent, who was a man. She was then acting as assistant postmaster at Silverton, a position she has filled with credit for several years. She was required to furnish a bond of $75,000 for the faithful performance of her duties.

MISS TULLEY.

A Bride's Whims.

The up-to-date bride doesn't care for orange blossoms. She considers them decidedly provincial, even while admitting that much sentiment clings to them. She prefers myrtle in her hair and orchids in her bouquet. Ruffled chiffon she thinks softer, less trying and more youthful and becoming than even ancestral point lace, and as for her frock being made of white satin or brocade, why she would just as soon have mousseline de soie or chenille embroidery over Liberty satin, and of late she has shown a great fondness for embroidered crepe de Chine.

Show Art in the Kitchen.

In the home there is an ever-present welcome for individuality. Art kitchens are not unusual, where each labor is dignified and simplified through an earnest effort to make it beautiful. The few plants in the window, the utmost cleanliness—little by little each day—the bright tins and the radiant copper, the cool granite, the shining range are so helpful to the occupant. If the food be simplicity itself, economy is to follow. A little thought in purchasing, a little attention, a few kind words, and the queen of the culinary department does not fear the invasion of an army, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. She realizes that her systematic methods are repaying her a thousand-fold; that duty has become a pleasure, and that the appreciation and co-operation of the family have made a palace where cares are nominal.

Family Invitations.

It is a general rule that not more than three persons in the same household should accept an invitation. This rule may of course be broken when special circumstances seem to justify it. A daughter may accept an invitation to a house where her mother has never been asked, and members of a family should not feel hurt when some are invited and others left out. At the same time, in the case of weddings in church and for larger general affairs a hostess should be careful to send invitations to all the members of a family which she knows well. It is not polite to address the envelope inclosing an invitation "Mr. and Mrs. Brown and family." There should be a separate invitation for "The Misses Brown," and another for the brothers in the household.—Leah Lanceford in the Woman's Home Companion.

Wedded Her Sailor Lover.

A romance reaching half way around the world culminated in Hong Kong, China, in the marriage of Miss Mabel Flinn, of Fort Hamilton, to Ensign Albert Marshall, United States navy. Two years ago Miss Flinn, who is a favorite in the society circles of Bay Ridge and Fort Hamilton, went on board the battleship Massachusetts in company with several other young women of Brooklyn. It was then she first met Ensign Marshall, who fell in love with her. The ensign was sent to Manila during the Spanish war. Some time ago Miss Flinn surprised her friends by announcing her engagement and her intention of crossing the Pacific to be wedded in a Chinese port. She left home, going by the way of San Francisco to Hong Kong. Miss Flinn is a young woman of rare beauty and cleverness, and Ensign Marshall, who is from Texas, is one of the most popular young officers of the Asiatic squadron.—New York Journal.

MISS FLINN.

Men as Housekeepers.

It is rather a humiliating fact that in occupations which custom specially relegates to women, the greatest successes are achieved by men. In the highest development of cooking and dressmaking it is the men, not the women, who have become most proficient, says the New York Evening Post. Similarly the man who has been what may be called an official housekeeper, who has looked after the institutions that are conducted by the state, can often give points to all other housekeepers.

The essentials of state housekeeping are economy, system and health—principles which apply as forcibly to everyday housekeeping. The wife of a former state housekeeper is indebted to her husband for many time and money-saving and health-promoting suggestions, some of which have been borrowed for the benefit of other housekeepers.

A Field of Work for Women.

A field of work for women which seems especially suited to them is the profession of trained librarians, and as yet it is by no means as overcrowded as many of the others to which they are called. There are thousands of public libraries in the United States, besides private, reference and college and school libraries, and in all of these there is said to be an increasing demand for the services of graduates of library training schools. There are three of these large training schools in the United States, and all of them are open to women on equal terms with men. At the largest of them preference is given college graduates, and a thorough high school education is essential for all candidates.

Points About Street Gowns.

Comme il faut street dresses keep as close as possible to the tailor build, and outre trimmings are not encouraged by women of refinement, says Vogue. Stitchings are, in spite of their popularity, as modish as possible, and for those who can spend but little on trimmings, they are the ideal finish.

Depend on a good fit, and pay attention to the harmony of your hat, the smartness of your vest, chemisette, tie, gloves, veil. Make no effort to be stunning. The street is no place for that sort of notoriety. One's personal charm has its effect on clothes. Trust to that.

Killed by Swallowing Pins.

It is usual for women employed in silk ribbon mills to keep a quantity of small pins in their mouths in order that time may not be lost in reaching for them, as would be the case if the pins were kept in traps. The women say it is no infrequent thing for them to swallow some of the pins. Among those employed in Simon's silk mill, at Union Hill, N. J., was Mrs. Jennie Smith. A few months ago she was taken ill and recently died from what was supposed to be consumption. A post mortem examination showed that her lungs contained several pins.

A Hint to Fleshy Women.

A noted singer's rule to reduce the weight twenty-five pounds looks easy. It is a diet of underdone beef and mutton, with vegetables, fruits and plenty of walking, but no medicines, sweets, cereals, starchy foods, or set gymnastics.

In Fiji Society.

First Fiji Belle—Do you think she has the face to be married with the two-ring ceremony?

Second Fiji Belle—Oh, yes, her face is certainly ample for two rings.—Detroit Journal.

A Precious Gem Story.

The tea things had been cleared away, and the head of the establishment was trying to read the evening paper, while his better half busied herself with some fancy work, and at the same time endeavored to interest him in the gossip of the neighborhood.

"Maria," said he, glancing up from his paper, "did you ever hear the story of precious gems?"

"Why, no," she replied; "what is it?"

"It's an old-time fairy legend that my grandmother told me when I was a boy," he continued, "about a woman from whose lips there fell either a diamond or a ruby every time she spoke a word."

"Well, go on," she said.

"That's all there is of it, Maria," he replied. "But I was just thinking that if such things happened nowdays I'd open a jewelry shop the first thing in the morning."

And then for thirteen consecutive minutes silence reigned supreme.

The woman who marries a man to reform him seldom lives long enough to finish the job.

DISMAL SWAMP CANAL

REOPENED AFTER BEING ABANDONED FOR YEARS.

Original Plans Of the Famous Ditch Were Drawn by George Washington, Then a Virginia Surveyor—Had Its Real Beginning in 1787.

After being abandoned for thirty-five years, the Dismal Swamp canal has been reopened. It connects the Chesapeake bay with Albemarle sound, and had its real beginning in 1787, when Virginia chartered a company with a capital of $80,000 to construct it. The original plans and specifications were drawn by George Washington, then a Virginia surveyor, more than a quarter of a century before the chartering of the company.

Lack of funds, the inferiority of engineering devices and later the war of 1812, all worked against its completion. When the funds were exhausted the company was authorized by Virginia to raise $50,000 by lottery. When finished, in 1821, the canal had cost $1,800,000, and extended from the village of Deep Creek, Va., to South Mills, N. C., twenty-two miles. Deep creek is an arm of Elizabeth river, and the village is about 300 miles from that river, making the northern terminus of the canal practically at Norfolk. South Mills is at the headwaters of the Pasquotank river, a tributary of Albemarle sound.

Now came an era of prosperity, and until 1860 the canal was one of the most prosperous business properties in the South. It provided an inland waterway that permitted the sending of cargoes by barges through to New England without breaking bulk. So rich and powerful did the company become that before long it was a great factor in Southern politics, and each time November rolled around the company was accused of bribery and corruption in influencing favoring legislation.

A reference to one of its old ledgers shows that from 1821 to 1855 the operating expenses of the company were $1,152,891.71 and the receipts over $8,500,000, a yearly average of nearly $200,000 clear profits.

With the coming of the civil war the glory of the canal departed, as the termination of trade relations between the North and the South took from the canal its most fruitful source of revenue, the New England traffic.

In January, 1862, the Confederate forces cut the bank and let the water out to prevent the Union troops from following them. The great expense of repairing this damage thoroughly drained the company's treasury, and when the United States commissioner came to collect the taxes he was informed that the company had no assets, being barely able to pay the lockkeepers, etc.

The crisis came in 1863. Congress had enacted that all public works in the South must be officered and managed by loyal citizens. After a stormy discussion the officers of the Dismal Swamp Canal Company absolutely refused to take the oath of allegiance, renewed their expressions of fealty to the Southern cause, and resigned. This resulted in the dissolution of the concern, and two months later the United States Government confiscated the property.

From this time until the close of the war the canal remained in the possession of the Government, and was the scene of many important military operations. In 1866, being of no further use and in a state of dilapidation, it was returned to such members of the company as still survived.

During the reconstruction period the canal fell into gradual decay and became a gloomy morass and the surrounding country was deserted save by a few negroes.

Three years ago the Lake Drummond Canal and Water Company bought the rights and thoroughly restored the canal after an expenditure of $900,000. The basis of reconstruction was a minimum depth of 10 feet, and a width of 40 feet at the bottom and 60 feet at the surface. The average width, however, will be not far from 80 feet. The old locks have been done away with and the canal is entered at either end by a large modern lock, 250 feet long and 40 feet wide, with 10 feet of water over the miter sill.

The canal is perfectly straight for nearly half its length. A little to the south of the feeder from Lake Drummond it makes a sharp turn and then pursues an undeviating path to its end. It is confined between high clay banks. From South Mills, the southern terminus, the route goes through Turner's cut, and here the swampy nature of the section is more apparent. The forest grows to the water's edge, and through the trees can be seen glimpses of wide, still pools. The pool water, as well as that in the canal, is deep brown, from the cypress and juniper timber through which it flows. It is said to be extremely healthful, and in former years vessels putting into Norfolk used to send their boats up Deep creek for a store of the water, to be used on the voyage. Turner's cut opens into the Pasquotank river, a picturesque stream, with many windings. The timber along its banks is thick and of much commercial value. Until the first tug passed through a short time ago, many of the inhabitants of this region had never seen such a craft.

With an inland route from New England to the Florida coast the terrors of a blockade in case of war should be diminished greatly. Such a waterway would give a back door entrance by water for torpedo boats. It would offer a means for transporting munitions of war and troops, as well as general supplies, which might be endangered should the outside route be taken. Recognizing this, the Government is co-operating in the work, and $237,000 has been appropriated for widening and improving the northern and southern entrances.

If you will return this coupon and three one cent stamps to the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass., you will receive in return a copy of the 20th Century Year Book.

This is not an ordinary almanac, but a handsome book, copiously illustrated, and sold for 5 cents on all news-stands. (We simply allow you the two cents you spend in postage for sending.)

Great men have written for the Year Book. In it is summed up the progress of the 19th century. In each important line of work and thought the greatest living specialist has recounted the events and advances of the past century and has prophesied what we may expect of the next.

Among the most noted of our contributors are:

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, on Agriculture; Senator Chauncey M. Depew, on Politics; Russell Sage, on Finance; Thomas Edison, on Electricity; Dr. Madison Peters, on Religion; General Merritt, on Land Warfare; Admiral Hichborn, on Naval Warfare; "Al" Smith, on Sports, etc.; making a complete review of the whole field of human endeavor and progress.

Each article is beautifully and appropriately illustrated, and the whole makes an invaluable book of reference, unequaled anywhere for the money.

Wabash Mexican Tour 1900.

On Feb. 14th, 1900, the Wabash Will run a personally conducted Special Tour to Old Mexico and return.

The Train will consist of elegant drawing room and compartment sleepers, observation and dining cars, built by the Pullman company especially for this service.

Arrangements are being made for a select party of fifty people and will positively not exceed that number. The tour will consume a period of thirty days, covering 7,000 miles. The dining car will be stocked with every delicacy and the drawing room and observation cars will afford the comforts of a model hotel. The whole tour costs about $10 a day.

Mexico can only be seen and appreciated by accompanying a party of this kind. Mr. R. G. Thompson, Special Passenger representative will manage this tour and is eminently fitted for the task owing to his numerous visits to Mexico.

LIFE INSURANCE CURED HIM.

Dying Bachelor Forgets to Die While Disposing of His Property.

"I don't know that life insurance is a cure for disease," said the retired life insurance solicitor, "but I know of an instance which makes it look that way. In the town where I first began business was a bachelor of about 50 years, who was quite alone in the world, and had some years before taken out a $5,000 policy on himself for the benefit of a maiden sister, who had died a year before the events of this story. He kept his policy going, however, because it was a good way to save money, and one day he was taken down with some kind of fever. He grew worse day after day, until one day the doctor told him that he would in all likelihood be dead within the next twenty-four hours.

"This suggested his life insurance money, all he had to leave, and he immediately began to talk with the doctor on the subject of a proper disposal of it. He concluded after some thought that the best thing to do with it was to blow it in on a tremendous big funeral for himself, including a banquet for all the people he knew. This was an entirely new idea for a funeral, and when the doctor left him that night, to the care of his nurse, his mind was entirely occupied with his funeral. He talked to the nurse about it and when the nurse made him stop he lay and thought about it. In fact, he became so much interested in the details of his funeral that he quite forgot about having to die to make it possible.

"In the morning when the doctor came he found his patient in a wild perspiration, and his pulse beating in much better fashion than it had been doing for some days. He also found the general condition of the patient much improved. He was greatly astonished, and at once began to ask questions. The patient told him with eager interest of a lot of new things he had thought of for the funeral and some that bothered him a good deal and said he had been thinking of it all night. Then the doctor laughed and told him he guessed the funeral would have to be postponed, for he wasn't going to die, just then, anyhow. Nor did he, and he isn't dead yet, but he is married and has his policy paid up for his wife's benefit."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Cooking a Husband.

In selecting your husband you should not be guided by the silvery appearance as in buying mackerel, or by the golden tint, as if you wanted salmon. Be sure to select him yourself, as tastes differ. Don't go shopping for him, as the best are always brought to your door.

When bought tie him in the saucepan with a strong cord called Comfort, as the kind called Duty is apt to be weak. Husbands sometimes fly out of the saucepan and become burned and rusty on the edges, since, like lobsters and oysters, you have to cook them alive.

Make a clear, strong, steady fire out of Love, Neatness and Cheerfulness. Set him as near this as seems to agree with him. If he sputters and fizzles don't be anxious. Some husbands do this until they are quite done.

Add a little sugar in the form of Kisses, but no vinegar or pepper. A little spice improves husbands, but it must be used with judgment.

Don't stick any sharp instrument into him to see if he is becoming tender. Stir him gently, lest he should become tasteless.

You cannot fail to know when he is done. If thus treated you will find him very digestible, agreeing nicely with you and the children.

SOME CLEVER WOMEN.

INVENTIONS THAT BRING WEALTH TO INGENIOUS FEMININITY.

Seventy-five Per Cent of the Patents Taken Out by Women in the Last Five Years Have Been Profitable—Range of Improvements.

Men acquainted with the field say that fully seventy-five per cent. of the patents taken out by women in the last five years are yielding profitable returns. The woman who invented satchel-bottomed paper bags, for instance, was offered $20,000 for the patent before she left Washington. A simple glove buttoner is bringing to the woman inventor an income of $5,000 a year. A woman clerk in a department store invented lately a parcel-delivery system which netted substantial returns. Our New England milliner, herself an inventor, enjoys the right to several patents that represent the ingenuity of the women in her employ. She shares profits with the inventors, and one of the devices first put in operation in this factory brings in over $20,000 a year.

It often happens that a woman employee from familiarity with the machinery or business methods in use, thinks out some time and labor saving scheme. She shows the model to the manager of her department. He informs the employer of its merits and they arrange with the employe for the exclusive use of the invention. The employee goes on quietly with her work in the store or mill. The public never hears of her, but success has been a stimulus, and she keeps on the lookout for further inventive opportunity.

Much of woman's present activity in inventions is ascribed to the better educational facilities now obtainable. The college standard in high and popular courses in sloyd and manual training have taught women to use their hands as well as brains. Notwithstanding this a large proportion of the more successful women inventors are those who have had only medium or limited educational advantages, but have been daily toilers in the various lines of industry. A Rhode Island woman invented an improved buttonhole-cutting machine that measures the distance between the buttonholes automatically, with much profit and convenience to garment makers. A lock with 3,000 combinations is a woman's invention, also a letter box for the outside of homes that shows a signal when there is a letter inside for the postman to collect, an invention now in constant use. A woman has just perfected a valuable apparatus for removing wool from skins by electricity, showing that women are quick to adopt the modern facilities of the age to practical purpose.

The woman inventor must never lose sight of practicality if she would succeed. Other women brain workers may at times indulge in dreaming and theorizing, but the woman inventor, however high her flights of fancy, must always come back to the practical. Many women's inventions are submitted to the patent office accompanied by elaborate models, but so conspicuously lackig in some vital principle as to be unavailing. A good many are rejected on the score of absurdity, but, acording to official testimony, the women aspirants do not differ from the men in this respect. Many women submit practical specifications and fail to score success, not from lack of originality, but because the inventor was ignorant of previous patents covering the same point. No matter how brilliant an inventor's idea may seem, she is advised to search thoroughly the patent-office records before making a model. Some women have taken out five and six patents for widely different purposes. A California woman, whose first invention, in early youth, was a corset, has lately patented several inventions relating to reservoirs and irrigation.

The northwest, the middle and eastern states have produced the most active women inventors. The south has yielded the fewest number, but the southern women who have entered the field at all have been financially successful. Two important aids to agriculture were the invention of an Alabama woman. A working woman in North Carolina succeeded with a culinary invention. A Florida matron patented a useful car-heating apparatus. A Texas woman invented a novel folding tent and another southern woman a finger-exercising device of value to musicians. A western widow patented a unique method of desulphurizing ores. Another invented a composition solder of use to metal workers.

Women inventors from the big cities have almost invariably patented articles pertaining to the elegance of dress and house furnishings. Those from the country districts and villages have been active in the way of dress-draughting patterns, novel devices for adjusting portieres and curtains and patents useful in the manufacture of artistic goods. Numerous facilities for clerical use have been patented by city women, such as safety envelopes, improved typewriting appliances, copy-holders, letter openers, etc. Most of these women were employed at some time as clerks in business offices and felt the lack of conveniences which they afterward supplied.

A number of women school teachers are successful inventors, and have patented educational systems and devices, also kindergarten implements, erasers, school bags and book rests. Women from the small towns in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dokata and Illinois have been prolific in inventing household conveniences, washing and cleaning apparatus, facilities for sanitation, garment bindings, shields, fastenings and dress improvements. New England women have brought out attachments and improvements that have to do with saddles, harnesses and vehicles; also the needs of barn and garden. They have invented butter workers, plumbing appliances, brushes for cleaning and fire-kindling compositions, toys, games, puzzles and amusement knick-knacks. A considerable proportion of the fakirs' goods, novelties and trick pastimes sold on the streets are originated by women. They sell the patent right promptly to the proprietor of news agencies, who include such small gear in their stationers' and confectioners' supplies. A fair proportion of the "specialty" goods inventors and makers are women. Many whose trade marks are registered at the patent office have made fortunes, either through shrewdness in putting their wares on the market, or because of the article's worth. These inventions include medicines, complexion soaps and wafers, hair ointments and restorers, and an infinity of health and toilet knick-knacks found at the drug store.

The first woman to take out a patent in America was Mrs. Mary Kies, who, in 1809, invented a process for weaving straw with silk or thread. During the next twenty-five years only fifteen patents were granted to women. In the next twenty-five years thirty-five patents were granted, and it was not until aftter the Civil war that there was any marked increase in the number of women inventors. There were 152 models of women's inventions exhibited at the Atlanta exposition, and since then the patent office has had a specially classified list of women's inventions prepared for public inspection.

SHOWING UP A LAWYER.

The Talesman Proved that He Was Not an E cyclopedia.

The lawyer was just starting home after a hard day's work in the court room. A senate-looking man approached him and said:

"I don't know whether you remember me or not. I am one of the talesmen whom you interrogated yesterday."

"Ah?"

"There are one or two small matters that I wanted to ask you about. You seem to be a person of very superior intelligence, and I hope you will give me a few minutes. I'll walk along with you to your car so as not to waste any time. What I wanted to ask you is this: If I were to say to you that 'the three faces which include a triedral angle of a prism are equal in all their parts to the three faces which include a triedral angle of a second prism, each to each, and are like placed, the two prisms are equal in all their parts,' what would you understand by it?"

"Why, sir—really—"

"You don't mean to tell me you are stumped by a little one like that?"

"You see, the question is a little sudden, and in order to grasp its full significance—

"Never mind. Here's an easier one, nearer the beginning of the book. If I were to suggest to you, that a certain object is a polyedron, in which two of the faces are polygons, equal in all their parts, and having their homologous sides parallel, what would be the impression conveyed to your mind?"

"To be candid, I never looked into the subject very deeply."

You don't mean to own up that you wouldn't know it was a plain, everyday prism:

"I hadn't thought of it in that light."

"That's all. My boy, who isn't through high school, could have answered those questions without stopping to think. I feel better. You were putting on a lot of airs yesterday, but you ain't any encyclopaedia. I don't believe you are even a handy compendium of useful knowledge. After this display of lamentable ignorance on your part, I want to make just one suggestion. If you ever get me into court again, don't you swing at me with any more big words and try to act haughty. I've got your measure, and I'm liable to be just as supercilious as you are."

Wars in Victoria's Reign.

Certainly, the Boer war is rather a bigger business than any we have had to settle lately. But it's not quite the first Queen Victoria's troops have had to tackle. Here is a list or them:

Afghan war, 1838-40; first China war, 1841; Sikh war, 1845-46; Kaffir war, 1846; second war with China, second Afghan war, 1849; second Sikh war, 1848-49; Burmese war, 1850; second Kaffir war, 1851-52; second Burmese war, 1852-53; Crimea, 1854; third war with China, 1856-58; Indian mutiny, 1857; Maori war, 1860-61; more wars with China, 1860-62; second Maori war, 1863-66; Ashantee war, 1864; war in Bhootan, 1864; Abyssinian war, 1867-68; war with the Bazotees, 1868; third Maori war, 1868-69; war with Looshale, 1871; second Ashantee war, 1873-74; third Kaffir war, 1877; Zulu war, 1878-79; third Afghan war, 1878-80; war in Basutoland, 1879-81; Transvaal war, 1879-81; Egyptian war, 1882; Soudan, 1884-85-89; third Burma war, 1885-92; Zanzibar, 1890; India, 1890; Matabele wars, 1894-96; Chitral campaign, 1895; third Ashantee campaign, 1896; second Soudan campaign, 1896; Indian campaign of 1897, and third Soudan war, ending with fall of Khartoum, 1898.—Answers.

Clery a Good Fighter.

General Sir Francis Clery, upon whose strategic skill reliance is mainly placed for success in Natal operations, is the son of a Cork wine merchant. He dropped his front name, Cornelius, in a desire to Anglicize himself. He is reputed the best dressed man in the British army, and is a familiar figure in the fashionable circles of London.

He is not merely a book soldier, although he is the author of a standard treatise on modern strategy. He has had considerable practical experience in war and has displayed conspicuous bravery.

He asked General Buller to withdraw all war correspondents from his force. General Buller could not induce Lord Wolseley to agree to that so he has done the next best thing by shutting down on their dispatches.—New York World.

Musical Silence.

One evening Sir Arthur Sullivan went to see Rubinstein at his house in London. The Russian composer asked his visitor to step out onto the balcony and smoke a cigarette. They sat down, twisted their cigarettes, and puffed the blue clouds into the air. After a long pause Sullivan observed:

"You are a great admirer of Beethoven, I presume?"

"Yes," answered Rubinstein.

"And Wagner?"

"No," was the reply.

That was all. Not another word was spoken. They rocked themselves in their chairs, and smoked away. After a long time Sullivan remarked:

"I think it is time for me to be going."

"Don't say so," said Rubinstein. "Stay a bit longer; it is so nice to talk to you."

Sullivan remained, went on rocking himself and smoking into the small hours, when he at length got up and said:

"I must really be off now; I think we have chatted long enough."

Rubinstein drew out his watch, and shook his head in blank astonishment.

"Half-past two," he said. "Strange how quickly times flies in pleasant company!"—Collier's Weekly.

Women Leech-Fishers.

One of the most peculiar industries in which women ever engage was that of leech-fishing. Sixty years ago leeches were in much greater demand than they are to-day, and their capture and sale proved so profitable that women were willing to make martyrs of themselves for cash. It was mostly Scotch women who engaged in the business. They would wade in the shallow pools of the Lincolnshire carrs, with their legs bared, until the entire surface of their limbs was cavered with the slimy, clinging creatures. When this stage of the fishing was reached, they would go ashore, drag the leeches from their feeding ground, and put them in small wooden barrels, which were then strapped on their backs and taken to the Scotch markets, where they were readily disposed of at good prices.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Samoan Girls Want Husbands.

Apia seems to be pretty well supplied with some exceeding beautiful and well educated half-caste girls, who would make excellent wives for the right sort of young men. Many of these girls are daughters of well-to-do parents, and not a few would be able to start out nicely as far as funds and good looks were to be counted. These girls are all unwilling to marry native husbands, and there are certainly not enough foreigners to go round. Generally Samoan and half-caste girls make excellent and faithful wives, and, unlike the natives of Spanish-American countries, they hold their good looks for many years.

The Actress Was Feted.

A few weeks ago a pretty little Parisian actress was appearing at a theater in Geneva. On the last night of the play a tall, well-dressed man sent in his card and asked permission to thank her personally for the pleasure that her performance had given him. He entertained her at supper, and asked permission to see her off at the station on the following day. He arrived with his groom, who was carrying a tremendous bouquet of flowers. He told her that he had telegraphed to his brother, who was in Paris, and who had influence both with the press and the theatrical managers, and that he would meet her on her arrival in Paris.

To the astonishment of the actress all this turned out to be true, and she found a magnificent carriage at the station. A fine dinner followed. The girl was dumb with astonishment. Her host told her that it was all for the sake of his brother, whom he loved dearly, and he spoke pathetically of the beautiful bouquet she carried, and which was made up of the flowers culled in the garden of the old homestead. She offered him the bouquet instantly, and he accepted it with a thousand thanks. Now she has found out why she was treated so well. She had been the means of smuggling watch springs to the value of $10,000 into Paris.

A Mile a Minute.

Sixty miles an hour is the merest commonplace to the mind of the up-to-date railroad man, but it means other things besides those described that are wonderful to the outsider. It means a steam pressure of twenty tons on each piston head every tenth of a second. It means that up in the cab the fireman is throwing into the furnace two-thirds of a ton of coal every hour; one engine burns coal faster than ten men can mine it. It means two quarts of oil every hour to keep her journal box greased and everything running smoothly.

There are just three things that girls should not dare to do in Paris, and those are to visit cafes that they don't know anything about, to wander too far from the main paths in the Bois de Boulonge and the other great parks, or go out alone after dark. Some American girls do all these things, and they are the ones who have wild tales to tell.—January Ladies' Home Journal.

BRUNHILDA.

BY CHARLES TILDEN SEIPPS.

"Brunhilda, shadows touched of sunlight soon
To lurk within thy musing maiden eyes
Below the depths, where unexplored, there lies
As in a sleep, a dim remembered dream
Of autumn dusks along an ancient stream
Which in old Norseman forests had its rise
And, murmuring seaward under brooding skies,
Shot far upon the sea its silver gleam:
The wind-swept German Sea, mist-blown and gray,
Whereon thy Viking fathers, sons of war,
Sought the bold tempest as a boy his play,
Exultant in the elemental roar
Of wind and wave and warriors' battle fray,
Bequeathing life to thee in primal store."

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sample bottles at O. P Barber's, Corunna.

Pretty Children

"We have three children. Before the birth of the last one my wife used four bottles of MOTHER'S FRIEND. If you had the pictures of our children, you could see at a glance that the last one is healthiest, prettiest and finest-looking of them all. My wife thinks Mother's Friend is the greatest and grandest remedy in the world for expectant mothers."—Written by a Kentucky Attorney-at-Law.

MOTHER'S FRIEND prevents nine-tenths of the suffering incident to childbirth. The coming mother's disposition and temper remain unruffled throughout the ordeal, because this relaxing, penetrating liniment relieves the usual distress. A good-natured mother is pretty sure to have a good-natured child. The patient is kept in a strong, healthy condition, which the child also inherits. Mother's Friend takes a wife through the crisis quickly and almost painlessly. It assists in her rapid recovery, and wards off the dangers that so often follow delivery.

Sold by druggists for $1 a bottle.

Thursday's Daily.

—Sol. Barney of St. Joe was in town yesterday on his way home from Fort Wayne.

—Harry Flint of Lansing, Mich., is here spending the holidays with his grandmother, Mrs. James Griswold.

—Caleb Neal and family have returned to town and again occupy their residence just north of the Ward school building.

—Go to Sheffer & Chaney for Michigan Lake Salt, a car load just received. Guaranteed not to get hard in the barrel. oct.26w-tf

—Joseph Strouse, of Swan township, Noble county, is ninety-nine years old and bids fair to reach the century mark.

—The Indianapolis pension agency had seventeen Philippine war pensioners on its list in December, and many more in sight.

—The grading for the new railroad yards at Garrett is about completed and the track laying will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

—WANTED:—Black Walnut logs for timber. Highest cash prices paid for same. Address, The Sanders & Egbert Co., Goshen, Ind. 8

—The latest new name on our list is J. H. Simanton of St. Joe, a son of Wm Simanton. We were pleased to have him on our list of 1901.

—We have money to loan on short notice; large or small sums; mortgage or personal security; short or long time. Call on us if you need money MOODY & RICKEL, Aubbrn. d2w4

—The Fort wayne Journal-Gazette says:—Mr. William Essig is seriously ill at the home of his brother, Mr. G. B. Essig, of Baker street. Mr. Essig resides in Auburn, and came to this city for medical treatment.

—MARRIED—At the residence of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Newcomer of Franklin, by Rev. W. O. Butler, December 27, 1899, Edward P. McCague to Miss Mary Murilla Newcomer. A sumptuous wedding supper was lavshly served to the merry guests.

—A new cracker:—Has made its appearance. It is peculiar in appearance and the design has been patented by Fox, the cracker baker, to prevent unscrupulous competitors from imitating it. No possibility of getting poor goods now, if you will insist upon having the new shape. They are called "Forex" and the imprint "Fox" is on every cracker.

—Mrs. Smurr of Wilmington township, who was here as a witness in the Love divorce case, had a bad fall yesterday while coming out of the court house. She was taken into the sheriff's office and made as comfortable as possible until time to take the train for Butler in the afternoon. While she was badly bruised it is not thought her injuries will prove serious.

—Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Bair returned yesterday from their visit to his father and mother at Fostoria, Ohio. He left his parents well. At the close of a visit with the relatives in this place and Fairfield, they go west to make their home at Rochester, Minn., where Mr. Bair has been for three or four years. As he is on our 1900 list, of course he will get all the DeKalb news. We wish both a happy future.

—A few evenings since Mrs. James Griswold, who is always thoughtful for the comfort of her guests, placed a hot flat-iron in a bed to be occupied by her grandson, Harry Flint. A short time afterward she began to smell the odor of burning cotton and upon investigation found that the iron had set the bed clothing on fire. Several comforts were ruined, but luckily the fire was discovered in time to prevent serious damage.

—Imitation Foiled:—Unscrupulous Competitors have been using Fox's thunder to do business. Dealers have been imposed upon by worthless goods represented to take the place of Fox's crackers and in order to stop the imposition a new style cracker is being made and has been patented by Fox, the cracker baker. It is now on sale. A trial will convince you of the superiority of the new "Forex" Cracker all over the world.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters;' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50cts., guaranteed, at H S. McCord's Drugstore.

Farmers' Institutes.

A number of farmers' institutes will be held in this part of the state during the next two months. Week after next Cal. Husselman, with Mrs. Ross of Marion county, will speak at three of these meetings—at Decatur, Bluffton, and Fort Wayne, two days at each place. The week following Mr. Husselman is at Waterloo, Angola and Albion, assisted by Mrs. Bates of Marion county.

As will be noted above the DeKalb county institute will be held at Waterloo, Monday and Tuesday, January 15 and 16, and a good program has been arranged which will be published later.

Friday's Daily.

—Landlord Kelley of the Locke hotel at Waterloo was in town yesterday on business.

—J. M. Smith of Cedar starts with the new century right by subscribing for the COURIER.

—Newville has a lodge of the Ancient Order of American Plowmen, with a membership of twenty-six.

—Mrs. Dr. Collett went home to St. Mary's, Ohio, this morning after a week's stay with her mother, Mrs. Ford.

—Amber Eosley came up from Indianapolis Saturday and is the guest of friends, of which she has many in Auburn.

—William Saylor of St. Joe has been appointed night policemen at Hicksville to succeed Enos Rath, murdered a few weeks ago.

—H. G. Provines has been home for several days on his Christmas vacation He is well pleased with his school, the University of Chicago.

—Herman Groscop, formerly of Ashley, will take a position as engineer in the big hoop mill at Milan, Mich., owned by Auburn parties.

—Nearly 35,000 bushels of onions were raised on the onion farms near Kendallville this year. The yield was 800 to 1300 bushels per acre.

—To all points in competition where the fare is $2 or more we have free bus and free baggage to the Junction. tf SPROTT & KNAPP, Agency B. & O. Ry.

—If your property is mortgaged we can sell your equity or trade you a smaller property clear of debt. Call and see us quick. MOODY & RICKEL, Auburn. d2w4

—Joseph Witt always pays in advance for an English paper, the COURIER, for his son Will and takes a German paper for himself. He is now on the list of 1901 subscribers.

—Dr. Sheffer's daughter, Lina, teaches school at No. 7 in Butler township. As her home is in St. Joe, it shows how the teachers of the county get scattered.

—H. C. Berghoff, W. W. Rockhill and Captain George Gale, all of Fort Wayne, are mentioned as candidates for the democratic district chairmanship to succeed Hon. Thomas R. Marshall.

—Lew Culler at Chicago goes on our paid up list for 1900 for the Weekly. We had hopes of a letter from him or his wife telling the Auburn neighbors what they are doing and all about it. We may have this later.

—A couple of boys at Bennettsville, S. C., played William Tell last week. One stood with an apple on his head, while the other tried to knock it off with an old rifle. The ball went through the lad's head, but he did not get mad.

—Geo. E. Cox and wife of Muncie, Ind., spent their holiday vacation with parents and friends in DeKalb county. Mr. Cox is practicing law in Muncie. We are glad to hear from our young friend again and hope he may succeed in his chosen profession.

—Henry Miller, living south of Ashley, marketed a hog on Christmas day that weighed 960 pounds. The animal was of the O. I. C. Breed and Mr. Miller will, in addition to the market value of the animal, receive a premium of $50 from the O. I. C. breeding company.

—Ladysmith, the town upon which he eyes of the world are now turned, gets its pretty name from Lady Smith, the wife of Sir Harry Smith, who years ago was a prominent British officer in South Africa. And we might add that another town not far away is named Harrysmith, after Sir Harry himself.

—Superintendent Coe returned from Indianapolis last evening where he had attended the state meeting of the Teachers' Association, as well as that of the county superintendents of the state. Of course he is a member of the latter association. He is an active member and made one of the addresses on this occasion, and received seveal compliments.

—Design Patented:—Fox's Crackers have been imitated by competitors, and in order that the public may not be deceived by their inferior goods, a new style cracker has been placed on the market the design of which has been patiented and the word "Forex" has been adopted as a trademark. The imprint "Fox" is on the cracker. Ask your grocer for the new style.

The Eminent Kidney and Bladder Specialist.

The Discoverer of Swamp-Root at Work in His Laboratory.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell. Then the richness of the blood—the albumen—leaks out and the sufferer has Bright's Disease, the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root the new discovery is the true specific for kidney, bladder and urinary troubles. It has cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases, after all other efforts have failed. At druggists in fifty-cent and dollar sizes. A sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. and mention this paper.

Saturday's Daily.

—John G. Ashley of New Haven is in town.

—Edward Koons is home, from Lewiston, Idaho.

—Read the notice of the dance at the armory Monday evening.

—John Bunge paid up to 1900 this afternoon, and has thanks.

—D. E. Dilgard of Ashley has thanks for cash favors of recent date.

—E. S. Lautzenheiser of Richland has paid his subscription up to 1901.

—John Koble paid up to 1900 today. He believes in keeping in with that popular club.

—William B. Maxwell of Waterloo has had his pension increased from $17 to $24 per month.

—Hon. Thomas R. Marshall of Columbia City was in town yesterday on legal business.

—H. J. Roush, a COURIER subscriber at Sedan, was a caller today and advanced his subscription into 1900.

—David Heitz of DeKalb was in town today, and closed his new year business by paying the COURIER into 1900.

—A Steuben county man paid a fine and costs this week ammounting to $19 for not sending his boy to school. Correct.

—Superintendent Coe was elected one of the vice presidents af the state teachers' association at the meeting in Indianapolis this week.

—This is our coldest day so far, the mercury was down to zero this morning at 7 o'oclock. It may have been lower than that an hour earlier.

—Mr. and and Mrs. George Rheinold of Jackson today celebrated their twentieth wedding anniversary and entertained a large party of friends.

—L. J. Miller gets out on the streets now almost every day, though he has to use crutches. He says he feels very well every way except for the rheumatism.

—The state central committee of the populist party held a meeting at Indianapolis this week and settled upon February 22 as the date for holding the state convention.

—The Angola Magnet will furnish the printed stationery for the Steuben county officers next year. Burford of Indianapolis gets the blank books and other goods not covered by the Magnet's bid.

—S. H. Long, of Benzonia, Mich., is here, a guest in the family of his son Perry Long in East Auburn. He will also visit the other relatives including his daughter in Garrett and a son in the country.

—Hugh Harter came up from Fort Wayne today where he had been visiting relatives. He is taking his holiday vacation. Mrs. Harter is in Goshen where she will be a few days, when they return to Ann Arbor.

—Cal. Husselman has announced himself as a candidate for member of the state board of agriculture for the Sixteenth district to succeed James E. McDonald of Ligonier. No better selection could be made, as Mr. Husselman is peculiarly well fitted for the place.

—G. C. Ralston is home for a visit, looking in better health than usual. He says they all like Paxton very well, now that they have got used to it. His wife has been in fair health generally, and Brad lacks less than an inch of being as tall as Mr. Ralston himself. Obe Cool and family are well, and doing well.

—S. C. Snyder has the thanks of the COURIER for a copy of the Los Angeles Daily Times, one section of which is devoted to the Belgian hare industry, which has attained large proportions in that state. John Robbins' skunk trust is not "in it" with the Belgian hare business judging from the space devoted to it by the Times.

—Editor Downey of the Butler Herald has shut down on receiving complimentary tickets to entertainments in exchange for advertising. He recently received two tickets for about $1.75 worth of advertising, and says he was then compelled to buy an extra ticket for his six-year-old son. That's nothing, Downey. All newspaper men are expected to give about five times the value of tickets in such cases.

Beats Dave Caruth's.

Bert Lane showed us a letter yesterday that for the extent and variety of its travels beats the one Dave Caruth received a few years ago after it had traveled to two continents.

Bert was a member of the 160th Indiana in the Spanish war, having enlisted at Tipton. After his regiment had been mustered out at Ft. McPherson, near Atlanta, Georgia, he entered the hospital service and went to Puerto Rico, remaining there some time, and finally when his service was out, returned to his home.

August 25, a friend, named Sullivan, at Massena, N. Y, sent a letter directed to Bert at Ft. McPherson. There it was marked "Return to sender, Lane has been discharged." So it went back to Sullivan, at Massena. Sullivan then put it into another envelope and sent it to Lane at "U. S. Hospital, San Juan, Puerto Rico." Before it got there Bert had started for the mainland and again the letter was "returned to sender." Sullivan was now at Patterson ville, N. Y. But he wanted Bert to have that letter. So, he says, believing Bert's best girl lived at Tipton, Ind., he sent it there. The people at Tipton knowing he lived in Auburn, forwarded it to this place and Bert got it Dec. 29. He is now able to show a series of envelopes the like of which has never been seen here. And yet the letter is comparatively young, being only a little over four months old.

Filipino Liars.

We have often noted the fact that as plain liars, the Filipinos have no equal on earth. Some months before Gen. Lawton was killed, he captured a train of goods and records belonging to Aguinaldo's government. This included the newspaper plant, whjo was used by them to circulate orders as well as news. Copies of the paper and of ordert were models of ingenious lies all tending to help deceive the ignorant people. Gen. Lawton read of his own death in the followin clippings.

"From Nueva Ecija—A general and three other officers killed; innumerable wounded.

"Special by telegraph to La Independenci from Tarlac, Oct. 21.—Col Padilla sends the following information to the headquarters here. The death of Gen Lawton is fully confirmed by reliable persons coming from San Isidro. His body was embalmed and taken to Manila. An American captain and two lieutenants were also killed in the recent engagement, their bodies being interred at San Isidro, with the customary military honors.

"The building which our secretary of war occupied in San Isidro is filled from top to bottom with wounded American soldiers; moreover, many other wounded have already been sent to Manila"

But perhaps the champion fabrication of the war is the following, which Col. Hare found among the records captured at San Jacinto, a copy of an order from the secretary of war to all the commanding officers of the Filipino army

"The secretary of foreign affairs has transmitted to me a note reading as follows:

"I take great pleasure in announcing to you that, according to the most trustworthy data received in this office, the casulties of the enemy on its north line alone from the night of Feb. 4 to the end of August have amounted to: Killed, 7,242; wounded, 14,678; total, 21,920.'

"It would be well to include this notice in the orders of the day for the information and encouragement of our valiant troops."

Winston Churchill Escapes.

Thursday's Daily.

It appears that the Boers have to import provisions to supply the men in the field and those they have put into the gold mines to keep up the work there. For it appears they are working out all the gold they can, though in many cases the owners are away and will not return till the war is over. This gives the Boers plenty of gold at no great expense, except to pay and feed the hired miners who are usually negroes.

Much activity is still reported on the part of the Boers in front of Gen. Buller's army, though neither side seems to be able to make a forward movement. The two towns under siege, Ladysmith and Kimberly appear to hold out all right, though but little can be heard from them except occasional cannonading.

The new commanders of the British forces have started south from Gibraltar. Many transports are on the way with arms, ammunition and other supplies. More troops are under way especially of artillery to take the place of so many guns that have been captured.

CHURCHILL'S ESCAPE.

Winston Churchill, who was captured with the armored train near Colenso, cables a short account of his desperate and successful venture. He says:

"On the afternoon of Dec. 12, the Transvaal's secretary of war informed me that there was little chance of my release. I therefore resolved to escape and the same night I left the state school's prison in Pretoria by climbing the wall when the sentries' backs were turned momentarily. I walked through the streets of the town without disguise, meeting many burghers, but was not challenged in the crowd. I got through the pickets of the town guards and struck the Delagoa Bay railroad. I walked along it, evading the watchers at the bridges and culverts, and waited for a train beyond the first station. The 11:30 goods train from Pretoria had arrived before I reached the place and was moving at full speed. I boarded it with great difficulty and hid under coal sacks. I jumped from the train before dawn and was sheltered during the day in a small wood in company with a huge vulture, who displayed a lively interest in me."

HAD TO FOLLOW RAILROAD.

"I walked on at dusk. There were no more trains that night. The danger of meeting the guards of the line continued, but I was obliged to follow it, as I had no compass or map. I had to make wide detours to avoid bridges, stations and huts, and so my progress was very slow.

Chocolate is not a satisfying food. The outlook was gloomy, but I persevered, with God's help. For five days my food supply was very precarious. I was lying up by daylight and walking by night.

Meanwhile my escape had been discovered and my description telegraphed everywhere. All trains were searched and every one was on the watch for me. Four times the wrong people were arrested.

The sixth day I managed to board a train beyond Middleburg, from whence there was direct service to Delagoa."

New Mexico and Arizona are asking admission as states and probably get it.

Another fight has been had with the Filipinos who were driven out from San Mateo at the time of Gen. Lawton's death. They had entrenched themselves at Montalban and our men attacked them trying to surround them at the same time, but the enemy escaped through the hills.

At Havana, Gen. Wood is organizing the temporary government so as to have all things in running order when the time for independence comes. The members of his cabinet are all Cubans or Spaniards and men of ability.

At Havana, the American Collector of customs has unearthed a big conspiracy to defraud the government. The appraisers would take an invoice and then appraise the goods at about half and cheat the government that much. Then the appraisers and merchants would divide the steal. Now they are very mad to find they will not be allowed to do this as they always did under Spanish rule.

Have You Heard Of It?

You may have heard about SCOTT'S EMULSION and have a vague notion that it is cod-liver oil with its bad taste and smell and all its other repulsive features. It is cod-liver oil, the purest and the best in the world, but made so palatable that almost everybody can take it. Nearly all children like it and ask for more.

looks like cream; it nourishes the wasted body of the baby, child or adult better than cream or any other food in existence. It bears about the same relation to other emulsions that cream does to milk. If you have had any experience with other so-called "just as good" preparations, you will find that this is a fact.

The hypophosphites that are combined with the cod-liver oil give additional value to it because they tone up the nervous system and impart strength to the whole body.

Art Calendar.

One of the handsomest calendars that has appeared for the new year represents children playing on the broad beach of one of our Atlantic Coast resorts. The youngest, a little tot, is defying the approaching tide of the ocean and in a spirit of bravado calls out to his companions who are eagerly watching him, "Who's Afraid?"

Copy of this calendar, carefully mailed in strawboard to protect in transmitting, will be mailed on receipt of 10 cents in postage stamps by W. B. Kniskern, G. P. & T. A., Chicago & North Western Ry, Chicago, Ill.

Early application should be made as the edition is limited.

Coffinberry Trial.

It also appeared in the report of Coffinberry's personal property, that he owned about $11,000 in various stocks, all of which were tied up as collateral security for loans. He also had $6,000 mining stock known as the "Indiana Mining Co." But this seems to have no value. We suppose it is the mining business in which at one time, he and Hon. S. S. Shutt and Mr. Brent, son-in-law of the late Wm. Shutt, were interested. It also was in evidence, that when Coffinberry sold the house and grounds to his wife in 1896, the price named was $5,000.

In the afternoon Eugene Faris, former land lord of the Ross House at Garrett, was sworn, and testified he had been called from Defiance by Coffinberry, to run the hotel for Coffinberry, who had leased it. He was put on to prove that Mrs. Coffinberry owned and controlled everything. He said he ran the hotel for her and she usually settled with him. After one year, he took the hotel on his own hook; made clear about $2,000 a year, when he was running it for them. Then he made about the same when he ran it for himself. He paid them $8,000 a year, $900 going as board for the family and $2,100 in cash payments. Coffinberry was at this time getting a salary as trainmaster. This was to show that Mrs. Coffinberry had money. Ran the hotel seven years. Also paid rent to the Improvement Co. that owned it, $50 a month, and after the addition was made he paid $80 a month.

Miles G. Ross called. He used to have the hotel and it was called the Ross House. Said it paid from $1,800 to $2 000 a year net.

S R. Rickel sworn. Live in Waterloo. Had charge of building Coffinberry's new house. Bought the material, had charge of the men and work and paid all bills. Coffinberry was president of the Garrett bank, and told me to draw the check, I paid the money to the men and for material. The net cost of the house was within a few dollars of $5,000. There was besides this, a barn that must have cost about $250. Prices were very much lower then than now and the same building would now cost much more.

A. W. Madden was sworn and said he put up the stone curbing around Coffinberry's premises, about 400 feet, and was paid about $200 for the work. Later on, he had put up the curbing for approaches to the house, but before it was paid for, Coffinberry died, and the widow refused to pay it, saying she knew nothing about it.

Dr. Buchtel was sworn, and told about going over there, the time Coffinberry died. The county board did not know whether Coffinberry was too sick to come or not. His doctor had made a statement that his health would not permit his coming over to Auburn when wanted. Dr. Buchtel went over on Saturday afternoon, January 16, 1897, with Neal Platter, the deputy sheriff. Coffinberry was already under indictment, and was to be called up on on other charges. Dr. Buchtel said they found Coffinberry suffering from heart trouble. Seemed bad at times, and vomited. A bottle of medicine was on the dresser, and he examined it. Dr. Thompson, Coffinberry's physician, said it was a preparation of hyosciamus. Buchtel said the medicine was a standard remedy. It might produce congestion accompanied by stertorous breathing, etc. Coffinberry got no better and we came off without him. We went back early Monday morning. Coffinberry said he could go with us.

Neal Platter sworn. Was deputy sheriff, and went with Dr. Buchtel at the times named, to bring Coffinberry to Auburn under arrest. Will Coffinberry let us in on Monday morning, and we went upstairs to where Coffinberry's room was. The door was open and I walked in. Mrs. Coffinberry was not in that room. Coffinberry said he could go. Was not hungry, and when we got to Auburn, he said Mrs. Platter could get him something to eat. His wife went down stairs to get him some coffee. He drank about half, Did not see Mrs. Coffinberry or the mother drink any of it. In a short time, Coffinberry was worse. He died in about twenty minutes. Was in his chair partly dressed. Dr. Thompson was there.

Buchtel was recalled, and asked as to diamond ring. Said Coffinberry had told him it cost about $600, and was a gift of railroad men.

D. W. Fair called. Was county treasurer from November 1894 to November 1896. Coffinberry wanted to get money to deposit with his bank at Garrett. Would give, he said, higher interest than other banks. He said he might send his wife or son Will for the money. Mrs. Coffinberry came several times. Never got less than $1,000. Thinks it must have been $5,000 or $6,000 in all that she got. I do not know whether it was deposited in bank or not. I never got it back. My son kept the books and did the business. I did not know I was losing the money till I was notified that I was a defaulter for about $12,000.

John Yarde, the administrator of Coffinberry, estate sworn. He could not say how he happened to be appointed. Thinks he got a request from Mrs. Coffinberry. Got appraisers to appraise the household goods. He was asked about the value put on various articles by the appraisers, and admitted he thought some were too low. Was asked if that did not make Mrs. Coffinberry have less confidence in him. This was ruled out.

H. D. Weaver sworn. Live in Auburn. Have lived in Garrett. He is agent for a life insurance company, and as such paid Mrs. Coffinberry $5,000 on her husband's policy.

Reuben Sawvel called. Was treasurer the same four years Coffinberry was auditor. Coffinberry got money of me to deposit in his bank. I kept a bank pass-book and entered the different amounts in it. Thought he was depositing the money in the bank. Found something was wrong. Investigated. Suspected Coffinberry, and finally got him to own he was using it. Got Coffinberry to meet him at the Swinford with John Shuman. Coffinberry gave five notes of $500 each for the amount he owed Sawvel for money he had got and gave $2,500 stock of Garrett bank as security. Sawvel afterwards gave up the notes and kept the stock, which he has now. On cross examination, was asked if Shuman was under the bed while he and Coffinberry talked, so as to overhear Coffinberry; he said no. Shuman and Coffinberry had gone alone into the bed-room.

Mrs. F. A. Borst sworn. Was acquainted with Coffinberrys. Was over to Garrett to see them, and met them here often. He told me he built the house at Garrett with his own money, and that his wife would furnish it. Mrs. Coffinberry said she had enough of her own to do that. She said she had got it from home and handled it carefully.

Thursday forenoon the first witness was Thomas Mitchell, who was for several years cashier of the bank at Garrett. He was asked as to Coffinberry's alleged habits of spending money liberally, when away from home. He also spoke of the cost of the house. He said Rickel paid the men and other expenses by checks, and he as cashier, would mark each man's check, and then get the total and put in a check for that amount. Coffinberry had an open account in the bank, and also had some notes and at one time owed us about $4,000. After that, he got $3,000 in Chicago from Moyer, who was assistant cashier in a bank there, and paid it on his account with us. Coffinberry did not make a flourish of money when people came to the bank. He and Mrs. Coffinberry often came there. His new house was a fine one. The money from Chicago went to pay debts contracted to build the house. Coffinberry told me his house had cost him $10,000.

Mr. Kingsbury, a Garrett jeweler, called. Had been in the Ross House as proprietor for a time, but did not make as much money as others claimed to have made, but saved a little. Was in about fourteen months. Was asked about Coffinberry's diamonds, but his answers were not of value.

J. F. Wing, the Fort Wayne architect, was sworn, but when he came to state his name, J. F. Wing, the attorney said it was G. F. Wing he wanted, not J. F., and promptly excused the witness.

Wm. Moore, a furniture dealer at Garrett, sworn. He went to Chicago and got the furniture for them that went into the new house. Mrs. Coffinberry went, as Mr. Coffinberry said she had got some money of her father's estate. The goods we bought came to $855, but did not include the piano. That was a Kimball and the retail price would be about $350. Think the appraisement at $200 about fair. The furniture was bought at retail prices, not at wholesale. This bill did not include the carpets but did include mattresses. Thinks the $855 of furniture would, as second hand, be fairly appraised at $100.

D. D. Moody called. Was clerk the four years Coffinberry was auditor. Were on fairly good terms. He often borrowed small sums of me, generally about $25. It was generally in currency and when I gave him a check he usually asked me to go and get the cash for him. I thought this a little odd Once, he and his wife were in the carriage and in front of the Swineford, as came by. He called me to the buggy and wanted $25. Think he said he wanted to go on early train to the World's fair, and his own bank at Garrett had closed for the day. I thought the request a strange one, but gave him a check. He again asked me to get it cashed. I went to J. L. Davis and got the cash and came back and gave it to him. I do not know whether he went to Chicago or not, but got the idea he used the money for some other purpose His wife was in the buggy. The family boarded at the Swineford and generally lived well. Kept horse at livery stable, and appeared to be rather an expensive family. He generally paid me back, but not always. He owes me some yet. I think he used at least $200 a month. Think his office must have paid him $6,000 a year as under the old law.

A. C. Robbins called. Am cashier of Farmers bank. Have been for several years. Coffinberry made several loans at our bank, sometimes on his own paper, sometimes a check of his Garrett bank. Cannot say why he came to us for money, when he had a bank at Garrett. Then followed a good deal about how much of a salary would be needed to live as Coffinberry and family lived. Much of the testimony along here, was to prove that Coffinberry spent a good deal of money. This witness set the attorneys right as to the cost of living in his family. He said his salary did not fix that, as he had other sources of revenue to draw from if he needed.

Charles McClellan sworn. Was for several years cashier of the First National bank and have also been its president. Am familiar with its books and business. We loaned Coffinberry money at different times, on usual security. Have been at Coffinberry's in the new house at Garrett. Coffinberry showed us about the house, and we admired it much. He was entertaining the pedro club. His furniture was much better than ordinary. House was well furnished, even in cellar, it was well stocked with needed things and luxuries.

Albert Robbins, president of the Farmers bank was put on the stand afternoon, but we did not hear him. His testimony was probably about the same as that of the cashier, his son, A. C. Robbins.

Mrs. D. A. Garwood was sworn. She gave her experience and judgment as to value of many articles of furniture and furnishings in a house like Coffinberry's. She had been through the house and shown many of the articles. It appears that her testimony was to show that the appraisers had put too low a value on the household goods. She testified that carpets of the quality and amount in the parlor, would cost in the neighborhood of $200. The appraisers had fixed it at $16 for that room. Numerous other things such as rugs, curtains, etc., etc., were compared in the same way. On cross examination she said furniture depreciated with use, but the amount depended on care. If properly cared for, frail, rich goods should last a long time, and would remain in good condition four to ten years. Her testimony proved very interesting.

Arthur Aldrich of Butler was called. Said Coffinberry used to live at Butler. He often borrowed small sums of me. Always paid back.

Chas. McClellan recalled to read a list of the loans Coffinberry had got at the First National bank.

Mrs. Coffinberry was put on the stand to tell about some bank stock held by T. J. Knisely at Butler 10 shares, $1,000. It had been sold to Will Coffinberry.

Will Coffinberry sworn. Am son of H. N. Coffinberry. Am 20 years old. Was called on to show his father's watch, which he did. His mother had given it to him. There is an inscription on the inside showing it was given by employes of the Wabash road, Feb. 22, 1886. I bought the Knisely stock and gave my note. Have paid part of it about $600. Have bought two lots, one at $450, and the other at $400. I did not know my father owed $11,000 when he died. I supposed my mother had a right to give me the watch.

Mr. Wurtenberger sworn. Am a farmer near Roann. Have known the Coffinberrys over 15 years. I was a railroad man some time on the B. & O. I worked in the hotel at Garrett for Coffinberry for a time. Mrs. C. asked if I could run a hotel. I said I did not know. Coffinberry said if I would help them he would hold my job for me on the road. I worked there about three months. Mrs. C. had all the overseeing. Think the hotel earned $100 to $150 a month. After that, I went to Roann and clerked in a hardware store.

Thomas Squires sworn. Live at Chicago Junction, Ohio. In '87 I boarded at the Ross House, Garrett. Mrs. C. bought the furniture because Ross was going away. As she did not know the value, she got Arthur Aldrich to come up from Butler, (Aldrich later on, testified he told her the goods were worth about $2,000.) Witness went on to say that Mrs. C. lacked $500, and he, himself having some money in the Exchange bank at Roann got it and lent it to her. She paid it back. I heard a man had been arrested at the Ross House for theft and sent to prison, but did not know that Coffinberry had sworn the stolen things were his.

Mr. Dolph of Chicago Junction testified to being in Garrett, and Coffinberry said he had bought a lot in Auburn, but would not build on it, as the place did not suit him. He said his wife had received some money and would invest it. He was sick at Coffinberry's; owed them; had no money, but a grocer owed him, and he went to Coffinberry to see if he would take groceries. Coffinberry sent him to Mrs. C. and she took the groceries.

E. B. Aisbaugh was sworn. Am a jeweler and live at Garrett. Property values fluctuate in a railroad town. As to value of Coffinberry property, it may have cost $5,000 and not be worth that now. But property has risen in Garrett, and what was worth $400 in 1896 would be worth $1,000 now.

B. Hunsel sworn. Am a merchant tailor in Garrett. Think the Coffinberry property may be worth $4,500 to $5,000. Coffinberry told me it cost him $3,500, the lot $750 and the barn $400. It was a nice house.

Elmer E. Clark sworn. Thought $5,500 about right for the property.

Mr. Schopf sworn. Said Coffinberry told him his house cost $3,800, the lot $750 and barn $300. Said to me, he had $8,000 in bank stock. Borrowed money of me several times and paid back. Never heard of his having to pay for window broken by him when drunk.

Tom Mitchell recalled to read items from Garrett bank book in Coffinberry account.

FRIDAY'S SESSION.

The time was largely taken by the evidence of Mrs. Coffinberry, the cross examination being quite full and long. She testified that her father who was a resident of Wabash, kept a restaurant with a saloon in connection, and owned the premises he occupied. On his death, a part of this property became hers. Her share was about $4,500, but there were debts and taxes to be paid, and after these were settled her share was sent to her, and was $3,000. This was her original property and she adds to this the earnings of the Ross House while she was running it, which she says was about $3,000. In brief, it was this money that she claims, entitles her to the property of the late Mr. Coffinberry. It was also asserted by her that Mr. Coffinberry got her money on various occasions, and finally, when he had to settle with Sawvel, and asked for her stock in the Garrett bank to put in as security to Sawvel, she told her husband, that this stock was the last of her money, and if she let him have it, he must give her the house and lots. To this he agreed, and took the stock, turned it over to Sawvel, and later made her a deed to the property. There was a vast amount of detail in her evidence that we cannot give and which does not have much bearing on the case.

Dr. Thompson sworn. Was Coffinberry's physician. The latter had heart disease for many years, and for two weeks before his death was worse. I gave him best known remedies. On Saturday, Jan. 15, '97, when Deputy Platter and Dr. Buchtel came over first, Coffinberry was in bad shape. I gave him that day, preparation containing tincture of hyosciamus, as that was the best for his condition. He was not fit to go to Auburn. No, I did not know that Coffinberry had gone to Auburn the day before. (It had been often asserted that he was over here Friday evening, the day before he was so bad, to consult with his attorney. Several Auburn people claim to have seen him.) The witness also gave a short account of the life insurance transactions. The doctor said he had sent in an application to Chicago, in which he stated the conditions of Coffinberry's heart. The company sent the application back, with a request for a re-examination. This he attended to, and later on the application was accepted and the policy came on all right. It was on this policy, it seems, that a part of the $12,000 insurance was paid. Mrs. Coffinberry was asked as to why she had not turned over to the administrator, a set of fine silver plated knives and forks and spoons. She said he had given them to her some time before, possibly while they were living at the Swineford House. (Our readers will remember that during Coffinberry's term as auditor it became a matter of gossip that such a set of silverware had been given to him by Burford. Whether this story is true or not we cannot say, but it is generally believed.) Mrs. Coffinberry said she carried money from Fair to the Garrett bank and had it put on the books there. Took it each time in a sealed envelope. Never opened it; never took it home with me. Thinks the cost of furnishing the house was $1,500 to $1,800. She said she had borrowed $1,500 of John L. Davis when she went into the hotel and when she went out had paid it and had a balance left.

J. L. Davis was called, and his statement did not agree with hers, but he said he might have forgotten. The daybook of the Davis bank at Garrett was produced, and Chas. McClellan put on the stand to read the entries of deposits. It was found that they were in the name of H. N. Coffinberry and not in that of his wife.

G. E. Emanuel was sworn. Was deputy prosecutor when young Davenport of Garrett was sent to the penitentiary. Coffinberry had then said that the money ($600) taken from the hotel safe was his.

L. J. Gengler sworn. Coffinberry's house was a very fine one, all in high style. He told me it cost $7,000.

'Squire Gage sworn. Coffinberry told me his house cost $3,500. Am a builder and contractor.

Geo. W. Jones called. Live at Tiffin. Was clerk to Coffinberry at Garrett, His salary was about $2,250.

Will Coffinberry recalled. Was clerk in Garrett bank. We paid Fair 2 per cent on his deposits.

Several other witnesses were called or recalled, but nothing new was developed.

This Saturday morning the arguments began at 8. Mr. Sharpless spoke for the plaintiff and made an able statement and argument. Then the defense announced that they would make no argument, but submit it to the judge as it stood. Judge Watkins took the case under advisement.

Our Advertisements,

Which appear in this paper each week, we must furnish to the printer on or before Monday morning. For this reason we can mention but the first day (last Saturday) of our Special Sale. To say that it was a success would be putting it in mild form. A good share of the day we could have used double the number of clerks and still not have been able to wait on all. This sale will continue all this week and we no doubt will have all and at many ttmes more than we can do. We are not only giving what we have advertised, but very many bargains which we had overlooked or did not have the space to mention. We sold a great many Ladies' Jackets at one-half price and Ladies' Suits at less than they cost to manufacture. The 3 and 4½c Prints were kept on the move. Our Clothing trade was one of the largest we have ever experienced in one day, and it was a big day in the Dress Goods Department. We ask you to take advantage of the few remaining days of this sale, it will mean money saved on every purchase.

Schaab & Bro.

Our Saturday Evenings.

CHAPTER X.

In our "talks" last Saturday about D. A. Hodge and his tall opponent, it being a case of the "tall man and the short man," we were reminded of an incident in the political campaign of '84. It had been one of the hottest and best fought presidential campaigns on record, and at the close, the result rested on the great state of New York. The state outside the city had gone republican, but if the democrats had a good majority in the city, it might give the state to them and that would elect the democratic candidate for president. Because, counting all the other states, Cleveland had already 183 electoral votes and Blaine had 192. If the city of New York went low enough on democrat's majority the state's 36 electors would be republican and Blaine would have 228 votes. But if, as stated above, the city gave its usual democratic vote, Cleveland would have the 36 electors of the state, which with his 183 already certain, would give him a total 219. It took but 206 to elect. So there was great anxiety over the delay in finding just how the city had gone. At last the spell was broken, and Cleveland had the city by less than 1200 majority. So he got the 36 votes of the state and it was known he was safely elected. Democrats were wild with joy, for they had not elected a president since 1856. So of course they went a little to extremes in their rejoicing as men in both parties often do. But there were some who did not wait for New York, but watched the returns as they came in all night on election night and when it became certain that Cleveland had enough votes outside of New York, they felt so certain that New York would be all right as it always had been, that they began at once to "celebrate." And here is where our story of the long man and the short man begins. John Bunch, who was six feet six inches had been an enthusiastic democrat through the campaign, and on the morning was among those who rejoiced "not wisely, but well." Another democrat with similar ideas had come up from the south part of the county to help the fun along, and get the "crumbs" that fall from the hands of political leaders on such occasions. We never knew his name, but he was as much too short as John Bunch was too long, and being so far, "opposites" naturally drifted together and soon "assimilated." However, as the dawn came out, they were feeling "uncoguid" and were getting noisy. From this point it was but a step to become quarrelsome, and though both were of the same political faith and were filled with the same platform, they fell to disputing with each other over some particular line of statesmanship, and then quarreled. Then they wanted to fight. There stood in front of the Farmers bank corner, a hickory pole the democrats had put up and they rallied around the flag for their battle. Neither could stand well, and every time one lunged out to hit the other, he fell. This would never do. So each wound his left arm around that pole, so as to stand well and hit hard with his right. It was a funny scene. The short man would hang on the pole with his left arm and hit up into the air at John Bunch, and missing him, his arm would shoot skyward and he would by the force of his blow, swing around to the right, just as John Bunch from way up above would lunge downward to get his blow on his little opponent. This would also bring John around the pole. And so they went on chasing each other around, hanging on, lunging up and down, till their honor was satisfied and the country was once more saved. Alas for the glories of the past. The last we knew of John, he was the giant Highland soldier in a dime museum. The other man, has also sunk into oblivion.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know it.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in 50c. and $1. sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail, address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Presidential Appointments.

The President has sent the following nominations to the Senate:

To be United States Consuls—Thomas T. Prentiss of Massachusetts, at Rouen, France; George L. Darte of Pennsylvania, at Martinique, transferred to Patras, Greece; Alonzo C. Yates of Virginia, at Patras, transferred to Martinique.

War—Brig. Gen. J. C. Bates to be Major General of Volunteers; Brig. Gen. Lloyd Wheaton to be Major General of Volunteers by brevet. To be Brigadier Generals—Col. S. B. M. Young, Lieut. Col. Arthur MacArthur, Lieut. Col. William Ludlow.

Doctors Must Take Out a Liquor License.

Commissioner Wilson of the Internal Revenue Bureau, has decided that a physician who prescribes and sells to his patients whisky, brandy, wine or any other alcoholic liquor that is not compounded into a medicine by the admixture of any drug or medical ingredient therewith, is required to pay special tax as a retail liquor dealer, even though the alcoholic liquor thus furnished be prescribed as a medicine only and so used.

Dangerous Collision at St. Paul.

A passenger train on the Chicago Great Western Railroad crashed into the rear of a Northern Pacific stock train near the Mississippi street bridge, in the eastern part of St. Paul, Minn, splitting the caboose in two and injuring seven men. Six of them, who were in charge of a consignment of ten cars of horses, were less seriously injured, but John Bower, in charge of a shipment of hogs, from Clear Lake, Minn., was very badly crushed and scalded so that his recovery seems doubtful.

Missionary Murdered.

Pekin special: Rev. Mr. Brookes, of the Church Missionary Society, stationed at Hing Pin, in the province of Shang Tung, was captured in that vicinity and murdered December 3 by members of a seditious society called "Boxers," who have been active lately, destroying many villages and killing native Christians. The governor of the province has dispatched a force of cavalry to the scene of the disturbances, but the soldiers arrived too late to save Mr. Brookes.

Kipling Sloop Is Wrecked.

The sloop Venus, Capt. Dench of Gloucester, is ashore on White Fall, with part of her rigging gone. She struck on Beach Point, Cape Cod, in a snow storm, and was pulled off and went on to the flat. This is the sloop on which Kipling wrote his book, "Captains Courageous."

She had on board 9,000 pounds of fish, which is being taken off and shipped to Boston by rail. She was of twenty-one tons and was owned by Capt. John T. Dench.

Big Gas Well Strike in Ohio.

A 10,000,000 cubic feet gas well was struck four miles east of Findlay, Ohio, by operators who are "wild catting" in new territory. All tools, casing and tubing were blown out of the well and the roar of escaping gas can be heard for five miles. This is the greatest gas well in Ohio since the famous Karg well of ten years ago, which started the natural gas boom in Northwestern Ohio.

Hawaii To Be a Territory.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has ordered a favorable report upon the bill creating a territorial government for Hawaii. A few modifications of the original bill were made, the most important being the validation of the sale of lands since annexation and fixing the tenure of the Court of Judges at nine years. The provision for a delegate in Congress remains in the bill.

Remains to Lie in State.

The remains of the late Major John A. Logan will lie in state in St. John's Episcopal Church upon their arrival at Youngstown, Ohio. It is expected now that the funeral will occur about February 5. Company H, Ohio National Guards, of which Major Logan was Captain for a long time, has been asked to act as an escort at the funeral service.

Another German Vessel Seized.

Berlin special: The imperial mail steamer General has been detained at Aden, and occupied by British troops, with the object of searching her cargo, which is to be discharged. The General is owned by the German East African Line, the owners of the Bundesrath, previously captured by the British cruiser Magicienne off Delogoa Bay.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Jan. 15, 16, 17—Wills Comedy Company.
Jan. 19—"McFadden's Flats."
Jan. 20—Rose Coghlan in "The White Heathen."

Boy Hanged.

Edward Cressinger, the self-confessed murderer of Daisy Smith, aged 16, on Oct. 18, was hanged at Sunbury, Pa., Thursday. He was not yet 20 years of age, and is the youngest person ever hanged in Pennsylvania. He said he was not the only person guilty of her murder.

Detroit Factories Burned.

Fire burned out the Morgan P. Morris regalia manufacturers and the Fisk shoe supply factory, and badly damaged the Parisian laundry at Detroit. The loss is $60,000.

Kills Wife and Himself.

James L. Moore, aged 65 years, shot and killed his wife, aged 22 years, near Manes, Mo., then blew his head off. Mrs. Moore was the daughter of John Hunter, who recently killed C. C. Winningham. She was Moore's second wife and had left home after a quarrel.

Water Flows in Drainage Canal.

At 9 o'clock Tuesday morning water was turned into the $33,000,000 drainage canal at Chicago and began to flow toward Lockport, where it falls into the Desplaines river, and thence, through the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, to the Gulf of Mexico.

FEWEST FAILURES SINCE 1883.

Commercial Agency Gives the Record for 1899—Finds Business Safe.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The failures for 1899 are fewer in number than in any year since 1883, and smaller in amount of commercial liabilities than in any year since 1881. The aggregate of defaulted liabilities is $120,160,000, but nearly two-thirds of the banking liabilities were added within a few days, the aggregate reaching about $30,900,000. The commercial liabilities have been about $89,260,000, though exact returns for a few recent failures are not yet obtainable. In no other years except 1881, with defaulted liabilities of $81,155,932, and 1880, with $65,752,000, have failures been as small since the agency commenced quarterly returns in 1875. The average of liabilities per failure is less than $9,500, the smallest in any year of the twenty-five. The week has been exciting only at Boston, where the failures growing out of speculation and the efforts to re-establish banks and firms suspended have not given the week a holiday character. Yet general business is thoroughly safe and prosperous, and no important firms have failed save some which were individually connected with concerns involved in speculation. Atlantic exports of wheat, flour included, have in four weeks been only 8,278,618 bushels, against 10,874,587 last year, and Pacific exports 3,314,271 bushels, against 3,856,808 bushels. The corn exports continue about as large as last year. Failures for the week have been 221 in the United States, against 252 last year, and 25 in Canada, against 22 last year.

INSURANCE CONCERNS MERGED.

Galesburg, Ill., Company Surrenders to a Chicago Organization.

The Covenant Mutual Life Association at a special meeting of its policy holders at Galesburg, Ill., voted to surrender its charter and transfer its insurance business to the Northwestern Life Assurance Company of Chicago. This action was taken on recommendation of the officers with the support of a large majority of the members. Statements were made by President W. H. Smollinger and Secretary B. F. Reinmund of the Covenant company and by President C. E. Mabie and Secretary R. E. Sackett of the Northwestern, outlining the plan of reinsurance, which admits the Covenant members without examination into the Northwestern. The Covenant Mutual Life Association has about 30,000 members. It was organized originally as an Odd Fellows' insurance society on the assessment plan. Several years ago it was found that the low assessments were not sufficient. A rise was followed by vigorous protests. Another rise was necessary two years ago and the company has been losing members and gaining liabilities ever since.

GAS EXPLOSION WRECKS CHURCH.

Accident at Stromsburg, Neb., Injures Two Persons.

Eden Baptist Church at Stromsberg, Neb., which was dedicated a year ago, was destroyed by fire and Mrs. J. L. Johnson and daughter were seriously injured. The fire was caused by an explosion of acetylene gas, with which the church was lighted. The gas generator and the furnace were both located in the basement, and it is supposed that escaping gas was ignited by the furnace. Meetings were being held and a large number of people were present, but most of them had just left the building when the explosion occurred. The building was badly wrecked and what was not destroyed by the explosion was consumed by fire.

Uncle Sam Makes Protest.

Ambassador Choate has been directed to inform the British Government that the United States holds that the seizure and detention of American cargoes in South African waters cannot be justified by Great Britain. He is also directed to insist that American commercial rights shall be respected.

Lions Tear a Man to Pieces.

One of the animal keepers at the Vienna zoological gardens entered the cage of lions in a spirit of bravado and six lions rushed upon him and tore him to pieces. The attendants sought in vain, with flaming torches and streams of water, to drive the wild beasts from their victim.

Supposed Suicide Is Found.

Thereon A. Doremus of Upper Mont Clair, N. J., who disappeared from New York City mysteriously, leaving a note saying that he would commit suicide by jumping from the steamer, has been located at the Hotel Gray, in Los Angeles, Cal. The old man is evidently suffering from brain trouble.

Wreck on Colorado Midland.

A Colorado Midland passenger train, bound north, and a Santa Fe freight train had a head-end collision two miles south of Palmer Lake, Colo., Fireman Edgar Jones of the Santa Fe being killed and Engineers Leavitt and Turk being seriously hurt. No passengers were injured.

Ex-Congressman Ends Life.

Former Congressman Ben Clover committed suicide at his home near Douglas, Butler County, Kan., by shooting. Despondency resulting from sickness and poverty was the cause. Clover formerly represented the third district in Congress, and was among the first to be elected by the famous Farmers' Alliance movement.

Wholesale Grocery Burned Out.

The building and contents of the Bikelen-Winzer wholesale grocery at Burlington, Iowa, were destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $150,000. The insurance is about $95,000. The firm is well known throughout Iowa, Illinois and Missouri. The intense cold prevented the firemen from doing effective work.

Comes Home with a Fortune.

Hamilton Gormley, a native of Bridgeport, Conn., who left home twenty years ago and has since been mourned as dead, returned the other day, surprising his family and relatives. He has acquired a fortune of $125,000 in gold mining and will invest the money in Bridgeport property.

Mistook Wife for Burglar.

Alfred Morrison, a professor of languages, mistook his wife for a burglar during the night and shot her at their home in Mount Vernon, N. Y. The bullet entered her left shoulder and is lodged near the lung. Mrs. Morrison's baby was sick and she arose to get the child some medicine.

Fire Causes a Heavy Loss.

The two seven-story buildings at 425 to 435 East 24th street, New York, occupied principally by the wall paper factory of William Campbell & Co., were destroyed by fire. The loss was fully $500,000.

McCoy the Victor.

"Kid" McCoy defeated Peter Maher in the fifth round of what was scheduled as a twenty-five round go at the Coney Island, N. Y., Athletic Club.

Death of Millöecker.

Millöecker, the composer, who had been suffering from a paralytic stroke, died at Vienna.

Woman's Hotel to Be Built.

The last subscription of the $400,000 needed to insure the building of the much-talked-of woman's hotel in New York has been subscribed, and the plans will be drawn up and work commenced. The hotel when finished will cost about $800,000. The purpose of the hotel will be to furnish to self-supporting women first-class accommodations at a nominal figure.

AUTHORITIES IN DISPUTE.

State and National Officers in Conflict Over Killing of a Soldier.

A conflict of State and national authority in a military matter was begun at Fort Crook, Neb., by the arrest on a State warrant of Corporal Fair and Private Jackson on the charge of murder. They are charged with killing Private Morgan in that locality a few weeks ago. The men were exonerated by a court martial. The Attorney General was asked by the Governor to investigate the case, and expressed an opinion that it should be tried by the State, like any other murder. The dead man was attempting to escape after having enlisted. He had reached a place ten miles from the fort when the soldiers overtook him and shot him when he attempted to run. Much feeling has been wrought up in the West over the matter. The War Department wired the Federal attorney to defend, and District Attorney Summers was present at the arraignment.

EX-CONVICT HAS SIX WIVES.

Georgian Who Escaped from the Penitentiary Years Ago Rearrested.

James Hall of Atlanta, Ga., will hardly avoid remaining in the penitentiary for the rest of his natural life because he has six wives. Just twenty-eight years ago Hall was convicted in Muscogee County, Georgia, for horse stealing and given a penalty of fifteen years at hard labor. Nine of these he worked faithfully, but when a favorable opportunity presented itself he escaped and, proceeding to make up for lost time, married five women in different parts of the South, deserting the latest whenever caught by a new face. Recently Hall visited his sister-in-law in Birmingham, Ala. The sister-in-law began to investigate, with the result of disclosing Hall's many ventures in matrimony, and Hall is in jail awaiting a return to the convict camps to serve the remainder of his sentence.

RECEIVERS FOR THREE ROADS.

C. H. Chappell and James Hopkins to Take Charge of Railway Property.

Charles H. Chappell of Chicago and James Hopkins of St. Louis have been appointed receivers of the Omaha and St. Louis Railroad Company and the Omaha, Kansas City and Eastern Railroad Company and the Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company by Judge Thayer of the United States Circuit Court at St. Louis, Mo. Two bills of complaint were filed. One was brought by the receivers of the Pittsburg and Gulf road, and the other, a cross bill, was filed by the Missouri Railway Construction Company. Both bills allege that the defendants were in debt to the petitioners in sums aggregating about $500,000, and that the companies were insolvent and unable to meet their obligations.

Big Gas Well Struck in Ohio.

A 10,000,000 cubic feet gas well was struck four miles east of Findlay, Ohio, by operators who are "wildcatting" in new territory. All tools, casing and tubing were blown out of the well, and the roar of escaping gas could be heard for five miles. This is the greatest gas well in Ohio since the famous Karg well of ten years ago.

Frozen Dynamite Is Thawed.

By an explosion of dynamite in the east end of Pittsburg two Italians were fatally injured and several others slightly hurt. The men were blasting in a cut at Homewood avenue and attempted to thaw out some frozen dynamite by placing it on a hot stove and the explosion was the result.

Death of a Famous Priest.

The Rev. Sylvester Malone, pastor of the Roman Catholic church of SS. Peter and Paul, Brooklyn, N. Y., and a member of the board of regents of the University of New York, is dead, aged 79 years.

Loaded Freight Cars Burn.

The freight shed of the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad at St. George, S. I., was burned. Six freight cars, loaded with merchandise, were destroyed. The loss was about $15,000.

Nine Sailors Die in a Gale.

The steamer Puritan was driven ashore on Cabot Island in a heavy gale and eight out of her crew of nine were lost. Six were married men with families. The survivor broke his arm.

Family Burned to Death.

William Ellis, wife and two children were burned to death in their home near Barboursville, W. Va. No one knows the origin of the fire.

Bank in Minnesota Fails.

The People's Bank of Wabasha, Minn., closed its doors and is now in the hands of the bank examiner. Depositors, it is claimed, will lose nothing.

Gas Fumes Kill Chicagoan.

At Lima, Ohio, Lester Queen, a clerk, was found dead in his room. He was asphyxiated. His home was in Chicago.

GREAT CANAL OPENED

WATER TURNED INTO CHICAGO DRAINAGE DITCH.

At a Cost of $33,000,000, the Gulf of Mexico and the Great Lakes Are Connected by a Canal Twenty-eight Miles Long—Immense Engineering Feat.

Shortly after 9 o'clock Tuesday morning water was turned into Chicago's great $33,000,000 drainage canal and began to flow toward Lockport, where it fell into the Desplaines river, and thence through the Illinois and Mississippi rivers to the Gulf of Mexico. There had been so many delays and so much talk of injunctions and opposition of various kinds that the assurance that the canal had actually been opened came in the nature of a surprise, even to those who had kept closest track of the great enterprise from its inception.

While Chicago has turned the course of a river and caused water to flow in a direction contrary to that indicated by the natural slope of the land, in reality it has but carried into effect a suggestion of Pere Joliet made in 1674, when he wrote: "We can easily go to Florida in boats and by a good navigation. There would be but one canal to make, by cutting only one-half a league of prairie to pass from the lake of the Illinois into St. Louis river."

The cutting the intrepid explorer suggested has now been made, but it was much more of an undertaking than Joliet seemed to think it would be. It has required the resources of the second greatest city of the new world to accomplish it and at a cost in round numbers of $33,000,000. Startling the engineering world with the boldness of its conception and involving labor which required almost superhuman skill, this great artificial water highway rivals, if it does not excel, the famous canals of the world. Men stopped to marvel at the daring of the Suez, Panama, Manchester, Kiel, Nicaragua and North Sea enterprises, designed either as commercial arteries or for military strategem. But more remarkable than any as an engineering feat is the Chicago sanitary canal, which, with its completion, marks the creation of the largest artificial waterway yet constructed.

BEAR TRAP DAM, LOCKPORT.

The dimensions of the canal are larger than those of any other channel mentioned and it bears the distinction of being the only ship canal designed to carry a large volume of water. Primarily constructed to divert the flow of sewage from Lake Michigan through the Desplaines and Illinois rivers to the Mississippi, it serves a more magnificent purpose as a connecting link between the chain of lakes and rivers and establishing water communication between the Atlantic coast and the Gulf of Mexico.

HISTORY OF THE CANAL.

Waterway Has Cost $33,000,000 and Taken Seven Years' Work.

A little over seven years ago, or, to be exact, on Sept. 3, 1892, the first spadeful of earth on Chicago's great sanitary canal was turned. The work was begun on the rock cut below Lemont on the line between Cook and Will counties. Since that time work has been going on constantly. About $33,000,000 has been expended, and employment has been given to thousands, all in order that the city of Chicago might have an adequate method of disposing of its sewage so as not to injure the health of its own citizens, or, for that matter, of anybody.

This stupendous expenditure of money, however, was much more than was necessary to create a canal for the disposal of sewage. In order to get a permit to build the canal the sanitary trustees were obliged to submit to the plans of the Government for a canal big enough not only to carry off the necessary sewage, but to form the connecting link for the great ship canal that will one day connect the great lakes with the gulf. The sanitary district can justly claim to have expended $20,000,000 over and above the necessary amount toward the construction of a waterway not for the benefit of Chicago, but for the nation at large.

Innumerable difficulties have been placed in the way of the construction of the canal. Nature interposed miles of solid rock, but the people of the Illinois and Mississippi valleys interposed objections that it proved much more troublesome to surmount. They claimed that the sewage of Chicago would endanger the health of the inhabitants of Joliet and St. Louis and other cities.

The part of the canal into which the water is now flowing begins at the south branch of the Chicago river at Robey street, Chicago, and continues southward in an entirely artificial channel until it reaches Lockport, a distance of twenty-eight miles. At Lockport the large controlling works which will regulate the flow of water are situated. Between Chicago and Lockport the fall is only about seven feet. In the next four miles the fall is about forty feet, and were it not for the dam and sluice gates at Lockport, the flow of water would be so great as to render the Chicago river too swift for navigation. The water can be turned off almost as easily as the flow from a hydrant may be stopped by turning a faucet. Below the controlling works the channel widens out to about 500 feet, forming a basin in which the largest lake steamers can be easily turned — —

M'COY WHIPS MAHER.

Big Peter Is Easily Knocked Out in the Fifth Round.

The young Indiana pugilist, known to ring patrons as "Kid" McCoy, but whose real name is Norman Selby, surprised a crowd of 6,000 spectators at the Coney Island Sporting Club by knocking out Peter Maher of Ireland in the fifth round. There was never a period, correspondents say, when Maher classed with his opponent in scientific methods, although at one time it seemed probable that McCoy might give way before the rugged assault and heavy hitting of the Irishman. The men were fighting for a percentage of the gate receipts and a guaranty. About $17,000 showed up inside the gate and the promoters waived their rights and presented this to the fighters, with a winning and losing percentage.

Maher was evidently outclassed by the nimble and hard-hitting Kid, and, strange to say, most of the reports agree that McCoy was hitting the harder blows, sending Maher to the ground oftener than was good for a man supposed to be working his way up again to a fight with Sharkey or Jeffries. Besides the Irishman's head rocked like an old tower in a storm. The finishing punch was a left. Peter himself says it caught him under the jaw and on the Adam's apple and seemed to pump all the wind out of him. The Kid slipped a couple of lefts to the jaw early in the round that put Peter partially groggy, then whipped a right across over, which went high, followed by a left to the ear. Then came the right feint which pulled Peter's guard out of the way, and, the left hook coming up, completed the work.

Notes of Current Events.

PANIC IN A CHURCH.

Altar Drapery Catches Fire at Mass in Holyoke, Mass.

The New Year's mass in the Sacred Heart Church at Holyoke, Mass., early New Year's morning came near ending in a frightful loss of life through a panic. There were 1,500 people in the church, and even the vestry and aisles were filled. The Rev. P. B. Phelan was celebrating mass when one end of the light drapery covering the altar was blown against a lighted candle.

The next moment the entire front of the chancel was a mass of flames. A cry of "Fire" went up from a dozen throats, and then followed a scene of confusion which for a moment promised to result in a repetition of the burning of the Church of the Precious Blood in 1874, when seventy-five men lost their lives. Men sprang to their feet and ran shrieking toward the exits. The aisles became filled with a solid, struggling mass of humanity. Men and women were trampled upon in their mad frenzy to escape. Cries and prayers filled the auditorium.

A great loss of life was only averted by the coolness of a dozen men, who with quick presence of mind extinguished the flames before they had made further headway, and by cool words quieted the excited crowd. As it was a number were injured, though not seriously.

NEAR THE 100,000,000 MARK.

Population of the United States May Reach Nine Figures.

The war with Spain gave to Uncle Sam a substantial addition to his already big family of children and sanguine calculators there are who predict that the 100,000,000 mark will be passed when the census of 1900 is taken. The best estimates, however, indicate that the total will fall 12,000,000 or thereabouts short of the eighth cipher.

There were 62,622,250 inhabitants in the United States ten years ago, according to the last census. Secretary Gage's actuary of the Treasury computes the present population between Maine and California, Alaska and Key West, at 76,148,000. To this must be added the peoples brought under the stars and stripes by the war with Spain and by the annexation of Hawaii, to say nothing of Cuba, Porto Rico and Guam.

It is probable that for a decade or two longer the United States must be content to remain in the fourth place in point of population among the nations of the earth. China, despite encroachments upon her territory, still holds the lead, with 402,680,000 men, women and children within her borders; the British empire comes next, with 381,037,874 subjects, and the Russian empire is third, 129,211,113 persons owing allegiance to the Czar.

No other nation, however, can show such a rapid increase as that of the United States. George Washington was President of a nation numbering fewer than 3,000,000 individuals. It took twenty years for the population to double. In 1810 it was 7,239,881, in 1820 it had reached only 9,638,822, and ten years later the total was 12,866,020. From this time on it advanced by leaps and bounds. In 1840 it was 17,069,453, in 1850 it was 23,191,876, in 1860 it had reached 31,443,321, and thirty years ago the census showed a population of 38,558,371. It did not pass the half-century mark until 1880, when it was 50,155,783, and the last enumeration, 1890, gave a total of 62,622,250.

Owing to immigration from all parts of the earth, the population showed a wide cosmopolitan range even before the recent acquisition of new territory. The Philippines, however, will make a considerable addition to the list of races governed by the constitution. They will add no less than thirty new names to American nomenclature.

Notes of Army and Navy.

Eight torpedo boats have been added to the German navy.

The Navy Department reports an increase in desertions from American ships.

Japan has received four 360-ton torpedo boat destroyers from the Yarrow yards.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Great Increase in Oil Industry During December—Doctor and Servant Killed on the Railway—Convicted of Attempted Murder.

The month of December in the Indiana field is one of interest and shows that the winter weather has not affected the operations of the drill to any great extent. December is the largest month of the present season in completed work, and great activity has been displayed in the State during the year. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested in the producing of the crude product in this State the present year, and it is nothing to what will be spent the coming season if the market quotations continue above the dollar mark. During the month 266 wells were completed, with a daily output of 4,235 barrels, or an average per well per day of 20 1-7 barrels. The dry holes and gas wells number 56, the same as the previous month. The Indiana field has done nobly this season, as there were five months during the present season in which over 200 wells were completed. They were July, September, October, November and the present month. The large increase of the month is due to the activity in Wells and Grant Counties, as well as the outside counties.

Killed at a Grade Crossing.

Dr. Wycliffe Smith, late surgeon with the rank of major of the One hundred and sixtieth Indiana Volunteers, and his Cuban servant were instantly killed by a Wabash train ten miles west of Flora. They were riding in a buggy and did not notice the engine's approach. Dr. Smith lived at Delphi and was unmarried. He became attached to his servant while in Cuba and prevailed upon him to make his home with him.

Sentenced for Attempted Murder.

Dan Sanders, a young farmer, was convicted of attempting to kill Rutledge Glover, an old citizen of Franklin. He was given a sentence of two to fourteen years in the Michigan City prison. The jury was out two days before returning a verdict.

Milk Sickness Is Reported.

Milk sickness is causing a number of deaths in Fulton County. Two deaths were reported at Delong, Henry F. Long and his wife being the victims. Their deaths occurred within a few hours of each other.

Boy Killed by Electric Car.

Ralph Lingle, aged 13 years, was killed by an electric street car at Muncie. He climbed from the river over the bank upon the track, not seeing the approaching car. His head was crushed.

Within Our Borders.

Manual training department may be put into the Anderson schools.

Lester Morris, 3, Muncie, was burned to death while watching a bonfire.

Theodore Moore's saw mill, Carthage, went up in smoke. Loss, $2,000.

School at Oliver has been closed, because the pupils will not be vaccinated.

Ed Niemeyer, 18, Evansville, played with a powder can and is now short a part of his face.

Secret service man is trying to discover the person who has been sending vile letters to Logansport society women.

Charles H. Baraby's saw mill and hard wood manufacturing plant, Greencastle, in ashes. Loss, $10,000, partially insured.

Mrs. A. A. Zimmer, Anderson, has just recovered from a case of blood poisoning that was caused by wearing a tight finger ring.

William Goddard, 20, Rush County, accidentally shot and killed Steven Lucas, 17, his prospective brother-in-law, while hunting.

Elwood Magden, an early resident of Kokomo, who had not been heard from in thirty years, returned from Cape Nome, Alaska, worth $10,000,000.

Martin Fielo started to Logansport to church, puffing a pipe. Sparks fell in the lap-robe, and when he reached church he was minus his pantaloons and lower part of his overcoat.

John Schuman, Muncie, was fined $17.90 for letting his boy work in a glass factory instead of sending him to school. It will be made a test case and will be carried to the Supreme Court.

Jefferson Blankenbaker's general store, Crandall, was wrecked by safe-crackers. The robbers secured $90 in money and $200 in notes. Loss to building and stock will be several hundred dollars.

The superintendent of the Anderson schools has issued an order that pupils must present a certificate of vaccination, or they will not be allowed to enter. The same order applies to teachers and janitors.

Feed bury in the Goshen milling company's plant burst. One piece flew through a wall, striking William Haines, head miller, knocking him fifty feet. He received a broken leg and internal injuries that will be fatal.

New Albany and Jeffersonville want a military post established between the two towns.

Dr. J. N. Hurty of Indianapolis, expert chemist, reports that he finds nearly a grain of morphine in the stomach of Stephen Whitmore, murdered at Logansport Nov. 18.

The trustees of Wabash College met at Crawfordsville and it was decided that Rev. W. P. Kane will be inaugurated as president Feb. 22. Mrs. W. K. Jones of Chicago has given $5,000 toward a residence for the college president. The gymnasium building is to be refitted and also used for exhibitions and commencements.

Fire at the Westervelt fiber pail factory at South Bend caused several thousand dollars' damage. Two employes saved their lives by swimming across the mill race.

The unpaid shortage of City Treasurer Mattox of Rushville was compromised by the boadsmen advancing $2,655. The bondsmen have now paid $5,165 in settlement of his shortage.

At Princeton Mrs. Marion Purkiser, 28 years old, attempted suicide by cutting her throat with a razor. Six or seven deep gashes were made, but the physician says she may recover.

Jesse Day, Seymour, celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday. He has lived on his farm seventy-nine years.

Arthur Mayhall shot and instantly killed Randall Mason, near Somerville, while playing soldier. A big, ragged hole was torn in Mason's breast. The boys were each 10.

Albert Wolf of Petroma shot and probably mortally wounded his stepson, Henry Fraley while the boy was robbing Wolf's safe. Fraley, who is about 19 years old, has been absent more than two years and his whereabouts was unknown until the night of the robbery. There was more than $2,000 in the safe in a room adjoining his mother's bedroom.

THE RETURN.

O the little old town that I left one day,
Because it was quiet, still
Has the name that it had when I went away,
And stands on the same old hill;
But the ones that were dear in the little old town,
With its one wide street running up and down,
Have ceased to sit on the porches where
The roses were trained to climb;
They have ceased to sew and to whittle there,
As they did in the dear old time.

The little old church with its wooden sheds
Still stands as it stood of yore;
But the ones who knelt and who bowed their heads
Are worshiping there no more!
And the little old school where I carved my name
On the home-made desk stands just the same—
But the boys who are batting the ball to-day
And the little maids, fair and free,
Are not the children who used to play
On the common there with me!

The little old house, so dear, so dear,
Stands just where it used to stand;
But not for many and many a year
Has the latch obeyed her hand—
The hand in which my hand was laid
When my first few faltering steps were made—
And in the little old parlor there,
O'erlooking the little lawn,
Another sits in her easy chair
And hears the clock tick on.

O the little old town that I left one day,
Because it was quiet, still
Has the name that it had when I went away,
And stands on the same old hill;
But the friends that I've traveled "back home" to see
Are gone or else are but strangers to me,
And over the doors of the little old stores
Are names that I never knew,
And the dream that was dear of the "old home" here
Can never, alas! come true.

LEONITA.

As Gitano walked through the lowland grove to meet Leonita at the creek he wondered why she had grown so different; why she no longer would play the games that for years they had played together; why she now went round by the bridge and would not let him assist her across the stream.

When he reached the open he saw her standing by the road at the top of the hill. A horseman who had spoken with her rode away, smiling over his shoulder. Something tightened in Gitano's breast. With firm steps he came to the hill top.

"Who was he, 'Nita?"

"Who but the Corregidor," she answered archly.

"What said he?"

"More than ever another hath said, Gitano."

"What then?"

Leonita turned her face away.

"He said that mine is the beauty of the night."

Gitano's eyes flashed at the receding horseman.

"Why of the night?" he asked.

"Because," she faltered, "because—so said the Corregidor—my brow is the moon-touched snow upon the mountain, and my eyes are the glinting stars."

"Said he that? What more?"

"That my hair is the midnight cloud; that my lips——"

She turned a pebble with her dainty toe.

"That my lips——" Gitano prompted.

"Are the dew-bright berries of holly awaiting the kiss of dawn—so said he, the Corregidor."

At the bend of the road the rider looked back and raised his glistening sombrero. Leonita waved her supple hand and smiled. But when she turned again to her companion the smile departed from her lips, for the sadness of his eyes rebuked her heart.

The next day and the next the rider came, but Leonita was ever away with Gitano in the lowland grove.

Then, as the third day closed, her father said to her:

"'Nita, thou art too much with Gitano. Let him go his way. Thou art no longer a child."

"But, my father, I am happy with Gitano."

"So much the worse. Bide thee at home. The Corregidor will come again."

"The Corregidor?"

"Ay, 'Nita; he hath seen thy beauty."

"What dost thou mean, my father?"

"Only that thy place is here. Let Gitano go his way."

Another day the rider came, and and when he went away Leonita's face was in her hands.

"Silly child!" her father said. "Thou wilt be the Corregidora—a great lady, and ride in thy coach. Is this thy gratitude for a father's loving care?"

Gitano came at sundown to learn why Leonita had not kept their daily tryst. Her father sat with them and told Gitano all—that the Corregidor had smiled upon her beauty and begged her for his bride; that the father's promise had been given; that the notary was to come next morning to seal the troth, and that until then Leonita was to remain within.

Gitano heard as in a dream. The words seemed to come over some vast distance—even from some lightless world whose fires had flickered out ages and ages ago. But as her father spoke Leonita weaved a message of the thread upon her lap and trembled with excited joy to see Gitano read it.

The moon was low, when a call as of a nightbird fell softly through Leonita's lattice.

"Gitano!"

"'Nita!"

Cheek to cheek, they whispered from their hearts, and in the meeting of their lips were sealed pathetic vows of love beyond this life.

Then through the somber avenue of silence they came again to view the gloomy present.

"And spoke he only of the beauty of thy face?" Gitano asked.

"Only of that," she answered.

"I would thou hadst no beauty, then."

Before they parted at the lattice Leonita begged one last memento of his honest love. A lush young vine grew in the withered gumtree at the bottom of the gorge.

"Bring me a sprig of that, Gitano, for—remembrance."

And when she took it from him she bade him haste to bathe his hands in milk. Then Gitano knew the cruel nature of the vine.

"No, no! Not that!" he cried.

But the lattice window closed.

In the morning light the father looked on Leonita's face and horror paled his own.

"'Nita!" he gasped, "is it thee—my child?"

"Ay, my father; thy child."

He swayed and closed his eyes.

"Say not so," he moaned. "It can not be! My Nina was so beautiful—oh, so beautiful!"

In overwhelming grief he sank upon the floor and rocked feebly and beat his breast.

"O santo Dios! What curse is this?"

Then came another awful thought.

"The Corregidor will never take her now!" he cried.

"Why, my father? Doth he love me for my face alone?"

But the father only wailed as one gone mad:

"The Corregidor! The Corregidor! He will not have her now!"

Then came the rider with the notary.

"She was so much a child," the father sobbed. "She played with young Gitano in the grove. She did not know the devil-vine would eat her beauty. And yet it hath but spoiled her face and not touched her beauteous heart."

"Rustico," said the great Corregidor, "thou hast my earnest sympathy. Here is a purse of gold."

And with his notary he rode away.

When Gitano with his scalded hands smoothed Leonita's hair his tears expressed his heart.

"Still thou art beautiful," he said.

"Nay, sweet Gitano, even thou canst not say that."

"Hush, my 'Nita! Thine is the beauty of the day. Thy heart-love is the glad, warm sunshine and thy glorious soul the rainbow of promise to me."—Chicago Times-Herald.

THE JUDGE'S TURKISH BATH.

It Was Very Vigorous, and He Found Out Why.

The Judge had never taken a Turkish bath, but he was not feeling his best that morning, and it suddenly occurred to him to test its vivifying effects, so enthusiastically descanted upon by his young friends.

It seemed to othe Judge that the rubber was terribly rough, but fearing to expose his inexperience and subject himself to ridicule by objecting to the regular treatment, he patiently endured being punched, pummeled, slapped, spanked, whacked and poked until he could not stand the torture a moment longer.

"Is—it—qui-te—neces-sary—to—make—me—bla-ack—and—blue—all—over?" panted the Judge, as irregularly as the rubber dug his fists in more or less vigorously.

"Never you mind; I'm fixin' you," responded the rubber, redoubling his assaults and grinning diabolically—at least so it seemed to the Judge.

"Who (slap, groan) are (thud, groan) you?" gasped the Judge, a horrible suspicion dawning in his mind. "Your (whack, groan) face (thump, groan) does (whack, groan) look (slap, groan) fa—thud, groan)—miliar" (swish, groan).

"Oh, you remember me, do you?" growled the rubber sarcastically. "Well, lash yer old hide, mebbe you'd like to send me up for six months again for prize-fightin'!"—Harper's Magazine.

Always the Way.

A woman, with a freshly blackened eye and traces of recent tears on her face, came hurriedly into a police magistrate's office one morning, and asked for the arrest of her husband on a charge of beating her.

The brutal husband was arrested and brought before the magistrate. He was a hard-looking citizen, large of frame, repulsive in appearance, and about three-fourths drunk. The wife, on the contrary, was slight and delicate, and her hands were wrinkled and knotted with hard work.

The trial was short. "Bill," as she called him, made no defense. He was apparently too lazy to take the trouble. The wife had cooled down considerably, and gave her testimony with extreme reluctance, as is the custom in such cases; but the guilt of the prisoner was clearly established, and the magistrate, after lecturing him sharply and indignantly on his brutality, was about to prescribe the necessary punishment, when the pale-faced victim spoke up.

"Make the fine as light as you can, your honor," she said, anxiously. "I'll have to pay it."

A Model Witness.

During the investigation of the Maine disaster an old seaman was called before the Court of Inquiry to tell what he knew about it. He was solemnly sworn to tell the truth and nothing but the truth; furthermore, he was cautioned not to repeat hearsay; his personal experience was the only testimony that would answer the law.

"And now tell us what you know about the explosion of the Maine," said one of the officers.

"Well, sir," said the old bluejacket, "I was a-corking it off in me 'ammick (hammock), and 'eard a noise and waked up in the 'orspital. That's all I know about it, sir."

The court maintained its gravity, states the Chicago Record, from which this story is taken, and dismissed the witness.

"Corking," it may be added, is sailor-slang for sleeping. When they lie down upon the deck, as they often do for a nap, figuratively speaking they are calking the deck.

A Murderer's Black Cap.

When John Carroll was hanged recently at Atlanta for the murder of a woman, he wore the black cap which he had made for the occasion by his mother.

Largest Public Debt.

The public debt of France is the largest in the world, and amounts to £1,600,000,000.

At 2 cents a mile a trip to the sun would cost $1,828,604.40. We understand there will be no cut-rate excursions this season.

HORRORS OF U.S. ARMY

CRUELTIES FORMERLY INFLICTED ON SOLDIERS.

Shouldering a Log—Trotting the Bull-Ring—One Man Buried Up to His Neck in Sand—Some Other Inhuman Methods.

Twenty years ago cruel punishments indeed were meted out to refractory soldiers of the United States army. In those days a 20 or 30-day trick in the guard house was not a comparatively minor matter, as it is now. The soldier who nowadays lands in the guard house for drunkenness, insubordination, neglect of duty or any other violation of regulations is put to work at some job around the post from fatigue call in the morning till recall from fatigue late in the afternoon. The work is never hard. The only discomfort connected with the work is that it is always performed under the watchful eye of a sentry with a loaded gun. On the other hand, the guard house prisoner gets every night in—that is, he is permitted to slumber peacefully on the comfortable bunk in his guard house cell, while his comrades who have not committed themselves have to take their turns standing guard over him through the watches of the night.

Shouldering a Log.

The soldier who worked himself into the guard house prior to 1879 did not get any night in, from the day he began his term until its end. He walked his post, two hours on and four off, from the beginning to the termination of his sentence. But he did not carry a gun while on post. He shouldered an unbarked log, from six to eight feet in length and weighing from 70 to 100 pounds, and a man in his rear carried the rifle. The business of the soldier with the rifle was to see that the soldier with the log kept on the move, up and down in front of the guard house, from the time he went on post until relieved, at the end of two hours, by another guard house prisoner, to whose shoulder the log would be transferred. It was also the sentry's duty to see that the "log-humper" did not drop his burden. The prisoner could shift it from one shoulder to the other, or carry it under his arm, or horizontally in front of him, or in any other way he chose; but he had to carry it, and he had to keep moving, on pain of being indented with the point of a bayonet. There are hundreds of old soldiers still in the United States army who did their little tricks at "tree packing" in the old days, and none of them speaks with the slightest degree of enthusiasm of the job. The guard house prisoner of large physique was out of luck in those days. A 100-pound log was invariably bestowed upon him. The smaller logs were reserved for the prisoners of less bulk.

"Trotting the Bull-Ring."

One of the punishments meted out to the cavalryman who got into the guard house under the old regime was "trotting the bull ring." The bull ring is the circular track upon which the horses are exercised when there is not much doing around the post in the way of drills on account of inclement weather. Every cavalry post has its bull ring. Upon the smooth surface of the bull ring the fractious cavalryman of a couple of decades ago was required to chase the intangible air at regular intervals, named in the sentence, every day of his confinement. His bull-ring work was no go-as-you-please walking match, either. He could go at any pace swifter than a walk; but he was not allowed to walk. Heel-and-toe business was barred. If he chose to work it out in cantering the sentry was agreeable; did he prefer the less graceful, but also less irksome, trot, the sentry hadn't a word to say, but if for a single instant he relapsed into a common, everyday walk he would hear the sentry's command, like the crack of a circus ringmaster's whip, "Shake her up there, Pete; what do you think this is, a practice march? G'lang!" and if the bull-ring pounder knew his gait he would leave off walking right away. The bull-ring work was good for wind and muscle, but it was hard and galling. A soldier undergoing a bull-ring sentence dropped dead from heart disease at a post in the Southwest one day about seventeen years ago, and then the bull-ring punishment was abandoned.

Buried in Sand.

It was reserved for the commanding officer of an Arizona post, a one-company outfit, to inflict so barbarous punishment upon an offending soldier that the whole scale of punishment in the United States army was revised and made hard and fast. This commanding officer was a captain, and the affair happened in 1879. He had in his company a soldier who was a very hard case, and put in most of his time in the guard house. He completed a guard house term in the autumn of 1879, and immediately repaired to the near-by town of whisky shacks and made himself exceedingly drunk. He returned to the post with the announced intention of razing it to the level of the desert and firing a volley over its ashes. The captain had him lassoed as he was entering the post. He ordered that a hole sufficiently large to receive the upright body of a man be dug in the sand of the parade ground. When the hole was dug the captain ordered that the hard-case soldier be stood in it up to his neck, and that the sand be then repacked around him as tightly as possible, covering his arms and shoulders and leaving only his head protruding above the ground. The captain's orders were obeyed. The offending soldier, still more than half drunk, was packed in the sand hole, his head alone catching the rays of the semi-tropical sun, and a sentry was placed over him. The sun was nothing compared to the desert ants. The ants sent out their couriers to the highways and byways and dunes and hollows, and it was no time at all before some thousands of them, big, red, spider-like and ferocious, were running over the soldier's head. They crawled into his ears and his nose and his mouth, and they caused him such unspeakable agony that he shouted in frenzy. The sentry finally revolted against this punishment, and his comrades joined him. They threatened the captain, and the latter, from fear of summary punishment, permitted the prisoner's release. The prisoner was taken to the hospital, almost a maniac. The case was reported at Washington, and the result was a revision of the military code.

Bucking and Gagging.

Although the new regulations expressly forbid the punishment of "bucking and gagging," men have been bucked and gagged in the United States army within the past dozen years. Bucking and gagging consists in tying a refractory soldier—generally a soldier who is maniacal with drink and very abusive—hand and foot with cords and gagging him with a block of wood whittled to fit his mouth. The gagging part of this punishment came near choking a number of soldiers to death, which accounted in part for its erasure from the punishment list.

One punishment much affected in the light artillery, was called "tying on the spare wheel." Springing upward and rearward from the center rail of every caisson was a fifth axle, and on it was a spare wheel. A soldier who had been insubordinate was taken to the spare wheel and forced to step upon it. His legs were drawn apart until they spanned three spokes. His arms were stretched until there were three or four spokes between his hands. Then feet and hands were firmly bound to the felloes of the wheel. If the soldier was to be punished moderately he was left bound in an upright position on the wheel for five or six hours. If the punishment was to be severe the ponderous wheel was given a quarter turn after the soldier had been lashed to it, which changed the position of the man being punished from an upright to a horizontal one. Then the prisoner had to exert all his strength to keep his weight from pulling heavily and cutting on the cords that bound his upper arm and leg to the wheel.

CRUEL ARMY PUNISHMENTS.

A Wise Answer.

It takes but an ordinary man to return an angry answer to an insult. The extraordinary man is he who, under such circumstances, holds himself so well under control that he controls his adversary also.

Persia once possessed such a man, and was clear-sighted enough to make him a judge. He was the chief judge of Bagdad in the reign of the Calif Hadee, and his name was Aboo Yusuph. He was a very wise man, for he knew his own deficiencies, and was actually sometimes in doubt as to whether he possessed sufficient wisdom to give a just decision in cases peculiarly shrouded in mystery.

It is related of him that on one occasion, after a patient investigation of facts, he decided that he had not sufficient knowledge to pronounce on the case before him. There was in his presence a pert courtier, one of those men who take long to learn that wisdom and impudence are not closely related.

"Pray do you expect that the calif is to pay you for your ignorance?" he asked, hoping to place the judge at a disadvantage.

"I do not," was the mild reply. "The calif pays me—and pays me well—for what I do know. Were he to attempt to pay me for what I do not know, the treasures of his empire would not suffice."

Impressive Initiation.

A man who had applied for admission into a secret society, which, for the purposes of this narrative, may be called the Ancient Order of Queer Fish, and had been accepted, presented himself at the appointed time for initiation.

In accordance with ancient usages, the candidate was blindfolded, ushered into the lodge-room, marched in slow and solemn procession around the darkened hall, subjected to various trying ordeals, including that of being tossed in a blanket held at the corners and sides by athletic members, and having come through the ceremonies alive and in fair preservation, was declared duly initiated, and entitled to the right hand of fellowship. The bandage was removed from his eyes, and the brethren crowded about him to extend their congratulations on the fortitude he had displayed.

"How did it impress you?" asked one of them.

"It was the most impressive ceremony, take it all around," he answered, "that I ever knew or ever heard of."

"You were aware, of course, that there was a fire across the street while we were putting you through?"

"Why," rejoined the new member, "I could hear the puffing of the engines, the tramping of the horses on the stone pavement, the yelling of the firemen and the swish of the streams from the hose, and I could smell the smoke, too, but good gracious, I thought it was a part of the initiation!"

Earliest Strike.

The earliest strikes occurred about 1450 B. C., or upward of thirty-three centuries ago. Pharaoh was building a new Temple of Thebes. The masons received very little cash, but a quantity of provisions, which the contractor thought sufficient was handed to them on the first of each month. Sufficient or not, they mostly ate it before the time had elapsed. On one occasion many of them had nothing left quite early in the month, so they marched to the contractor's house, before which they squatted and refused to budge until justice was done. The contractor persuaded them to lay their distress before Pharaoh, who was about to visit the works, and he gave them a handsome supply of corn, and so all went on well for that month. But the same state of things occurred by the middle of the next, and for some days the men struck work. Various conferences took place, but the men declined to do a stroke until they were given another supply of food. They declared the clerks cheated them, used false weights, and so forth, familiar enough complaints in this country under the truck system. The contractor not complying with their demands, they marched to the governor of the city to lay their grievances before him, and he tried to get them to return to work by smooth words, but that was no use, and they insisted on having food. At last, to get rid of them, he drew up an order for corn on the public granary, and the strike was at an end.

One in Misfortune.

The soldier boy wrote home from the far Philippines:

"Father—My left leg has been shot off by a cannon ball. I want to buy me a good, first-class cork leg. Please send me $100 in your next letter."

The father answered, from his home in the Georgia pines:

"Son—I kin shake hands with you on yer loss. I lost my wooden leg endurin' of the blizzard. A nigger stole it an' split it up fer kindlin' wood. Ef you git that cork leg, let me know how it works, an' whar you got the money to git it with."—Atlanta Constitution.

Hollanders Smoke Most.

The Hollanders are perhaps of all the northern people those who smoke the most, the humidity of their climate making it almost a necessity, while the moderate cost of tobacco with them renders it accessible to all. To show how deeply rooted is the habit, it is enough to say that the boatmen of Holland measure distances by smoking.

WORLD'S RICH MEN.

MILLIONAIRES FOUND IN ALMOST EVERY LAND.

Germany and Austria Prominent in the Golden Book—Great Fortunes of Russia, China, Africa, India, America and Spanish South America.

Germany is not generally regarded as a land of rich men, and yet the golden book should have a very large section devoted to Germany and Austria-Hungary. It is true that most of the names would have Prince before them, but, being of royal blood does not alter the fact of wealth. Without counting the private properties of the sovereigns, who ought not to be included, there are a dozen or so Teutonic Highnesses whose wealth, not merely in lands, but in money, is enormous. For example, that of the father of the present Prince of Bulgaria was counted by many millions sterling. Many of the dethroned monarchs, again, are very rich, for rol en exil has ceased to be a synonym for poverty. No one, of course, knows the exact wealth of the Orleans family, but it is very great, and even the Bourbons are well off. Don Carlos, in spite of the money he has spent on Spanish and other adventures, is a millionaire.

The Russian Empire would also make a good show, for although the great landed proprietors have suffered of late years, many of the merchants and financiers have done exceedingly well. If rumor is to be trusted, some of the officials are also very rich. Fabulous sums are attributed to one in particular. The millionaires of Africa would, we suppose, be confined to Kimberley and the Rand; but possibly there are some large fortunes in Cairo among the Levantine colony. Asia will probably make a very respectable show in the golden book. It is true that in the Turkish and Persian empires millionaires are never long-lived, and this fact tends to their non-existence; but for all that, some of the Smyrna Greeks and Damascus Jews ought to be able to gain admission. India, on the other hand, if the native princes who do not possess sovereign rights are counted, as they must be, contains a great number of extremely rich men. Not only are there merchants in the great cities who are worth several millions in personal property, but there are also four or five great Zemindars who have incomes which represent the interest on two or three millions sterling. The reaction against thinking of India as a place of wealth has, in fact, been carried too far; and we are apt to forget that princely fortunes are still made and kept there.

The truth about the Chinese fortunes would be most curious if it could be discovered. Unfortunately, it is the land of the crypto-millionaires, of the men who live in little low houses and hoard gold ingots in the shape of Naples biscuits. It is known, however, that the Empress Dowager is among the richest, if not the richest, persons, alive; while Li Hung Chang, unless he has lately been plundered, which is unlikely, must also have vast wealth. Outside China the Chinese are often very rich, and dare to show their wealth. For example, it is always said, and as far as we know with truth, that several of the Chinese merchants of Singapore are men of enormous riches. With the American millionaire it is hardly necessary to deal. What place is not full of the report of his dollars? It should, however, be noted that, though one or two of the American fortunes are beyond the dreams of avarice, the number of "warm men" is, in proportion to population, not so great as it is here. There are, that is, not so many great, but far more small, millionaires in England. The man who reaches the $5,000,000 mark is apt either to lose it all again, or else to turn it into $50,000,000 or $100,000,000.

Spanish South America is not, as a rule, regarded as a place for rich men, yet, as a matter of fact, Chili, Mexico, Brazil and the Argentine have all within the last thirty years produced fortunes on the great scale, and not very long ago the greatest heiress in the world was said to be the only daughter of a South American millionaire.—London Spectator.

SHIPS CLAIMED BY THE WAVES.

Great Britain's Losses by Shipwreck the Smallest in the World.

Losses at sea sustained by the merchant service of the world in the last year are set forth in a report prepared by the British government, copies of which have been received here. Great Britain, with over 12,000,000 tons afloat, has the lowest percentage of losses.

Startling figures are presented as to the number of steamers and sailing craft reported "missing" and now regarded as lost by insurance underwriters. No less than twenty-four steamers sailed out of various ports last year and have never been heard from, and seventy-nine sailing vessels cleared and never reached their destination, both classes representing a total tonnage of 72,773. In addition ninety-six ships, representing eighty-five sailing craft and eleven steamers, had to be abandoned at sea.

As a result of all the losses the gross reduction in the mercantile merine of the world is shown to be 1,141 vessels of 820,725 tons, excluding vessels of less than 100 tons.

Great Britain's rate of loss is 2.23 per cent, the next on the list being Germany, with 2.33 per cent. Germany and the United States are now making a "neck-and-neck" race as regards the total number of vessels owned, the latter having 2,113,677 tons and the former 2,113,981 tons. Austria-Hungary is third in point of rate of loss, with 3.18 per cent, and then come Russia, with 3.63 per cent, and the United States, with 4.14 per cent. The other nations are in the following order: Itally, 4.34 per cent; France, 4.48; Holland, 4.62; Spain, 5.01; Norway, 5.55, and Sweden, 5.66.—New York Herald.

FASCINATING CAIRO.

The Most Picturesque and Interesting of Oriental Cities.

From its founding in 969 by the Fatimite califs, as an offshoot of the tented settlement of Fostat, to the present rule of Abbas Pasha, seventh Khedive, or viceroy, of the dynasty of Mehemit Ali, Cairo—capital of Egypt, metropolis of the African teaching—has had a romantic history. Scene of famous exploits of great personages, from Saladin to Napoleon, of sanguinary conflicts between Christianity and Islamism, and the memorable massacre of the Mamelukes; cradle of religon and cults; home of the "Arabian Nights" tales; the place where lasting principles of philosophy and science were conceived, and where Bible scenes were laid, Cairo has become the meeting-ground of winter idlers from every clime.

Cairo looks old, but comparatively is not; Alexandria has the appearance of newness, but was twelve hundred years old before the first stone of the present capital was laid. But the Cairo of to-day is only the development of Fostat, Old Cairo, New Babylon, and Heliopolis, probably. There has always been a great city there or thereabouts, changing in appellation with its locale.

The visit to Egypt has become almost as essential to Americans—and fully half of the eight thousand winter visitors are from the States—as the pilgrimage of good Mohammedans to Mecca. The Mohammedans' religion takes them but once to the sacred city of the prophet, but pleasure draws those favored by fortune to the Nile capital time after time. Cairo is more than interesting; it is fascinating. The antiquarian, the student, and the savant have always been at home there; and the invalid, real or imaginary, seeking a climate, finds in and about the khedival city the superlative of air and temperature.

Artists never weary of reproducing Cairo's picturesque scenes and vivid colorings. The blue of the skies, the splendor of the setting sun, the Turneresque afterglow, and the delicate browns of the desert, seem to be best suggested in water-colors. Like Venice, Egypt demands a master hand in oils.

The traveler of impressionable nature yields to the fascination of Cairo's quaint Eastern life, as perfect as if met far beyond the Orient's threshold, and doubly satisfying, because found within a half-hour of the creature comforts of hotels conspicuously modern. To walk the streets of an Oriental capital wherein history has been made, between meals, as it were, and delve by day in museums and mosques perpetuating a mysterious past, and dine de rigueur in the evening, with the best music in Europe at hand, explains a charm that Cairo has for mortals liking to witness Eastern life provided they are not compelled to become a part of it. If Egypt disappoints, the indecisive idler can in four or five days be back in Paris or the Riviera.—Century.

Best Governed City.

The leading and most commendable feature of the management of public affairs is the principle of the sinking fund, which is applied to every enterprise or business in which the municipality is interested. Whatever debts it has are on the sure and safe road to liquidation by the automatic operation of the sinking fund device. By this means the city of Glasgow will, inside of fifty years, furnish free water to its citizens; give them the best electric lights free; electric or water power at cost; allow them to ride on its electric road at the nominal fare of 2 cents for any distance, and furnish to all free use of a magnificent public library.

The city affairs are managed by business men with the same prudence with which they would manage their own affairs; the question of party politics enter into no local election, and it seems to be the object of the municipality to administer the city's finances in an economical way, to improve the public health in its physical and moral basis, and to give brightness and the possibility of happiness to civil life. Its success in all these has been so marked as to command the admiration of the civilized world and to gain for itself the appellation of the best governed city on the face of the globe.—American Magazine of Civics.

"Witch" Hazel.

According to Meehan's Monthly, the correct name for Hamamelis Virginica is not witch hazel, but wych hazel. Our plant has no connection with the magic of the water hunter. The blackthorn of England, Prunus Spinosa, was the wood used in these divinations, or whatever these superstitious practices may be termed. Hazel had a very wide meaning in the olden times, and the elm, as well as the nut now known as such, was hazel. One of these elms, now known as Ulumus Montana, was the favorite wood for making wyches, or provision chests, and was therefore known as the wych hazel. In the present day it is the wych elm. Our Hammamelis received from the early settlers the name of wych hazel from the resemblance of the leaves to those of the wych hazel or elm of the old world. Language reformers imagining that wych should be spelled witch are responsible for the confusion. Wych hazel is the correct term for our plant.

Reindeer as Racers.

The popularity of horse racing in Russia is seriously threatened by the introduction of the reindeer as the rival of the horse, says the Golden Penny. The reindeer is among the swiftest of quadrupeds and can outstrip the swiftest of horses. It is estimated that he could give the fleetest Derby winner a start of half a mile and beat him easily over the Derby race course, while for a short distance he reaches a speed of sixty miles an hour. A St. Petersburg merchant has constructed a special course for this new sport, and the novel excitement is looked forward to with great eagerness by sport-loving Russians. It is expected that before long reindeer will be harnessed to sleighs and that most exhilarating of pastimes made more exciting still.

How Diamonds Are Cut.

Diamonds are cut in three different forms—the rose, the brilliant and the table, of which the second is the prettiest. It is a double pyramid or cone, of which the top is cut off to form a large plane, and at the bottom directly opposite to a small plane.

He (in an argument)—Well, thank goodness, I'm not two-faced. She—You ought to be thankful. One face like yours is enough.—Ex.

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY....JANUARY 11, 1900.

Roann Factory Burned.

About 5:30 a. m. yesterday fire was discovered in the big hoop factory at Roann and before it could be got under control, the entire plant burned. This included the two stave mills, the hoop factory and the saw mill that were all under one roof. The most of the stock was away from the buildings and was saved. But the staves in the shed at the sidetrack near the mill, were destroyed. It is believed the heavy machinery, much of which was new, will be saved, as the buildings were light. The electric light plant used to light the factory, was destroyed. The property is fully insured.

The fire started in the engine room after the night man had gone home, and when the day man came a little later to take his place, he found the fire too far started to be stopped, as he had no help till people were able to reach the scene. The plant was provided with means to fight fire, such as hose and steam pump, but of course these are liable to be disabled or destroyed early in the fire, or we presume this being Sunday morning, steam was not fully kept up. The hoops are kept piled up at a distance, and so are mostly saved. The office and its contents are saved, as the building was several rods away from the fire. Of course the logs were saved as they are green and only a few were close to the fire. They had a great deal of logs and bolts on hand, as the recent good weather had enabled them to push business. Only Friday there came in 78 loads of logs. We understand the plant will be rebuilt at once. As the young men who own the factory are all Auburn men, there is of course a great deal of sympathy felt for them here. Mr. Hartman started for Roann on the first train, the one due going west at 10:21, having a promise from the officials that this fast train would stop for him at Roann.

Tried Five Doctors.

Mr. Frances L. Sales of Missouri Valley, Ia., writes she had severe kidney trouble for years, had tried five doctors without benefit, but three bottles of Foley's Kidney Cure effected a perfect cure. H. B. McCORD, DRUGGIST.

Fairfield Caucus.

Pursuant to the call of the democratic county chairman, the democrats of Fairfield township met in caucus on the 6th day of January to select a delegate to the convention to be held in Auburn on January 9, 1900, to select a district chairman to act as a member of the state committee.

The caucus was organized by electing H. H. Slaybaugh chairman and David Shook secretary. After which the names of W. H. McGiffin as delegate and Solomon Reincehl as alternate were announced and elected by by acclamation. The best of harmony prevailed and the caucus expressed itself in favor of silver, in opposition to the trusts as now organized against labor and the common people, and against imperialism.

H. H. SLAYBAUGH, Chairman,
DAVID SHOOK, Secretary.

ASK YOUR DOCTOR!

Ask your physician this question, "What is the one great remedy for consumption?" He will answer, "Cod-liver oil." Nine out of ten will answer the same way.

Yet when persons have consumption they loathe all fatty foods, yet fat is necessary for their recovery and they cannot take plain cod-liver oil. The plain oil disturbs the stomach and takes away the appetite. The disagreeable fishy odor and taste make it almost unendurable. What is to be done?

This question was answered when we first made of Cod-Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. Although that was nearly twenty-five years ago, yet it stands alone today the one great remedy for all affections of the throat and lungs.

The bad taste and odor have been taken away, the oil itself has been partly digested, and the most sensitive stomach objects to it rarely. Not one in ten can take and digest the plain oil. Nine out of ten can take SCOTT'S EMULSION and digest it. That's why it cures so many cases of early consumption. Even in advanced cases it brings comfort and greatly prolongs life.

DISTRICT CONVENTION.

Gathering of Democrats to Select a Chairman for the Twelfth District.

Pursuant to the call issued by Hon. Thomas R. Marshall, chairman of the Twelfth district, comprising the counties of Allen, DeKalb, Noble, Lagrange, Steuben and Whitley, delegates of the democratic party assembled here today to select a successor to Mr. Marshall, who has acceptably filled the position for the past four years.

Every county was well represented, and the delegates were for the most part men who have been prominent in the councils of the party for many years. The first outside delegation to arrive was that from Steuben county, followed soon after by those from Noble, Whitley and Lagrange. The Allen county delegates and other prominent members of the party came in at noon over the Lake Shore.

The meeting at the Armory was called to order at 1:30 by Chairman Marshall who made an eloquent and stirring address. He was enthusiastically cheered. As chairman for four years he has allied himself with no faction, but has worked faithfully for the good of the party. He counseled harmony and hoped his successor, whoever he might be, would labor to that end. At the close of his speech he read the call for the convention.

Hon. Andrew A. Adams of Columbia City was named and unanimously chosen as chairman of the convention. He made a brief but pointed speech.

On motion of Col. McDonald of Columbia City, James A. Barns of the COURIER was made principal secretary, with the democratic editors present as assistants.

Nominations for district chairman being in order, Col. McDonald presented the name of Hon. T. R. Marshall. Mr. Marshall arose and in a brief speech declined.

Henry Colerick asked that the Allen county delegates be permitted to withdraw and consult, so as to take united action. After a short recess it was decided by the Allen county delegation to drop their numerous candidates and unite on man, Wm. Kaough, Hon. R. C. Bell then anounced the name of Mr. Kaough in a very laudatory speech—one brilliant and full of good nature.

The nomination of Mr. Kaough was seconded by a delegate from Lagrange county. Mr. Marshall said he hoped the selection of Mr. Kaough would be made unanimous, and upon motion of Mr. Bell this was done. Mr. Kaough was then called, and welcomed by Mr. Marshall. The new chairman spoke briefly, saying he was gratified at what he considered a great honor, and asking the assistance of all present. This was answered by a full rising vote.

Hon. C. M. Brown then arose and offered a resolution to instruct delegates to the state convention, in favor of Hon. Joseph Adair as a candidate for judge of the supreme bench. This was seconded by a number of delegates, including Hon. R. C. Bell of Fort Wayne, and Hon. J. E. McDonald of Ligonier.

The resolution was as follows: Be it

Resolved, That if the Hon. Joseph W. Adair of Whitley county shall consent to allow his name to be presented to the democratic state convention for Judge of the Supreme Court for the Fourth district, that the delegates from the Twelfth congressional district be instructed to present the name of Judge Adair to said convention and urge his nomination.

There being no further business, the convention then adjourned.

Club Notes.

The L. L. C. met after a two weeks vacation with Mrs. Barns last Saturday. Pennsylvania was the subject for the day. The lesson was conducted by Mrs. Brown assisted by Mrs. Lackey. After these two had each given a paper full of valuable information, a discussion followed in which all took part. A committee was appointed to arrange for Guest Day which will be next Saturday and the club will meet with Mrs. Lackey. Each member is allowed one guest.

The Reading club met at the home of Mrs. Hugh Culbertson last Wednesday. The book "Richard Carvel," was finished and election of officers took place, which resulted as follows: President, Mrs. C. A. Schaab; Vice President, Mrs. Hugh Culbertson; Secretary, Mrs. Clarence Raut; Treasurer, Mrs. George Lanning; Critic, Mrs. D. A. Garwood. The club will be entertained by Mrs. C. A. Schaab, the new president, on next Wednesday afternoon to tea.

Prevented A Tragedy.

Timely information given Mrs. Geo. Long of New Straitsville, Ohio, prevented a dreadful tragedy and saved two lives. A frightful cough had long kept her awake every night. She had tried many remedies and doctors but steadily grew worse until urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle wholly cured her, and she writes this marvelous medicine also cured Mr. Long of a severe attack of Pneumonia. Such cures are positive proof of the merit of this grand remedy for curing all throat, chest and lung trouble. Only 50c and $1.00. Every bottle guaranteed. Trial bottles free at McCORD'S Drug Store.

Advance a Step.

If you have been in the habit of taking pills for your constipation and with poor results, just try a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you will be surprised at the results. Very pleasant to take. 10 cents, 50 cents and $1. Sold and recommended by H. B. McCord.

The Road, Poll and Dog tax are included in first installment.

Taxes of 1899 are due the first day of January, 1900, and may be paid in full or in two installments. The first installment must be paid on or before the first Monday in May, 1900; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1900. If the first installment is not paid when due both installments become delinquent. Ten per cent will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of property.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty and charges on delinquent taxes resulting from any omission of the person paying to state definitely on what property, in whose name and in what township and corporation it was assessed.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once. The law is of such a character that there is no option left to the Treasurer but to enforce the collection of delinquent taxes, however much he may regret to collect the same by sale of property.

"The owner of property on the first day of April of each year shall be liable for the taxes of that year. The purchaser of property on the first day of April shall be considered the owner on that day."

Examine your receipts before leaving the office and see that all your property is included.

No county order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of land and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday in February, 1900.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days. We have 6,000 receipts to make, and all cannot be made in the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the first Monday in May and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipts will be made out for any party until they are ready to pay.

Assignees, guardians, administrators, and others who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as individual estates, etc., are earnestly requested to settle such taxes before the last few days as it requires considerable time to make the divisions and separate receipts therefor. As the Treasurer cannot know the location of each person's property, taxpayers should designate the property on which they wish to pay taxes and see that all property is specified on their receipts. If they have land in more than one township or town, or desire to pay taxes on lands not in their name, call the Treasurer's attention to the matter.

Consumption Threatened.

C. Unger, 212 Maple St., Champaign, Ill., writes: "I was troubled with a hacking cough for a year and I thought I had the consumption. I tried a great many remedies and was under the care of physicians for several months. I used one bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar and it cured me, and I have not been troubled since.

—If you find "Fox"—On the crackers you buy, you may rest assured you have the best that can be had. Try them and the flavor will tell you the same.

HAVE YOU A COLD?

—If so, then instead of taking so much quinine take a pleasant and mild stomach and bowel remedy which will cleanse the system, and you will be surprised how quickly the cold will leave you. We sell Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for just this purpose. Try it. 10c, 50c and $1. For sale by H. B. McCORD.

Notice of Sale of Real Estate.

Have you considered

That in dealing with other tailors or retail merchants you are helping to pay an unncessary chain of profits?

Consider This Point

That in dealing with us on the direct-from-the-mill-to-the-wearer plan, you are relieved from helping to pay the burden of bad debts interest, rent and other expenses of all the middlemen standing betown you and the mannfacturer.

Can you be convinced

By a Little Practical Demonstration?

Assuming the Cost of a Yard of Goods to be -	$0 50
The Manufacturer Charges the Jobber a Profit of 10 per cent	05
	55
The Jobber Charges the Wholesaler a profit of 25 per cent	14
	69
The Wholesaler Charges the Retailer a Profit of 50 per cent	34
	1 03
The Retailer Charges the Wearer a Profit of from 40 to 65 per cent—say an average of 50 per cent - -	52
Making the Total Cost to You of a Yard of Goods -	$1 55

Figure this now for three and one-quarter yards of goods required in a suit, and consider that this compounding of profit is applied to trimmings, linings and making as well.

Do you Realize now

That in dealing with the manufacturers direct you can save at least one-half the price of your garments, and have them better fitting, more stylish and giving better wear and satisfaction than you could procure elsewhere at twice the price?

Don't You Think it is Worth Your While to Investigate Our Prices and Let Us Show You Our Samples.

It Costs You Nothing.

If you are in Want

Of a suit, or an overcoat, or a pair of pants, just send us a postal card and we will call on you at once. You cannot afford to overlook our fine line of samples.

Monday's Daily.

—"Midnight in Chinatown," Henry's opera house next Tuesday evening, January 16.

—E. N. Myers and J. E. Dilgard went onto the 1900 list today. And the list grows.

—J. M. Crider called Saturday and helped business by paying his subscription to 1900. Thanks.

—Dr. Swarts reports Judge Hartman is very much improved under his recent treatment. We are glad to hear it.

—There is but one Russ' Bleaching Blue. Three times within a year the courts have suppressed fraudulent imitations.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. W. McClellan after a three weeks visit with friends in the east have returned to their home in Auburn.

—Boys knee pant suits at a sacrifice. Ask to see those at $1, $1 50, $1.88, $2.15 and 22.40 a suit. They are genuine bargains. G. H. Yesbera.

—Chapped hands, cracked lips and roughness of the skin cured quickly by Banner Salve, most healing ointment in the world. H. B. McCord.

—Lost:—A lady's pocketbook with some money and a check and several tickets from Clay's store. Finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at this office.

—An examination will be held Wednesday evening for non-commissioned officers of the militia company, and it is hoped there will be a full attendance.

—Some more of our better suits have been marked down to $4, $6 and $8. We have sold a big number. Will you be one of the lucky buyers?—G. H. Yesbera.

—Nothing slow about John Groscop except his feet and they are not slow when it comes to bowling, as he set a mark Friday, of 215 at the alley, for the boys to shoot at.

—The Mormons may not care very much about Roberts, but they are seriously concerned at the possibility of a constitutional amendment aimed at their peculiar practice.

—Save doctors' bills by giving Foley's Honey and Tar to infants and children in time to prevent pneumonia or croup, which are fatal to so many thousands of babies. H. B. McCord, Druggist.

—The advocates of two new departments, one of commerce and the other mining, have about agreed to press for one department only, with two bureaus. Such a movement is likely to succeed.

—Claude Link went to Fort Wayne Saturday where he is taking a course of treatment from Dr. Buchman for stomach trouble. His friends here hope he will return home fully restored to health.

—A. I. Barns of Hesston, Ind., came down from Laporte Saturday for a visit in the editor's family, he being a brother. It is his first visit to Auburn, and we are pleased to note that our little city has made a favorable impression on him.

—"I strongly recommend Begg's Cherry Cough Syrup; it cured me of a throat and lung trouble of many years' standing."—Mrs. J. Bremen, Rifle, Colo. Cures coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, la grippe, pneumonia, whooping-cough, croup and consumption.

—The democrats of Wells county will hold a primary election on Saturday, January 30, to nominate a county ticket. This will be the first ticket in the state, and the voters will have plenty of time before election day to study the merits of the candidates.

—"I can highly recommend Begg's Hair Renewer as a pleasing restorative application for the hair and a sure cure for all scalp diseases." Mrs. J. Whertle, Omaha, Neb. A thoroughly reliable preparation; endorsed by thousands. It will not disappoint. For sale at H. B. McCord's.

—An exchange says the outlook at the present time is that the wheat crop for the coming season will be one of the poorest in the history of the wheat industry, according to the report of farmers throughout Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan. The Hessian fly is the cause of the condition.

—In the circuit court, Saturday, Samuel S. Clemens was granted a divorce from Jennie Clemens. The plaintiff was given the custody of the oldest child, a daughter, and the defendant that of the youngest, a boy of eighteen months. Moody & Rickel were attorneys for the plaintiff.

—A smooth-appearing and rather well dressed young man struck town last week and having, as he claimed, business to transact in the country, hired a horse and buggy of D. N. Myers He was out several days, returning each evening until Saturday when he failed to show up at the usual time. Sunday the rig came back in care of a colored employe of a Fort Wayne livery stable, where the stranger had left it Saturday night. He forgot to pay Mr. Myers for the rig but may do so later on.

—Clayton Kettering spent Sunday at the parental home east of Ashley, and while there himself and brother Charles had quite an interesting experience. They drove to Ashley Saturday evening and when ready to start home found that their horse and buggy were missing. Thinking the animal had broken loose and gone home they walked back to the farm but found no rig. Early Sunday morning they went back to Ashley and after telephoning to Sheriff Snyder at Angola to look for the outfit, which they supposed had been stolen, learned that the animal was standing in front of the Times office. The horse showed every evidence of hard driving and had evidently been on the road during the greater part of the night. It is not known who perpetrated the inhuman trick.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Ed Berry of St. Joe was in town yesterday on business.

—The case of Jones, Witter & Co., a wholesale firm of Columbus, O., vs. Lettie Austin and Callie Brenner, of Ashley is on trial before the p tit jury this afternoon. The case is one brought on account for groceries. E. A. Bratton of Angola is filling Judge Hartman's place on the bench.

—Prof. M. H. Kasper, Evangelical Lutheran Seminary, Addison, Ill., writes:—I had been suffering for some time with severe pains in my lungs, and coughed almost constantly. One bottle Beggs' Cherry Syrup entirely cured me." It is guaranteed to cure, has never failed.—H. B. McCord.

—John Ketel is unusually kept busy looking after his Auburn ice trade, but this morning he turned himself into an amateur fire department. In his hurry to make a delivery John put his lighted pipe into his overcoat pocket, and soon afterward was notified that the garment was on fire. The overcoat will be made to last him through this season, but one pocket will be rather shy.

—A mortgage for $15,000 has been filed in the office of the county recorder covering the plant of the Butler Canning Co. The Mortgagees are Knisely, Boots & Co. and other heavy stockholders in the company and the smaller stockholders, including the farmers who are creditors for vegetables furnished, will probably get the short end of the deal. Curtis is still missing and it is said there is no clue to his present whereabouts.

OBITUARY.

Wm. Henry Rohm was born in Grant township, DeKalb county, Ind., May 3, 1873, and died in Smithfield township, Jan. 2, 1900, aged 26 years, 7 months and 29 days. He was the son of Henry C. and Mary Ann Rohm, and the first to depart this life from out the family. He had always resided in DeKalb county. He was married to Miss Lillian Lenora Barr, Jan. 15, 1893. Three little ones, Lawrence Earle, Helen Aileen and Marion Leonard, came to fill his life with hope and to spur him on with a father's desire to provide well, and make a home for them. His marital relations were sweet and soulful, kind and considerate to his dear young wife, with a manly ambition to succeed in life. He was the embodiment of industry and careful economy to an extent which attracted the attention of the neighbors, and excited the admiration and hope of his father.

His untimely end came as a shock, crushing and bitter. He leaves a young wife and three small children to mourn with the father and mother, two brothers and three sisters. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. O. Butler, at the U. B. church, assisted by Rev. C. E. Moorman, and the interment was made in the Waterloo cemetery.

To our many friends and neighbors who so nobly assisted us in our recent bereavement, we desire to return our sincere thanks, with the hope that they may be long spared from a like sorrow.

Mrs. Wm. Rohm,
Father and Mother.

ENGAGEMENT BROKEN OFF.

A girl in Montgomery broke her engagement with one of the wealthiest young men in the county, because he had indigestion so bad he was a menace to her happiness and no good to himself. What a relief just one bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin would have been to that man, and what a boon it is today to many a household, where it keeps all the family in a state of health that warrants true love, confidence and happiness in the home. Try it yourself. At H. B. McCord's.

Kept New Years.

A most enjoyable New Years dinner was held last Monday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel Neidig. Those present were: Mr. Henry Rush and family, Martin Stahl and family, Mr. Paul Kessler, wife and two children, Ella and Dan, Mrs. Ella Stahl and three children, Joe, Alice and Louis, and the Misses Cora and Emma Hostetler of North Liberty, Ind.

A PROMINENT LAWYER.

Of Greenville, Ill., Mr. C. E. Cook, writes- "I have been troubled with billiousness, sick headache, sour stomach, constipation, etc., for several years I sought long and tried many remedies, but was disappointed until I tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I can cheerfully recommend it to any suffering from above complaints." H. B. McCord.

Picked up in Passing.

A dispatch from Capetown says the master and all the officers of the Masonic lodge at Durban, have been killed in action, consequently the regalia, charter, etc., could not be retained, as there was none who could be held responsible by the craft. This is considered something very unusual in the history of Masonry.

The man who prophesied twenty-seven snows for this winter, says thirteen of them have fallen, consequently we shall only have to sweep our walks fourteen times more.

Up to last Saturday the people of Fort Wayne had not subscribed anything to the fund being raised for the benefit of Mrs. Gen. Lawton. At that time they began to hustle, and a handsome sum will be sent to Washington.

The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway company has issued an order that all locomotive firemen hired in the future must not be more than twenty-five years old and must weigh at least 160 pounds. This step has been taken because the giant engines now in use on the road demand strong men.

TEN CENTS WORTH OF PREVENTION

If you are subject to colds, the very best thing you can do is to keep your system in as open and perfect condition as possible. If you do this you are much less liable to take cold. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is as pleasant to take as pure maple syrup and is the most effective stomach remedy to be had. Trial sizes, 10c (10 doses 10 cents); large sizes, 50c and $1. At H. B. McCord's.

Change of Firm.

Having purchased the undertaking business of C. C. Shaffer and put in a full line of undertaking goods with a new funeral car we will make our establishment first-class. We ask a share of your patronage. Our location is in second room west of the corner in the Sheets building south of jail.

Weight & Cutler.

To Cure a Cough.

Stop coughing, as it irritates the lungs, and doesn't give them any chance to heal. Foley's Honey and Tar cures without causing a strain in throwing off the phlegm like common cough expectorants. H. B. McCord, Druggist.

BUTLER.

Henry Aldrich is reported on the mend, and hopes are now entertained for his recovery.

Grant Good has moved to town.

Some gypsies are camped near Butler, and seem to enjoy the winter as well as we do who are comfortably housed.

Rev. McLove is conducting a revival at the U. B. church with varied success.

Merchants complain of dull times since the holidays.

Thos. Rudd has been elected superintendent of the M. E. Sunday school, instead of Mrs. John Brown, whose term of office had expired.

A young man by the name of Seeman, living three miles east of Butler, died suddenly last Friday. He was well in the morning; took something like neuralgia of the stomach and died in a few hours. His funeral took place from the Lutheran church last Sunday.

The Curtis sensation has been the leading topic of conversation for the past week or more. Conviction seems to have settled down to the fact that he drew the company's money, and left for parts unkown. The wonder is that he did not take more. The company will not be seriously embarrassed, but will perhaps proceed with their business as heretofore. The mistake was one of over-confidence and a lack of ordinary prudence in trusting a man with little if any means with the handling of large sums of money without bonds or surety of any kind. He may turn up and make all things right, but still little hopes are left the small army of creditors. The loss falls hardest on the producers, many of whom are poor and depended on the January payment to carry them through the winter. Their being members of the company will perhaps compel them to lose all.

After having spent ten years suffering, the doctors finally confessed they were unable to cure me or do me any good. I moved to Texas in search of health, but found it not. One day, while suffering intensely, a lady brought me a bottle of Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier and insisted that I take it. Without faith, I began to take the medicine, and to my glad surprise I found, before I had taken one-half of a 50c bottle, I began to improve. After taking four or five bottles I became well —Lula Berry.

Special Notice

Office of County Auditor,
Auburn, Ind., Jan. 4, 1900.

There will be a special meeting of the County Council at the Commissioners Room, Auburn, DeKalb Co., Ind., Jan. 18, at 10:00 o'clock a. m.

Frank P. Seiler, Auditor.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

GOVERNMENT BANKING.

It has been an expressed desire on the part of the Republican party to "take the government out of the banking business," but what would Wall street do without the aid of the Secretary of the Treasury to "ease" things? Not long ago the Secretary advanced $25,000,000 of interest to help the Wall street gamblers over a bad piece of road and now it is alleged that he will come to the aid of the street with a bond purchase of $25,000,000 and deposits of government money in national banks to the amount of $50,000,000.

If this government were out of the banking business what would poor Wall street do? In viewing this phase of government financiering, the New York Journal says: "The Treasury Department believes that by increasing government deposits in the banks, and permitting the banks to use the money as they may see fit, much of the present trouble will be obviated. In other words, it is the idea of Secretary Gage (himself an experienced banker and financially interested in a bank which has business relations with the Rockefellers) that by giving the banks control of enough money to ease the market the financial 'situation' will be all that can be asked. But if the banks may use government money to ease the market, may they not handle the same money to tighten it at pleasure? Will not the rule work both ways, or are we to trust the bankers for its honest operation? Under the financial scheme carried out by the government will not a banking trust be able to take the people by the throat on the 'stand and deliver' principle? Secretary Gage is the conservator of the people's financial interests. To him we look for a legitimate and equitable circulation of legal tender. His scheme may be a fine one. We hope it may be. But the gradual and constant drift of government finances into the hands of the bankers is not a pleasant thing to contemplate. Again we call attention to the similarity between this policy and that of pouring water down a rathole."

Perhaps the everyday, honest, industrious, conservative business men may be prompted to inquire why the government should aid Wall street gamblers, and yet find no way to aid men engaged in legitimate enterprises. It is easy enough to find an answer to this question. Panics are made on Wall street. A great panic would defeat McKinley's ambition to be re-elected President, therefore a panic must be prevented at any cost and Wall street must be "eased."

Tariffs and New Possessions.

The New York Press resumes the tariff discussion under the most disheartening circumstances. Everybody had forgotten about the tariff. Our manufacturers having demonstrated to their own satisfaction and profit that they can ship their goods across the ocean and undersell European manufacturers in their own markets, it was thought that nothing else was necessary to convince them that a tariff is not necessary to protect them from competition. But the Republican press is angry at the Republican President because he recommended the adoption of free trade with Porto Rico, which is a part of our possessions, and reduced schedules with Cuba; and its editor declares that "if a debate is started in Congress embodying the Porto Rican free trade or Cuban tariff reduction recommendations, it can be made the most dangerous issue the party has had to face in a decade."

What nonsense! The Cuban tariff reduction is a thing apart, but it is not necessary for any bill to be introduced to bring about free trade with Porto Rico. All that is necessary to produce that result is for Congress, by legislation, to recognize the fact that Porto Rico is a part of the United States. This recognition need not be of a declaratory character. The moment Congress legislates a form of government for Porto Rico, that moment the tariff now existing ceases to affect that island. Under the constitution there can be no tariff or trade discriminations between the States, Territories and possessions of this government. No tariff or anti-tariff legislation is necessary to carry out this policy of government, which is fundamental, being provided for in the organic law.

As the Washington Post remarks, we are bound, now that we have deprived Porto Rico of her trade with Spain, to give the island a fair chance to thrive and prosper as the result of its connection with this republic. We cannot exercise dominion over the island and at the same time treat its people as foreigners.

A Belated Zeal.

We are told in the dispatches from Washington that the President, aided by his ever-faithful Grosvenor, has determined to make an example of the Republican officeholders in Utah who are charged with practicing polygamy. This is right. But why were these officials appointed? Is their polygamy only reprehensible now because it has been brought into public view by the developments in the Roberts case? Mr. McKinley should have inquired into the moral turpitude of these appointees a good while ago. He should not have waited until American public opinion aroused the sacredness of the American home and the Christianity of the institution of marriage, implied in places of public trust and honor. His failure to make inquiry into the morality of Federal appointees in Utah earlier is culpable. The culpability of his conduct is not removed by his present efforts to oust the polygamous officials. His zeal under the circumstances has more the appearance of playing politics than of responding to a quickened conscience.—Kansas City Times.

Five Men Control Grain Prices.

Testimony taken for the Congressional industrial commission in Chicago clearly establishes the fact that five men have been meeting and still meet in Chicago every morning and decide what the farmer shall be paid for his grain; that their purpose is to maintain the profits of transporters and dealers in grain, no matter how low market prices may go; that as these men represent and control all of the means by which grain it sent from the farm to the market their decision has been and is final. And still Mark Hanna says "there are no trusts in the country."—Los Angeles Herald.

Gold Standard.

There is much rejoicing in Republican circles over the passing of the currency bill by the House, but the measure must now go to the Senate and will suffer many changes. The bill as it now stands cannot pass the Senate and when it is amended may be rejected by the House.

William J. Bryan in a letter to the New York Journal sets forth his opposition to the House bill in plain and logical words. He points to the fact that in 1896 the Republican party declared for international bimetallism, but now the mask is torn off and brazenly adopt the Wall street gold policy without qualification.

As a matter of fact, in 1896 nine-tenths of the Republican party favored bimetallism. The Democratic party stood on the same ground. There was no difference in the object sought and the only contention was as to the method of securing it. According to the Republican platform, the followers of McKinley wished to secure the double standard through international action, while the Democrats favored independent action.

But the House bill settles the question regardless of future contingencies and fastens the yoke of gold on the necks of the people. Already a gold panic has swept over Wall street. The Senate should go slow with the gold bill. The supply of gold from South Africa has been cut off. The war in the Transvaal has caused England to become a purchaser of gold and before long there will be a currency famine which will end in tremendous panic if the single gold standard is adopted.

Growth of Government by Injunction.

With a miners' union leader jailed in Kansas for making a public speech in alleged violation of an injunction, with five strikers in jail in Chicago for violating an injunction by committing breach of the peace, and with the typographical union of New York tied up in their Sun strike with another injunction, government by injunction may be regarded as a chancery plant of vigorous growth, says the Public. Let it grow but a little more, and judicial proceedings may be greatly simplified. Justices of the peace, grand juries and petit juries in criminal cases, and even penal laws, can then be abolished. A blanket injunction forbidding everybody's doing anything the judge thinks improper will answer every purpose. Offenders can then be punished summarily for contempt of court. This may sound extravagant, but it is not. Many people would be astounded to realize how far in this direction government by injunction has already gone. By gradual encroachment it has knocked all the older precedents "into a cocked hat," and invested judges with power to punish for crime without the intervention of juries. Nor to punish for crime only, but to prescribe the crime to be punished. In the Kansas case the crime consisted in making a public speech in a private hall, hired for the purpose from its lawful owner, and in which speech the judge himself concedes that no disorderly words were uttered or lawless suggestion made.

Rockefeller's Method.

It is said that the Standard Oil trust with the sacrosanct Rockefeller as chief conspirator, crippled and came near wrecking the Globe National Bank of Boston in order to buy at a sacrifice the copper shares which it held. This is Rockefeller's method. He acts on the theory that all his robberies will be justified if he only contributes a part of the loot to some church or college.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Distinctive Difference.

Temporarily pausing in his work of mixing lyddite and molding dumdum bullets, John Bull makes a few remarks about the horrors of ambushing. John Bull insists on having his definitions accepted the world over. When he is led into a trap it is "ambushing." When he leads the enemy into a trap it is "strategy." We hope our exchanges will bear these definitions in mind.—Omaha World-Herald.

Vital Questions.

No one disputes the fact that President McKinley made a good selection of a military governor of Cuba, but the question will obtrude itself—why any governor there by appointment of McKinley? Why not redeem the pledge of this nation that Cuba should be free and independent and elect her own governor? These are vital questions that must soon be answered.—Toledo Commercial.

Mark Knows His Business.

There is little wonder Mr. Hanna didn't favor the Payne resolution. A man whose idea of good government and honorable politics is expressed in the appointment of a disreputable negro roustabout to a fat Federal office in New Orleans in return for delegates delivered, is not apt to sympathize with a reform that would abolish such profitable trades.—Chicago Journal.

Otis' War Editorials.

Fact that Can't Be Concealed.

Our Filipino war news now reports that "20 per cent." of So-and-So's command was lost. This is the proper commercial language of "expansion," but it does not hide the fact that a lot of brave boys are never coming home.—New York World.

Swapping Telephones.

The following story comes from the Grand Rapids Press, and has to do with a man and a woman who are employed in different offices in one of the large buildings of that city. Each office has a telephone, but as it happens one is an instrument belonging to the Citizens' Company, the other a Bell instrument.

One day the man had occasion to use the Citizens' line, and stepped across the hall to the lady's office.

"Have you a Citizens' 'phone?" he asked, and she replied in the affirmative.

"Well," he ventured, "I'm a citizen. May I use it?"

Why, of course he might use it; but inwardly she was inclined to envy his ability to stand up and assert his citizenship in this way, for some of her womanly propensities were of the "newish" sort. An hour later she balanced accounts with him.

"Have you a Bell telephone?" she asked, on stepping into his office. He did not try to deny it.

"Well, I'm a belle; may I use it?"

WOMEN

PHYSICAL AND MENTAL MISERY.

OUR American women are proverbially overworked. Many of them are of a slender, fragile build, not able to perform the herculean tasks demanded of them. Oftentimes it is the task of fabled Sisyphus, ever repeating a tedious routine; that is, rolling the never-ceasing stone. It makes one's heart ache, says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion, to think of all the rough work they do—work that sometimes their husbands know nothing about and think nothing about—tasks that are often done by the light of the lamp whose blaze is fed by the midnight oil. And this work is kept up until at last the tired nerves give way or a cough comes on, a sensible decline begins, the housewife falls down prematurely, and a husband is left wifeless and a family without a mother.

Somebody is at fault for all this, but who shall we blame? Life demands so much; society demands so much; your own ambition and pride and your husband's welfare and success are exacting constant surrenders of time and strength. No woman can afford to sacrifice her health and welfare of her higher nature at any price. Work thus becomes a Moloch; but why not refuse the terrible offering of life and blood and strength it claims? Take time to rest. Recreate, read, attend the quarterly meetings. A human life, a soul's happiness, is worth more than a few paltry dollars, the pleasures of outshining your neighbors, having a better house or better-dressed children. Tired, nervous, overtaxed wives, drop that work now and run out and breathe the fresh air of the fields. You will be the better for it, the children will be the better for it, and the work will not be the worse. An hour's ramble or rest, listening to the singing of the birds, the whirr of insects, watching the shadows play with the sunshine, and drinking in the reviving freshness of the balmy winds is cheaper than a doctor's call.

Nellie Bly in Business.

Nellie Bly—Mrs. Cornelia Cochrane Seaman in private life—has taken active management of her husband's large business, the Ironclad Manufacturing Company of Cliff street, and is putting new life and vigor into the concern, which for many years has been a big money maker. Every one remembers Nellie Bly, the newspaper writer, who traveled around the world in sixty days and did various other unusual things in order to write stories about her experiences. She is a brilliant little woman without fear and without reproach. Mr. Seaman, her husband, is an old man and rich. Her company has for years done a business of at least a million a year. The results of Mrs. Seaman's management are already apparent. The business has taken a spurt.

Women Who Work.

At the present time half of the adult women of England are self-supporting, and, as the same state of affairs is pretty general in other countries, it follows that women are all the world over trying to evolve new ideas by which to earn a living or to supplement their very scanty income.

A Frenchwoman who is endowed with artistic taste found herself with more time on her hands than she knew what to do with.

All of her friends envied her taste in the arrangement of her own home, and one day one of them begged her to take her house in hand and rearrange the furniture, for, though she had plenty of pretty things, everything looked so stiff that the effect was anything but pleasing.

So successful was this little Frenchwoman in her friend's house that she thought she might do well if she utilized her talent for strangers as a means of earning a little money. Accordingly she advertised to do dusting and artistic arrangement by the hour.

Her advertisement brought several answers, and soon she had various clients, who again recommended her to their friends, till now she has her time fully and remuneratively occupied.—Boston Traveler.

No Cloth on the Table.

For luncheon parties it is no longer correct to spread a tablecloth over the entire table, but before each guest a dainty open-worked serviette is spread, like a miniature tablecloth, and the polished mahogany or walnut table makes a good background for the snowy linen, says the London Telegraph. These serviettes vie with each other in the elaboration of their designs. Making the handsome borders in drawn-thread work, both for serviette and afternoon tablecloths, is one of the prettiest and most fashionable forms of fancy work just now.

Talk Business Only.

"Never allow yourself to accept a personal favor of any sort from a business acquaintance," said one of the kings of the financial world to a young woman just entering upon a business career. "You cannot tell when it may seem an obstacle in the way of independent action.

"Be courteous and affable with clients always, but limit your conversation in so far as possible to the definite business in hand, reserving the discussion of all outside matters to the domain of your social life."—Cincinnati Tribune.

Beautifying the Complexion.

A good complexion can be guaranteed to any girl who will wash her face properly at least twice a day. To do this the water must not be quite cold and the soap must be absolutely pure, for soap must be used, though once a day, preferably at night, will be sufficient. Discard all wash gloves, wash cloths and complexion brushes, and instead employ the fingers to rub and pinch every portion of the face, especially about the eyes, mouth and nose; use plenty of soap and water and be careful in rinsing the face to get every particle of soap off; accomplish this successfully and more than half your work is done; then be quite thorough with the drying process. When the face is thoroughly dry wipe it off with a soft silk handkerchief; if it has the least tendency to shine this last process will do away with it entirely.—Ellen Tenor in American Queen.

Miss Crocker Worth $4,000,000.

Miss Mary Crocker is at present one of the most talked-about young women in this country. A short time since she was at school in Paris. Recently she has assumed the control of $4,000,000 "in cash," so to speak, which she can spend in a day if she so desires, and coast reports have her as very lavish in her habits, never wearing the same pair of gloves twice, has a different set of jewels for every day in the week. Her hosiery is imported and comes in great bales.

MISS CROCKER.

Helping Others.

Some days ago these words were quoted by a practical progressive man: "Never morning wore to evening but some heart did break." Looking over the great wide world, journeying over countries old and new, the truth of these words comes to you with keenest force. In every home, in every city or town, in every country, some trouble is to be found. Many times it is carefully concealed, many times it is so terrible that it cannot be hidden, and what are we doing to alleviate this misery? The holidays are near at hand, and far and wide the joy bells will ring out their glad hosannas, but let us try to make every one appreciate their music and not feel that to them it is only a mockery. Do something to make life pleasant and hopeful for someone, and in just such measure shall your own life blossom into the beautiful flowers of hope and content.

About Baby.

Some mothers never seem to think it necessary to dress their babies any warmer in December than in August. Poor little blue things, no wonder they are cross and colicky, arrayed in the same amount of clothing that they wore the hottest day last summer, with the bleak winds of winter howling around. Remember, they are very sensitive to changes in the weather, says a writer in the Ladies' World. The proper way would be to have some cute little flannelette wrappers to slip on over dresses. Inspect their feet often and "toast" them by the fire, and keep their hands warm. A warm baby is almost sure to be a fat and good-natured one. It is utterly impossible for babies to thrive and be happy when they are chilly all the time. We all know how unpleasant that feeling is; so keep the baby warm.

Engaging Manners.

There are a thousand pretty, engaging little ways which every person may put on without running the risk of being deemed either affected or foppish. The sweet smile, the quiet, cordial bow, the earnest movement in addressing a friend, the inquiring glance, the graceful attention, which is so captivating when united with self-possession—these will insure us the good regards of even a churl. Above all, there is a certain softness of manner which should be cultivated, and which, in either man or woman, adds a charm that almost entirely compensates for lack of beauty, and inestimably enhances the latter, if it does exist.

New Field for Women.

Cleveland has a young woman druggist who is a pioneer in a field which she believes is a splendid one for women. There are plenty of women doctors and lawyers, but women druggists are scarce. Miss Carroll graduated from a school of pharmacy three years ago, and took the State examinations. She is a member of the Ohio Pharmaceutical Association.

THE OLDEST OF RELIGIONS.

The Sabbateans of Salonica and Their Peculiar Belief.

Surely one of the oldest religions in the world is that of the Sabbateans of Salonica, of whom M. Danon has lately made a special study, says Pall Mall Gazette. The sect takes its name from one Sabbatai Cevi, a Smyrniote Jew, who flourished in the middle of the seventeenth century, and so muddled himself by constant study of the Cabala that he gave himself out for the Messiah. Thanks to some miracles, thousands of Jews flocked to his standard and a serious revolt was on the point of breaking out when the pasha of the district captured him and offered him the choice between accepting Islam and being incontinently shot. The story is that he chose the former alternative and that his followers, disgusted with his apostasy, abandoned their belief in his Messiahship and returned to their former faith.

M. Danon's researches, however, show that the sect is not extinct, as has been thought. He had much difficulty in getting the information, and it was only the lucky accident of one of the faithful sending his waistcoat to be mended, without remembering that a sort of prayer book was stitched in the back, that threw any real light in his way. As it was, the tailor had just time to show the document to a friend, who took a copy now in M. Danon's possession. From this, it seems that the Deunmeh (or converted) as they are called by the Turks, still worship the God of Abraham under his cabalistic name of infinite and acknowledge as their "lord and king" Sabbatai Cevi, whom they call "the true Messiah" and their redeemer. They are not to take false oaths in the name of God or his Messiah, are not to murder, "even though they hate any one," to bear false witness, nor to covet other people's goods. But they are to keep their faith a profound secret, and to live like Mussulmans, keeping the Moslem fasts and observing all their ceremonies without any scruple until the day when they are to "take vengeance for Israel," after which they will become angels.

The mixture of gross and life-long hypocrisy with the practice of real virtues—it is especially said that there are no poor among them, every member of the community being willing to help at any time any of the others—is very typical of these apocalyptic sects. And in this faith more than a thousand families in Salonica believe.

PRIVATE MAIL BOXES.

A New and Convenient Idea of the Postoffice Department.

The Postoffice Department has ordered that in all cities and towns having free delivery the postal system shall be extended to include house-to-house collections, and the system is also extended to all rural free delivery routes. One of the requirements, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, which the citizen must observe is to supply his own mail box. Postmasters are instructed to give information about the boxes and encourage householders to put them up.

The Government has made special recommendation of a certain kind of mail box represented in the accompanying cut. This box is a unique contrivance fitted with automatic signal flags so that the passing carrier can see at a glance if there is any mail deposited in it for him to collect. It is also a receptacle for delivered mail, and a different colored flag apprises the householder when the carrier leaves any mail in the box. One of the flags is white and the other red. The box is to be affixed to a post near the street convenient for the carrier.

RECOMMENDED BY UNCLE SAM.

It is fitted with perfect locks, and when the carrier drops mail into the box the white flag immediately comes up, which indicates that there is mail for the people at the house. Dropping a letter to be mailed into the box raises the red flag, which is the signal to the passing carrier. It is large enough for the largest-sized letters and has separate spaces for papers and packages. It is the intention of the Postoffice Department to introduce the house-to-house collection system as soon as possible.

HOW HE GOT HIS CLOCK.

Saved a Man's Life Who Was Dying of Quinsy.

In the hallway of a Philadelphia doctor's house stands a fine example of a grandfather's clock, the possession of which the medical man owes entirely to a pinch of snuff, says the Philadelphia Record. Some years ago the doctor in question set his heart upon such a timepiece, and devoted two of his vacations to clock-hunting. He visited many New England farmhouses without success, as old furniture has been pretty well gathered up by the dealers "down east," and then carried his quest into Delaware and Maryland, where he found many old clocks, but none of them for sale.

He was about to return home disconsolate when he was called into consultation over a patient dying of quinsy. The resources of medicine had been exhausted, when the Quaker city doctor bethought himself of an old snuffbox he had picked up during his wanderings, in which still lingered a modicum of snuff, pungent as of yore. With this powerful tobacco the doctor assailed the nostrils of the sick man, who, sneezing violently, broke the abscess in his throat that was choking him to death. Stimulants were administered and the sick man recovered.

The Philadelphia doctor left the place the morning after this remarkable operation, but he had not been home a week before the grateful Marylander sent him a grandfather's clock, accompanied by a card, upon which was written: "This clock, which struck the hour of my birth, would have also marked the hour of my death if your skill and knowledge had not stayed the hand of the destroyer."

POLITICS OF THE DAY

GOVERNMENT BANKING.

It has been an expressed desire on the part of the Republican party to "take the government out of the banking business," but what would Wall street do without the aid of the Secretary of the Treasury to "ease" things? Not long ago the Secretary advanced $25,000,000 of interest to help the Wall street gamblers over a bad piece of road and now it is alleged that he will come to the aid of the street with a bond purchase of $25,000,000 and deposits of government money in national banks to the amount of $50,000,000.

If this government were out of the banking business what would poor Wall street do? In viewing this phase of government financiering, the New York Journal says: "The Treasury Department believes that by increasing government deposits in the banks, and permitting the banks to use the money as they may see fit, much of the present trouble will be obviated. In other words, it is the idea of Secretary Gage (himself an experienced banker and financially interested in a bank which has business relations with the Rockefellers) that by giving the banks control of enough money to ease the market the financial 'situation' will be all that can be asked. But if the banks may use government money to ease the market, may they not handle the same money to tighten it at pleasure? Will not the rule work both ways, or are we to trust the bankers for its honest operation? Under the financial scheme carried out by the government will not a banking trust be able to take the people by the throat on the 'stand and deliver' principle? Secretary Gage is the conservator of the people's financial interests. To him we look for a legitimate and equitable circulation of legal tender. His scheme may be a fine one. We hope it may be. But the gradual and constant drift of government finances into the hands of the bankers is not a pleasant thing to contemplate. Again we call attention to the similarity between this policy and that of pouring water down a rathole."

Perhaps the everyday, honest, industrious, conservative business men may be prompted to inquire why the government should aid Wall street gamblers, and yet find no way to aid men engaged in legitimate enterprises. It is easy enough to find an answer to this question. Panics are made on Wall street. A great panic would defeat McKinley's ambition to be re-elected President, therefore a panic must be prevented at any cost and Wall street must be "eased."

Tariffs and New Possessions.

The New York Press resumes the tariff discussion under the most disheartening circumstances. Everybody had forgotten about the tariff. Our manufacturers having demonstrated to their own satisfaction and profit that they can ship their goods across the ocean and undersell European manufacturers in their own markets, it was thought that nothing else was necessary to convince them that a tariff is not necessary to protect them from competition. But the Republican press is angry at the Republican President because he recommended the adoption of free trade with Porto Rico, which is a part of our possessions, and reduced schedules with Cuba; and its editor declares that "if a debate is started in Congress embodying the Porto Rican free trade or Cuban tariff reduction recommendations, it can be made the most dangerous issue the party has had to face in a decade."

What nonsense! The Cuban tariff reduction is a thing apart, but it is not necessary for any bill to be introduced to bring about free trade with Porto Rico. All that is necessary to produce that result is for Congress, by legislation, to recognize the fact that Porto Rico is a part of the United States. This recognition need not be of a declaratory character. The moment Congress legislates a form of government for Porto Rico, that moment the tariff now existing ceases to affect that island. Under the constitution there can be no tariff or trade discriminations between the States, Territories and possessions of this government. No tariff or anti-tariff legislation is necessary to carry out this policy of government, which is fundamental, being provided for in the organic law.

As the Washington Post remarks, we are bound, now that we have deprived Porto Rico of her trade with Spain, to give the island a fair chance to thrive and prosper as the result of its connection with this republic. We cannot exercise dominion over the island and at the same time treat its people as foreigners.

A Belated Zeal.

We are told in the dispatches from Washington that the President, aided by his ever-faithful Grosvenor, has determined to make an example of the Republican officeholders in Utah who are charged with practicing polygamy. This is right. But why were these officials appointed? Is their polygamy only reprehensible now because it has been brought into public view by the developments in the Roberts case? Mr. McKinley should have inquired into the moral turpitude of these appointees a good while ago. He should not have waited until American public opinion aroused the sacredness of the American home and the Christianity of the institution of marriage, implied in places of public trust and honor. His failure to make inquiry into the morality of Federal appointees in Utah earlier is culpable. The culpability of his conduct is not removed by his present efforts to oust the polygamous officials. His zeal under the circumstances has more the appearance of playing politics than of responding to a quickened conscience.—Kansas City Times.

Five Men Control Grain Prices.

Testimony taken for the Congressional industrial commission in Chicago clearly establishes the fact that five men have been meeting and still meet in Chicago every morning and decide what the farmer shall be paid for his grain; that their purpose is to maintain the profits of transporters and dealers in grain, no matter how low market prices may go; that as these men represent and control all of the means by which grain it sent from the farm to the market their decision has been and is final. And still Mark Hanna says "there are no trusts in the country."—Los Angeles Herald.

Gold Standard.

There is much rejoicing in Republican circles over the passing of the currency bill by the House, but the measure must now go to the Senate and will suffer many changes. The bill as it now stands cannot pass the Senate and when it is amended may be rejected by the House.

William J. Bryan in a letter to the New York Journal sets forth his opposition to the House bill in plain and logical words. He points to the fact that in 1896 the Republican party declared for international bimetallism, but now the mask is torn off and brazenly adopt the Wall street gold policy without qualification.

As a matter of fact, in 1896 nine-tenths of the Republican party favored bimetallism. The Democratic party stood on the same ground. There was no difference in the object sought and the only contention was as to the method of securing it. According to the Republican platform, the followers of McKinley wished to secure the double standard through international action, while the Democrats favored independent action.

But the House bill settles the question regardless of future contingencies and fastens the yoke of gold on the necks of the people. Already a gold panic has swept over Wall street. The Senate should go slow with the gold bill. The supply of gold from South Africa has been cut off. The war in the Transvaal has caused England to become a purchaser of gold and before long there will be a currency famine which will end in tremendous panic if the single gold standard is adopted.

Growth of Government by Injunction.

With a miners' union leader jailed in Kansas for making a public speech in alleged violation of an injunction, with five strikers in jail in Chicago for violating an injunction by committing breach of the peace, and with the typographical union of New York tied up in their Sun strike with another injunction, government by injunction may be regarded as a chancery plant of vigorous growth, says the Public. Let it grow but a little more, and judicial proceedings may be greatly simplified. Justices of the peace, grand juries and petit juries in criminal cases, and even penal laws, can then be abolished. A blanket injunction forbidding everybody's doing anything the judge thinks improper will answer every purpose. Offenders can then be punished summarily for contempt of court. This may sound extravagant, but it is not. Many people would be astounded to realize how far in this direction government by injunction has already gone. By gradual encroachment it has knocked all the older precedents "into a cocked hat," and invested judges with power to punish for crime without the intervention of juries. Nor to punish for crime only, but to prescribe the crime to be punished. In the Kansas case the crime consisted in making a public speech in a private hall, hired for the purpose from its lawful owner, and in which speech the judge himself concedes that no disorderly words were uttered or lawless suggestion made.

Rockefeller's Method.

It is said that the Standard Oil trust with the sacrosanct Rockefeller as chief conspirator, crippled and came near wrecking the Globe National Bank of Boston in order to buy at a sacrifice the copper shares which it held. This is Rockefeller's method. He acts on the theory that all his robberies will be justified if he only contributes a part of the loot to some church or college.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Distinctive Difference.

Temporarily pausing in his work of mixing lyddite and molding dumdum bullets, John Bull makes a few remarks about the horrors of ambushing. John Bull insists on having his definitions accepted the world over. When he is led into a trap it is "ambushing." When he leads the enemy into a trap it is "strategy." We hope our exchanges will bear these definitions in mind.—Omaha World-Herald.

Vital Questions.

No one disputes the fact that President McKinley made a good selection of a military governor of Cuba, but the question will obtrude itself—why any governor there by appointment of McKinley? Why not redeem the pledge of this nation that Cuba should be free and independent and elect her own governor? These are vital questions that must soon be answered.—Toledo Commercial.

Mark Knows His Business.

There is little wonder Mr. Hanna didn't favor the Payne resolution. A man whose idea of good government and honorable politics is expressed in the appointment of a disreputable negro roustabout to a fat Federal office in New Orleans in return for delegates delivered, is not apt to sympathize with a reform that would abolish such profitable trades.—Chicago Journal.

Otis' War Editorials.

Fact that Can't Be Concealed.

Swapping Telephones.

The following story comes from the Grand Rapids Press, and has to do with a man and a woman who are employed in different offices in one of the large buildings of that city. Each office has a telephone, but as it happens one is an instrument belonging to the Citizens' Company, the other a Bell instrument.

One day the man had occasion to use the Citizens' line, and stepped across the hall to the lady's office.

"Have you a Citizens' 'phone?" he asked, and she replied in the affirmative.

"Well," he ventured, "I'm a citizen. May I use it?"

Why, of course he might use it; but inwardly she was inclined to envy his ability to stand up and assert his citizenship in this way, for some of her womanly propensities were of the "newish" sort. An hour later she balanced accounts with him.

"Have you a Bell telephone?" she asked, on stepping into his office. He did not try to deny it.

"Well, I'm a belle; may I use it?"

WOMEN

PHYSICAL AND MENTAL MISERY.

OUR American women are proverbially overworked. Many of them are of a slender, fragile build, not able to perform the herculean tasks demanded of them. Oftentimes it is the task of fabled Sisyphus, ever repeating a tedious routine; that is, rolling the never-ceasing stone. It makes one's heart ache, says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion, to think of all the rough work they do—work that sometimes their husbands know nothing about and think nothing about—tasks that are often done by the light of the lamp whose blaze is fed by the midnight oil. And this work is kept up until at last the tired nerves give way or a cough comes on, a sensible decline begins, the housewife falls down prematurely, and a husband is left wifeless and a family without a mother.

Somebody is at fault for all this, but who shall we blame? Life demands so much; society demands so much; your own ambition and pride and your husband's welfare and success are exacting constant surrenders of time and strength. No woman can afford to sacrifice her health and welfare of her higher nature at any price. Work thus becomes a Moloch; but why not refuse the terrible offering of life and blood and strength it claims? Take time to rest. Recreate, read, attend the quarterly meetings. A human life, a soul's happiness, is worth more than a few paltry dollars, the pleasures of outshining your neighbors, having a better house or better-dressed children. Tired, nervous, overtaxed wives, drop that work now and run out and breathe the fresh air of the fields. You will be the better for it, the children will be the better for it, and the work will not be the worse. An hour's ramble or rest, listening to the singing of the birds, the whirr of insects, watching the shadows play with the sunshine, and drinking in the reviving freshness of the balmy winds is cheaper than a doctor's call.

Nellie Bly in Business.

Nellie Bly—Mrs. Cornelia Cochrane Seaman in private life—has taken active management of her husband's large business, the Ironclad Manufacturing Company of Cliff street, and is putting new life and vigor into the concern, which for many years has been a big money maker. Every one remembers Nellie Bly, the newspaper writer, who traveled around the world in sixty days and did various other unusual things in order to write stories about her experiences. She is a brilliant little woman without fear and without reproach. Mr. Seaman, her husband, is an old man and rich. Her company has for years done a business of at least a million a year. The results of Mrs. Seaman's management are already apparent. The business has taken a spurt.

Women Who Work.

At the present time half of the adult women of England are self-supporting, and, as the same state of affairs is pretty general in other countries, it follows that women are all the world over trying to evolve new ideas by which to earn a living or to supplement their very scanty income.

A Frenchwoman who is endowed with artistic taste found herself with more time on her hands than she knew what to do with.

All of her friends envied her taste in the arrangement of her own home, and one day one of them begged her to take her house in hand and rearrange the furniture, for, though she had plenty of pretty things, everything looked so stiff that the effect was anything but pleasing.

So successful was this little Frenchwoman in her friend's house that she thought she might do well if she utilized her talent for strangers as a means of earning a little money. Accordingly she advertised to do dusting and artistic arrangement by the hour.

Her advertisement brought several answers, and soon she had various clients, who again recommended her to their friends, till now she has her time fully and remuneratively occupied.—Boston Traveler.

No Cloth on the Table.

For luncheon parties it is no longer correct to spread a tablecloth over the entire table, but before each guest a dainty open-worked serviette is spread, like a miniature tablecloth, and the polished mahogany or walnut table makes a good background for the snowy linen, says the London Telegraph. These serviettes vie with each other in the elaboration of their designs. Making the handsome borders in drawn-thread work, both for serviette and afternoon tablecloths, is one of the prettiest and most fashionable forms of fancy work just now.

Talk Business Only.

"Never allow yourself to accept a personal favor of any sort from a business acquaintance," said one of the kings of the financial world to a young woman just entering upon a business career. "You cannot tell when it may seem an obstacle in the way of independent action.

"Be courteous and affable with clients always, but limit your conversation in so far as possible to the definite business in hand, reserving the discussion of all outside matters to the domain of your social life."—Cincinnati Tribune.

Beautifying the Complexion.

A good complexion can be guaranteed to any girl who will wash her face properly at least twice a day. To do this the water must not be quite cold and the soap must be absolutely pure, for soap must be used, though once a day, preferably at night, will be sufficient. Discard all wash gloves, wash cloths and complexion brushes, and instead employ the fingers to rub and pinch every portion of the face, especially about the eyes, mouth and nose; use plenty of soap and water and be careful in rinsing the face to get every particle of soap off; accomplish this successfully and more than half your work is done; then be quite thorough with the drying process. When the face is thoroughly dry wipe it off with a soft silk handkerchief; if it has the least tendency to shine this last process will do away with it entirely.—Ellen Trenor in American Queen.

Miss Crocker Worth $4,000,000.

Miss Mary Crocker is at present one of the most talked-about young women in this country. A short time since she was at school in Paris. Recently she has assumed the control of $4,000,000 "in cash," so to speak, which she can spend in a day if she so desires, and coast reports have her as very lavish in her habits, never wearing the same pair of gloves twice, has a different set of jewels for every day in the week. Her hosiery is imported and comes in great bales.

MISS CROCKER.

Helping Others.

Some days ago these words were quoted by a practical progressive man: "Never morning wore to evening but some heart did break." Looking over the great wide world, journeying over countries old and new, the truth of these words comes to you with keenest force. In every home, in every city or town, in every country, some trouble is to be found. Many times it is carefully concealed, many times it is so terrible that it cannot be hidden, and what are we doing to alleviate this misery? The holidays are near at hand, and far and wide the joy bells will ring out their glad hosannas, but let us try to make every one appreciate their music and not feel that to them it is only a mockery. Do something to make life pleasant and hopeful for someone, and in just such measure shall your own life blossom into the beautiful flowers of hope and content.

About Baby.

Some mothers never seem to think it necessary to dress their babies any warmer in December than in August. Poor little blue things, no wonder they are cross and colicky, arrayed in the same amount of clothing that they wore the hottest day last summer, with the bleak winds of winter howling around. Remember, they are very sensitive to changes in the weather, says a writer in the Ladies' World. The proper way would be to have some cute little flannelette wrappers to slip on over dresses. Inspect their feet often and "toast" them by the fire, and keep their hands warm. A warm baby is almost sure to be a fat and good-natured one. It is utterly impossible for babies to thrive and be happy when they are chilly all the time. We all know how unpleasant that feeling is; so keep the baby warm.

Engaging Manners.

There are a thousand pretty, engaging little ways which every person may put on without running the risk of being deemed either affected or foppish. The sweet smile, the quiet, cordial bow, the earnest movement in addressing a friend, the inquiring glance, the graceful attention, which is so captivating when united with self-possession—these will insure us the good regards of even a churl. Above all, there is a certain softness of manner which should be cultivated, and which, in either man or woman, adds a charm that almost entirely compensates for lack of beauty, and inestimably enhances the latter, if it does exist.

New Field for Women.

Cleveland has a young woman druggist who is a pioneer in a field which she believes is a splendid one for women. There are plenty of women doctors and lawyers, but women druggists are scarce. THE OLDEST OF RELIGIONS.

The Sabbateans of Salonica and Their Peculiar Belief.

Surely one of the oldest religions in the world is that of the Sabbateans of Salonica, of whom M. Danon has lately made a special study, says Pall Mall Gazette. The sect takes its name from one Sabbatai Cevi, a Smyrniote Jew, who flourished in the middle of the seventeenth century, and so muddled himself by constant study of the Cabala that he gave himself out for the Messiah. Thanks to some miracles, thousands of Jews flocked to his standard and a serious revolt was on the point of breaking out when the pasha of the district captured him and offered him the choice between accepting Islam and being incontinently shot. The story is that he chose the former alternative and that his followers, disgusted with his apostasy, abandoned their belief in his Messiahship and returned to their former faith.

M. Danon's researches, however, show that the sect is not extinct, as has been thought. He had much difficulty in getting the information, and it was only the lucky accident of one of the faithful sending his waistcoat to be mended, without remembering that a sort of prayer book was stitched in the back, that threw any real light in his way. As it was, the tailor had just time to show the document to a friend, who took a copy now in M. Danon's possession. From this, it seems that the Deunmeh (or converted) as they are called by the Turks, still worship the God of Abraham under his cabalistic name of infinite and acknowledge as their "lord and king" Sabbatai Cevi, whom they call "the true Messiah" and their redeemer. They are not to take false oaths in the name of God or his Messiah, are not to murder, "even though they hate any one," to bear false witness, nor to covet other people's goods. But they are to keep their faith a profound secret, and to live like Mussulmans, keeping the Moslem fasts and observing all their ceremonies without any scruple until the day when they are to "take vengeance for Israel," after which they will become angels.

The mixture of gross and life-long hypocrisy with the practice of real virtues—it is especially said that there are no poor among them, every member of the community being willing to help at any time any of the others—is very typical of these apocalyptic sects. And in this faith more than a thousand families in Salonica believe.

PRIVATE MAIL BOXES.

A New and Convenient Idea of the Postoffice Department.

The Postoffice Department has ordered that in all cities and towns having free delivery the postal system shall be extended to include house-to-house collections, and the system is also extended to all rural free delivery routes. One of the requirements, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, which the citizen must observe is to supply his own mail box. Postmasters are instructed to give information about the boxes and encourage householders to put them up.

The Government has made special recommendation of a certain kind of mail box represented in the accompanying cut. This box is a unique contrivance fitted with automatic signal flags so that the passing carrier can see at a glance if there is any mail deposited in it for him to collect. It is also a receptacle for delivered mail, and a different colored flag apprises the householder when the carrier leaves any mail in the box. One of the flags is white and the other red. The box is to be affixed to a post near the street convenient for the carrier.

RECOMMENDED BY UNCLE SAM.

It is fitted with perfect locks, and when the carrier drops mail into the box the white flag immediately comes up, which indicates that there is mail for the people at the house. Dropping a letter to be mailed into the box raises the red flag, which is the signal to the passing carrier. It is large enough for the largest-sized letters and has separate spaces for papers and packages. It is the intention of the Postoffice Department to introduce the house-to-house collection system as soon as possible.

HOW HE GOT HIS CLOCK.

Saved a Man's Life Who Was Dying of Quinsy.

In the hallway of a Philadelphia doctor's house stands a fine example of a grandfather's clock, the possession of which the medical man owes entirely to a pinch of snuff, says the Philadelphia Record. Some years ago the doctor in question set his heart upon such a timepiece, and devoted two of his vacations to clock-hunting. He visited many New England farmhouses without success, as old furniture has been pretty well gathered up by the dealers "down east," and then carried his quest into Delaware and Maryland, where he found many old clocks, but none of them for sale.

He was about to return home disconsolate when he was called into consultation over a patient dying of quinsy. The resources of medicine had been exhausted, when the Quaker city doctor bethought himself of an old snuffbox he had picked up during his wanderings, in which still lingered a modicum of snuff, pungent as of yore. With this powerful tobacco the doctor assailed the nostrils of the sick man, who, sneezing violently, broke the abscess in his throat that was choking him to death. Stimulants were administered and the sick man recovered.

The Philadelphia doctor left the place the morning after this remarkable operation, but he had not been home a week before the grateful Marylander sent him a grandfather's clock, accompanied by a card, upon which was written: "This clock, which struck the hour of my birth, would have also marked the hour of my death if your skill and knowledge had not stayed the hand of the destroyer."

I Use It

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a great many years and it has been very satisfactory to me in every way. I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and they have all been perfectly satisfied with it."
—Mrs. A. Edwards, San Francisco, Cal., Feb. 9, 1899.

Talk About It

That's always the way with our Hair Vigor. When persons use it they are always so highly pleased with it that they tell their friends about it.

If your hair is short, too thin, splits at the ends, is rough, or is falling out, our Hair Vigor will perfectly satisfy you.

If your hair is just a little gray, or perfectly white, Ayer's Hair Vigor will bring back to it all the dark, rich color it had years and years ago. $1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

Write the Doctor

If you do not obtain all the benefits you desire from the use of the Vigor, write the Doctor about it. He will tell you just the right thing to do, and will send you his book on the Hair and Scalp if you request it. Address,

Wabash Mexican Tour 1900.

On Feb. 14th, 1900, the Wabash Will run a personally conducted Special Tour to Old Mexico and return.

The Train will consist of elegant drawing room and compartment sleepers, observation and dining cars, built by the Pullman company especially for this service.

Arrangements are being made for a select party of fifty people and will positively not exceed that number. The tour will consume a period of thirty days, covering 7,000 miles. The dining car will be stocked with every delicacy and the drawing room and observation cars will afford the comforts of a model hotel. The whole tour costs about $10 a day.

Mexico can only be seen and appreciated by accompanying a party of this kind. Mr. R. G. Thompson, Special Passenger representative will manage this tour and is eminently fitted for the task owing to his numerous visits to Mexico.

Tallied One on the Bishop.

Bishop Huntington of Syracuse told this story on himself during one of his last visits to Washington. The good bishop, it seems, once went down to a town in Connecticut to perform a marriage ceremony. He arrived the day before the wedding, and he left at the same time the bridal pair did, although he was driven to a different railway station. As he passed through the station, carrying his traveling bag, he was aware that he was creating a sensation, but was totally at a loss to account for it. In the car he found that he was still the object of amused attention. The porter positively snickered as he passed his seat, and finally, just as the train drew out, he came up and assisted the churchman to remove his overcoat.

"What is the matter with you, my man?" asked the bishop. The porter's snicker broadened into a laugh.

"Ain't you done lef' the lady, sah?" he chuckled.

"Eh?" exclaimed the bishop in surprise. Then his eye fell on the side of his traveling bag which the porter had just turned round. There glued to it was a wide strip of white satin ribbon, on which was printed in large letters: "Married this morning."

The facetiously minded best man had mistaken the bishop's traveling bag for that of the bridegroom, and a chuckling black porter worked late into the night removing the ribbon.—Albany Journal.

Odd Book Marks.

The finding of a long-lost will between the pages of a neglected Bible was a favorite incident in old-fashioned novels. Nor are books yet antiquated as repositories.

At a Chicago library bookmarks found in returned volumes included an insurance policy, letters containing business secrets, signed love letters, grocers' bills, photographs, postal orders, matches, spectacles and false teeth.

Separate markers are a distinct advance over thumb prints or turned-down leaves; but like old stockings and stovepipes, books are not to be recommended as safety deposit vaults.

Electric Power Sent 83 Miles.

Southern California can justly claim to be the pioneer of commercial long-distance transmission of electric power. To-day the most notable transmission plant in existence is that of the Southern California Power company, designed to carry 10,000-horse power at 33,000 volts over eighty-three miles of line, from the power-house to the town of Los Angeles. The transmission wire is a little over a quarter of an inch in diameter.

Sold by all grocers.

Asylum for Infirm Beasts.

A Calcutta paper contains an account of the workhouse or asylum for infirm beasts and birds that was established some thirteen years ago by a society of influential Hindoos. It is near the Sodepur station, about ten miles from Calcutta, and is under the control of a manager, with a staff of eighty servants and an experienced veterinary sergeon.

MORMONISM IN CHICAGO.

Where the Second Largest Mormon Missionary Society Has Its Seat.

Chicago is the headquarters for the second largest Mormon missionary society in the world. As a proselyting center for the Mormon Church it ranks next to Salt Lake City. From Chicago the disciples of polygamy direct more extensive and thorough missionary operations than those carried on by any orthodox church society in the city. Two hundred and thirty Mormon elders of "The Northern States' Mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" receive their orders from an office at No. 143 Le Moyne street. Thirty of these elders are stationed in Chicago, and are distributing over a thousand tracts a day among the poorer classes and the foreign element of the city. They have three regularly organized churches, in which their doctrines are preached twice every Sunday. Forty thousand dollars a year is about the sum which the Mormon Church is paying out to extend its prestige in Chicago, and over a quarter of a million dollars to convert the people of the surrounding country. The eleven States in which Chicago's Mormon missionaries work are Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Indiana, Wisconsin, North Dakota and South Dakota and Kentucky.

MORMON LITERARY BUREAU.

The Mormon Church in Chicago was founded by Brigham H. Roberts. He saw that Chicago, with its heterogeneous elements, its foreign slum population of nearly 200,000, its liberal attitude toward apostles of all strange sects, and its central position, was by long odds the most available center from which the Mormon Church might carry on its proselyting operations. The story of his first visit to Chicago gives a curious insight into the workings of the church of the Latter Day Saints.

When Roberts first decided to enter national politics he did so without consulting the chief council of Mormon elders. He ran for Congress and was defeated by the votes of his own people. This was not from any dislike of Mr. Roberts himself or of his practices. The Mormon Council at Salt Lake City requires its elders to obtain permission of the church before taking an active part in politics. Roberts ignored the rule of the church, and all the ecclesiastical machinery of that body was set in motion against him. He was beaten by his own party, and after that was compelled to make an abject apology to the president and the council. They fixed his penance at a year's missionary work in the interest of Mormonism. He went to Chicago in the winter of '94 and '95 and preached for six months and founded the main Mormon Church.

Etiquette of Golf.

Here are some things which you will do well to remember when you go on to the golf links, either as a player or as an onlooker: Standing so that a shadow falls upon your partner's ball is not only impolite, but detrimental to th esuccess of his "drive." Standing on the putting green after you have "holed out," whether it is to gaze at the scenery or write down your score, will exasperate your best friend on earth if he or she happens to be playing behind you. To play first and to shout "Fore!" afterward is apt to add insult to actual injury. "Fore" is called as a warning that a "drive" is about to be made. It is not an expression of consolation after one has been hit. If you choose as a partner a woman who keeps you back by slow play, don't quarrel with her on this account. Abide by your choice and do what you can to help her to enjoy the game.

Unbreakable Mirrors.

Many people believe that all sorts of ill luck will follow them if they by chance happen to break a looking-glass. These superstitious folk may perhaps be glad to hear that unbreakable mirrors are now being made by putting a coat of quicksilver at the back of a very thin piece of celluloid.

Awful Depth.

The depth of the Atlantic between the Canary Islands and the West Indies is something awful. A pretty level bottom runs right away from the African islands to the American ones, gradually deepening to nearly 19,000 feet.

Scent of Lobsters.

Lobsters can smell as well as animals that live upon the land. A piece of decayed meat suspended in the water in the locality where lobsters are abundant will soon be surrounded by a greedy, fighting crowd.

Alcohol in Lemon Extract.

Lemon extract has become a favorite beverage with the Poncha Indians, owing to the quantity of alcohol which it contains, and it is said that they have been able to get roaring drunk on a fifty-cent bottle.

Hasty Inferences.

According to a recent book entitled "Orientations," there was once a rather obscure Englishman, who, after being converted, read his Bible so assiduously—in preference to a London newspaper—that his wife became concerned for his sanity, and he was subsequently examined by a specialist in lunacy, with a funny and pathetic result. The doctor's first questions were "feelers."

"I mean," said he, at length, slowly and very impressively, "do you see things that other people do not see?"

"Alas, yes!" was the patient's reply. "I see Folly stalking on a 'obby 'orse."

"Do you, really? Anything else?" asked the doctor, making a note of the fact.

"I see Wickedness and Vice beating the land with their wings."

"Sees things beating with their wings," wrote down the doctor.

"I see misery and un'appiness everywhere."

"Indeed!" said the doctor. "Has delusions. Do you think your wife puts things in your tea?"

"Yes."

"Ah!" thought the doctor. "That's what I wanted to get at—thinks people are trying to poison him. What is it they put in, my man?"

"Milk and sugar," answered the patient.

"Um!" said the specialist. Then he wrote, "Very dull mentally."

Derivation of the Word Sunday.

The word "Sabbath" is a Hebrew term for a period as well as quality of time, and means "rest." In the Bible it is used only with this meaning. Periods of one year or of seven years were thus characterized. Every seventh day was observed by the Hebrews as a weekly "Sabbath." In addition to this day others were appointed in which the obligation to cease from labor was as binding as the observance of the weekly "Sabbath." "Sunday" is so named from the day which was dedicated to the worship of the sun. Christian nations observed it as their "Sabbath;" but "Sabbath" is not "Sun-day."—Woman's Home Companion.

French Rage for Orders.

To the institution of orders, medals and diplomas in France there is no limit. The latest is diplomas for washerwomen. The washerwomen, to be sure, occupy a conspicuous position on the Seine and have played an important part in the life of Paris, especially in revolutionary periods. They are nearly as formidable as the market women. The government has established this new order and awarded twelve medals. The important duty of distributing the diplomas to the prize washerwomen is discharged by the ministry of commerce.

How the Lover Felt.

Extract from a lovestory in a popular magazine: "He had no sooner glued his eyes to hers, which were of a deep violet color, than his heart began to beat with rapidity. A choking sensation pervaded his entire being, and but for the presence of an armchair he would have fallen semiconscious at her feet. Rousing himself with an effort, he possessed himself of her hand and apprised her of his affection, to which she responded in excellent French."

Save Their Railroad Fare.

There was a man in town yesterday who told of a new scheme he has just worked to beat a railroad. "A friend and myself wanted to come from Omaha to Kansas City. He said to me: "You buy a ticket only to the first station and I will show you a good trick." I bought the ticket as requested, while my friend bought a ticket for the full distance at the regular fare. We took a seat together in the train. The conductor came around, took up the tickets, and put a punched train check in my friend's hat, indicating that he was ticketed through to Kansas City. When the conductor got out of sight my friend took his knife and split the card. He put half into my hat and the other into his own. Both 'splits' looked like a regular check, and I came right on through without paying any more fare. We divided the saving, which was more than $2 each."

A railroad man who heard the story said that it was as cleverly conceived a scheme to rob the railroads as the one which it is said a few traveling men used to practice in the days when 2-cent mileage books were more generally used than at present. That scheme was to go into the car early and run a string along under the seats. One man would sit in the forward end of the car with the mileage book. After the conductor had torn out the mileage he would tie the book to the string and his confederate a few seats back would draw it to himself under the seats. When the conductor got to him he would have the mileage book all right, and coupons for his passage would be torn therefrom by the unsuspecting conductor. The conspirators would save a cent a mile by this scheme.—Kansas City Times.

Holding to the Average.

"Your police force is a fine, well built lot of men."

"Yes, they don't very ten pounds either way from 170 pounds in weight."

"That's strange. Are they picked men?"

"No. This is the old force made over. The chief has a system. He put all the fat men on the long beats and the thin men on the short beats. Then he watched them closely and changed them about every time they varied either way from the average."

"And the lawbreakers? What about them?"

"Oh, they were affected too. Out in the suburbs where the fat men were they didn't dare to commit any depredations, because if the fat policemen chased them they would get thin, and thus be enabled to run 'em down next time. And on the downtown beats, the short beats, the thin policemen would overhaul them in no time. Oh, it's a beautiful system!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Appreciated the Play.

The following is from an essay written by a schoolboy, aged 10, on a play he had been to see: "The villun curled his mustarsh and seezing the pure vurgin shreeks ha ha mine or deaths blud is on my head this dagger stabs thee to thy utermost sole ha ha vanguze. But the good hero comes and says O hevins hevins stur won step and thy ded body lies at my door. Lay won palm on the vurgins korpse and it was better if you was drowned with a millstone. Avaunt avarnt from the sweet korpses presunz."

His Terms Were Accepted.

General Joubert, when he was in New York city a few years ago as the guest of Henry George, told with modesty of his negotiations with the British at Majuba hill and his eyes sparkled as he recited his reply to the British commander in chief. "It does not comport with these," said the British general, pointing to the decorations on his breast, "to accede to your terms." To which said Joubert, pointing to his riflemen: "And it does not comport with those to offer any others."

What Do the Children Drink?
Don't give them tea or coffee. Have you tried the new food drink called GRAIN-O? It is delicious and nourishing, and takes the place of coffee. U. S. SENATOR ROACH

Says Peruna, the Catarrh Cure, Gives Strength and Appetite.

Hon. W. N. Roach, United States Senator from North Dakota.

Hon. W. N. Roach, United States Senator from North Dakota, personally endorses Peruna, the great catarrh cure and tonic. In a recent letter to The Peruna Medical Company, at Columbus, Ohio, written from Washington, D. C., Senator Roach says:

"Persuaded by a friend I have used Peruna as a tonic, and I am glad to testify that it has greatly helped me in strength, vigor and appetite. I have been advised by friends that it is remarkably efficacious as a cure for the almost universal complaint of catarrh."

Senator Roach's home address is Larimore, South Dakota.

Peruna is not a guess, nor an experiment; it is an absolute, scientific certainty. Peruna cures catarrh wherever located. Peruna has no substitutes—no rivals. Insist upon having Peruna. Let no one persuade you that some other remedy will do nearly as well. There is no other systematic remedy for catarrh but Peruna. Address the Peruna Medicine Company, Columbus, Ohio, for a free book on catarrh, written by Dr. Hartman.

AN APPEAL TO HUMANITY GENERALLY

We need your assistance in announcing to the world the GREATEST REMEDY that Science has ever produced, and you need our assistance to secure relief for yourself and friends through SWANSON'S "5 DROPS."

A REMEDY SUPREME As surely as the American Navy has conquered and will conquer all that opposes it, so will "5 DROPS" unfailingly conquer all diseases like Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Catarrh of all kinds, ASTHMA, Dyspepsia, Backache, Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Heart Weakness, Toothache, Earache, Creeping Numbness, Bronchitis, Liver and Kidney Troubles, etc., etc., or any disease for which we recommend it. "5 DROPS" is the name and the dose. "5 DROPS" is perfectly harmless. It does not contain Salicylate of Soda nor Opiates in any form. The Child can use it as well as the Adult.

5 DROPS [TRADE MARK.]

NEURALGIA Read carefully what Mr. L. R. Smith, of El Dorado Springs, Mo., writes us under date of Nov. 27, 1899, also Martan Bowers, of Caraghar, Ohio, under date of Dec. 16th, 1899:

I do not know how to express how wonderful I think your "5 DROPS" medicine is. I was suffering intensely with NEURALGIA and thought for a month that I would have to die. One day a lady called to see me and brought me an advertisement of your "5 DROPS." I resolved to try it and sent for a sample bottle. Have been taking it for three weeks and have not had an attack of suffering since I took the first dose. I believe it has saved my life. This statement is positively true. I shall also take pleasure in recommending your "5 DROPS" for the cure of NEURALGIA.
L. R. SMITH,
El Dorado Springs, Mo., Nov. 27, 1899.

RHEUMATISM Your "5 DROPS" came to hand on the 11th of last month and was glad to receive it, for I was suffering at the time with untold agonies. The first dose helped me out of my pain on short notice. Bless the name of God for it. It will do all you say it will and more too. I had severe pains all over my body, when night came I could not sleep. The worst pain was in my left leg. I could not put my foot to the floor without suffering great pain. Have used four different kinds of medicine for RHEUMATISM and got no relief until I got your "5 DROPS," which gave me immediate relief as above stated.
MARTAN BOWERS, Box 83, Caraghar, Ohio, Dec. 16, 1899.

30 DAYS to enable sufferers to give "5 DROPS" at least a trial, we will send a sample bottle, prepaid by mail for 25c. A sample bottle will convince you. Also, large bottles (200 doses) $1.00, 6 bottles for $5. Sold by us and agents. AGENTS WANTED in New Territory. Don't wait. Write now!

Looks Bad for Curtis.

E. B Dunten, the Butler attorney, returned home yesterday from Chicago where he had gone in search of W. H. Curtis, the missing manager of the canning factory. Mr. Dunten was not disposed to make a public statement until he had conferred with Curtis' partners, but vouchsafed the information that the man who had committed suicide in Chicago was not Curtis. The latter was last seen at a theater and from that time nothing could be learned of his movements. A private meeting of the directors of the canning concern was held last night, and it is currently reported at Butler that Curtis is several thousand dollars short in his accounts. Should this prove to be a fact his mysterious disappearance will be explained. The company is making every effort to straighten matters out and it is claimed that all losses will be made good by the stockholders.

—Fort Wayne Sentinel:—Miss Mary E. Essig, of Auburn, is in this city, attending at the bedside of her brother, William Essig, who is seriously ill at the home of his brother, G. P. Essig.

—L. Bowers is the first man to pay his Daily Courier up to 1901. He got used to paying way ahead when he used to take the Weekly, and it became such a habit with him, that he likes to keep it up.

—The county council will be called to meet about the middle of the present month to make the disbursements of the county funds, and under the law no orders can be issued until this part of their work has been completed.

—The Angola Herald reports that Leeman Kannel narrowly escaped drowning by breaki g through the ice while skating on Hamilton lake a few days ago. He was rescued by comrades who pushed a boat out into the opening, and hauled it in again with a rope.

—The county commissioneri granted two liquor licenses, one being to Wm. Davis, who succeeds Ed. Hoffman at the Junction, and the other to Charles Dowend, formerly of this city, who has engaged in the business at Garrett. Davis was for a short time agent here for a piano firm.

—The Angola Herald has entered upon its twenty-fifth year. W. K. Sheffer has been in control during all its existence with the exception of about three years, and though working at a great disadvantage so far as public patronage is concerned, has made the Herald an excellent newspaper. Here's hoping it may live long and prosper.

—About 4 o'clock this morning fire was discovered in the residence of Simon Beeber, in the northeast part of Garrett, about a quarter of a mile from the fire department headquarters. The hosemen reached the scene in time to save the greater part of the building the damage being confined principally to the roof, which was entirely burned off. The loss is about $300, fully covered by insurance.

—At the election of directors of the state board of agriculture at Indianapolis yesterday the eight retiring members were all re-elected. Ex-Senator McDonald of Ligonier had two opponents, the vote standing: McDonald. 44; Husselman, 9; Hitchcock of Brimfield 9. Hon. Aaron Jones was elected president of the board; J. C. Haines of Lake county, vice president; Charles Downing of Greenfield, secretary; J. W. Lagrange of Franklin, treasurer.

HEADACHE

is only a symptom—not a disease. So are Backache, Nervousness, Dizziness and the Blues. They all come from an unhealthy state of the menstrual organs. If you suffer from any of these symptoms—if you feel tired and languid in the morning and wish you could lie in bed another hour or two—if there is a bad taste in the mouth, and no appetite—if there is pain in the side, back or abdomen—BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR will bring about a sure cure. The doctor may call your trouble some high-sounding Latin name, but never mind the name. The trouble is in the menstrual organs, and Bradfield's Female Regulator will restore you to health and regulate the menses like clockwork.

Sold by druggists for $1 a bottle. A free illustrated book will be sent to any woman if request be mailed to

Story of a Slave.

To be bound hand and foot for years by the chains of disease is the worst form of slavery. George D. Williams, of Manchester, Mich., tells how such a slave was made free. He says: "My wife has been so helpless for five years that she could not turn over in bed alone. After using two bottles of Electric Bitters, she is wonderfully improved and able to do her own work." This supreme remedy for female diseases quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, fainting and dizzy spells. This miracle working medicine is a godsend to weak, sickly, run down people. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents. Sold by B. B. McCord the Druggist.

—The state of Indiana appropriates $5,000 annually for the expenses of the Farmers' Institutes within the state. Inasmuch as we all help to pay these expenses it would seem that all ought to attend and reap the benefits. The coming institute in this county promises to be one of unusual interest.

EASH COMES BACK

And Tells How He Made His Escape From Hank Stroh.

Sheriff Stroh is out of office, but the results of his official carelessness follow him. Of all the men who escaped from the big jail of stone, brick and steel, under his administration, none caused more talk and fun then the escape of the boy, William Eash, one of the Elkhart lads hauled up for looting cars on the Lake Shore road. He was tried in Auburn by Judge Roby, March 16, 1898, and sentenced to five years in the reformatory at Jeffersonville. But on March 18, Eash escaped as noted at the time in the COURIER. No one could guess how he got away, but he was gone, and the sheriff very naturally did not go out on the streets bragging very much about it. A few days later Judge Roby received a bunch of keys sent him by Mr. Gembertling at Elkhart, father of one of the boys concerned with Eash in the robberies. They were the jail keys. And still we could not understand how Eash had got the keys, or gotten away. The matter has been a mystery since. Dec. 27th he came back, gave himself up and was locked up in his old quarters he says he did this on the advice of an attorney at Indianapolis who is a friend, and who told him it would be better to come back and give himself up, and take chances on being favored by the court.

He tells a story at once strange and ridiculous.

He explains his manner of getting away. The night before his escape, he ate his supper as usual, but no one came to take away his plate, knife and fork, and he saw the advantage of keeping them. The next morning, however, after he had eaten his breakfast, they took his knife, fork and plate away, but he still had those of the night before. Soon after this he got to fooling with his pillow and got the feathers out on the cell floor. Mrs. Stroh came in and swept up the feathers, and when she went out, she locked him in all right and hung up the keys. They hung about twelve feet from his cell door, and at once a bright thought struck him. A pine box had been left in his room, and taking the tableknife, he split it up into narrow strips and tied them together with some strings he had in his pocket, till he got a pole of the right length, and fixed a nail in the end of it. He poked the pole out through his cell and reached out to the nail on which hung the bunch of keys, hooked his nail into the keys, and gradually drew them to him and into his cell. Then he went out into the corridor and down stairs. Here he could have opened the door into the hall, but he saw the big dog lying in the hall and knew he could not pass the dog. Just then he heard Mrs. Stroh coming and he ran back up stairs, hung the keys where she had left them, and in order to avoid her, he dodged into the first cell he found and crawled under the bed. It so happened that she came into this room to make up that very bed. He lay, till she had gone, then he sneaked out, got the keys, and went into his own room. From there he could look out, and to his joy he saw the big dog out in the yard. That was a sign that the hall was safe. So he hurredly let himself out again, then into the hall, and forgetting to leave the keys he hurried away and was gone by 9 a. m.

He managed to get back to Elkhart, gave the keys to his father and struck out for freedom. Since then he has wandered over the country in every direction, but becoming tired of such a life of danger and dodging the officers, he concluded to come back and take his medicine. He was called up this morning and Judge Bratton gave him his original sentence. He will be taken to Jeffersonville, but no doubt will be speedily pardoned, on account of giving himself up. But he evidently is a pretty tough fellow for all that. He is probably still under eighteen.

Dewey's Bounty Money.

Dewey's claim for bounty money is being argued before the court of claims in Washington. The point in dispute is not whether he was the victor but the Spanish forces were superior to his. If superior the law gives him $200 for each man aboard the enemy's vessels. If inferior, then only $100. As Montejo reported he had 1,914 men aboard his fleet, that would give Dewey and his men $382,800 at $200 apiece, or $191,400 at $100 apiece. Dewey claims the opposing force was not only the Spanish fleet, but the shore batteries and the mines and torpedoes in the harbor. He is probably right. At the victory of Farragut at New Orleans, he got credit not only for the confederate fleet but for the forts and batteries on shore, all of which, as in Dewey's case, were firing at him.

CHAPTER XI.

Oh, no. It does not make us feel bad to realize that those "good old days are gone forever." And those who think things were so much better fifty years ago, should be given a chance to go over it and live through it again. Then we had tallow candles, cooked at fire places, went without overcoats or overshoes, used ox teams, had no envelopes, but had to write our letters and learn to fold them in a way that a bit of sealing wax, or a "wafer" would fasten them up in such a way that the writing would be safely concealed. Then we could pay ten cents postage on it and have the postmaster mark it "Paid," or we could send it anyhow, and let the dear friend at the other end of the line pay the ten cents, if he wanted to hear from us that bad and could raise the ten cents. For it must not be forgotten that a dime was a much more important article then than it is now. It wasn't everybody that had a dime in those good old days. And then it took so much time that a letter to a distant point was liable to be ancient history by the time it reached its destination. A letter from Indiana to friends in York State, was liable to be two weeks or more on the journey. Very few people had carpets, while wooden seated "Windsor" chairs were considered a luxury possible only for the leaders in society. Three months of school was a lucky thing for a district school, and had to be paid for by subscriptions or a "rate list." Books, even school books were scarce. The bible or a history of the United States, would do service as a reader from the first day in school till the child quit school, a man or woman. One arithmetic would do a family. We are apt to look back with envy on the ridiculously low taxes of those days. Yet it was harder to get the money to pay with than it is now for the higher amount. There were very few churches in the country portions, and meetings had to be held under considerable difficulties in school houses and homes.

At the homes the preacher stood on the floor, with a little stand in front of him, and preached with little or no preparation, and no music except very commonplace efforts of the human voice. Lead pencils were comparatively unknown and matches were very scarce. Fires were usually kindled by means of coals buried in ashes the night before in the fire on the hearth.

There was no power but water power until horses were used as on the primitive threshing machines. Steam power was fairly well known for its use on steamboats, on lakes and rivers, but it came but tardily into use for the common people.

Speaking of steam. That reminds us of a story, and a true one.

When the first steam sawmill was built in the township of Blank, it was freely stated that it would saw several hundred feet of poplar lumber a day, and it would make no difference about wet weather or dry, or whether there was a good "head" at the dam or not. The mill was several miles away, the road leading to it, being mostly through the woods. But it came to be understood, that it would soon be ready to start up, and then could be seen something that would make the old "flutter wheel" ashamed.

One evening as the fall nights were coming on earlier and earlier, just after dusk, there came a sound from the direction of the "big woods," that drew sharp attention. What could it be? It was a strange sound, between a howl and a scream. Some thought it might be the gang of wolves that used to make their mingled and doleful melodies over that way. But others felt sure it was panther, as they had heard of their peculiar screams in the wild mountain districts of New York and Pennsylvania. Off and on as the night grew apace, the dismal sounds continued. The people became first interested and then excited. Then they felt it their duty to investigate, and if it was a beast of prey, especially if it was a "paynter," they would rid the country of such a menace. So an expedition was organized to go out at once. There were two or three guns, old rifles, and some axes, and a few went unarmed.

So the whole force started. They had not gone over a mile, before they met a man in the darkness. He had come from the point to which they were going. So he told them the cause of the wild, weird howlings. It was the workmen at the new mill celebrating with their new-fangled steam whistle.

GILMORE'S STORY.

His Capitvity Among the Filipinos. A Strange Story.

Lieut. Gilmore, who has been a captive among the Filipinos since last April, has at last got safely back to Manila Saturday, coming on a steamer from the north part of the island. Seven of the Yorktown's sailors, captured with him, when they made the landing at Baler, have returned to Manila with him. He tells a story of hardship and suffering. He says they fared fairly well while in places controlled by Aguinaldo in person, but under some other Filipino officers, especially Gen. Tino, they suffered great cruelties. In November and early in December the Filipinos were so hard pressed by our forces, that they hurried the prisoners from place to place, and finally abandoned them in a part of the country occupied by savage tribes. He says:

"The Filipinos abandoned us on the night of December 16. We had reached the Abalat river near its source that morning, and the Filipinos rafted us over. We then went down the stream, along a rough trail, guarded by a company of Filipinos. That night we were separated from this guard, and another company, armed with Mausers, was put in charge of us. I suspected something and questioned the lieutenant in command. He said: 'I have orders from Gen. Tinto to shoot you all, but my conscience forbids. I shall leave you here.'

"I begged him for two rifles to protect us from savages, adding that I would give him letters to the Americans who would pay him well and keep him from harm. He refused this, however, saying he would not dare to comply. Soon afterward he left with his company.

FEARED THE SAVAGES.

"We had seen some savages in war paint around us, and we prepared to fight them with cobblestones, the only weapons that were available to us. The next morning we followed the trail of the Filipino soldiers, feeling that it was better to stick to them than to be murdered by savages, but we could not catch up with them. Then I ordered the men to build rafts in the hope of floating down the river. It was a forlorn hope, but I knew the river must empty into the sea somewhere. I was so weak myself that I did not expect to get out, but I thought some of the men could.

RESCUE PARTY ARRIVES.

"On the morning of December 18, while we were working on the rafts, the Americans came toward us yelling. One of my men shouted 'They are on us.' He was lashing a raft of bamboos. I, however, knew it was not the yell of savages, but the yell of Americans. The rescuing troops thought we had Filipino guards and called to us in English to lie down, so that they could shoot the Filipinos. That was the finest body of officers and men I ever saw."

Lieut. Gilmore could not speak enthusiastically enough about the 140 picked men who had rescued him and his party.

The command spent the day in making rafts. Col. Hare thought Lieut. Gilmore too weak to live through the trip, but there was no alternative. They shot many rapids, the men losing all their effects, and Lieut. Gilmore some valuable papers. Only fourteen out of thirty-seven rafts survived the first night's experiences, and eighty men were practically unable to walk when Vigan was reached.

STORY OF THE RETREAT.

Describing the fight from Benguet when the Americans appeared, Lieut. Gilmore said:

"The Filipinos, completely terrified, left Benguet on December 7. They hurried the prisoners from town to town, often retracing the trail, not knowing where the Americans would attack. After being almost without food for three days they killed several horses and we lived on horse flesh for several days. I did not have a full meal from December 7, until I reached Vigan. Indeed, the rescuing party lived largely upon rice without salt. There was one day when I was reduced to chewing grass and bark.

"While we were in the hands of Gen. Tino's men he issued an order that any person aiding an American by food or money should be treated as a criminal. One citizen of Vigan, Senor Vera, was probably killed for befriending us. We would have starved but for the kindness of some of the residents of the towns and some of the Filipino colonels, but others treated us brutally. Wherever there was a prison we were kept there. When there was no prison they would lodge us in a convent. We suffered greatly from want of exercise as well as lack of food."

PAINTED SIGNS ON ROCKS.

For weeks Lieut. Gilmore was covered with boils and in great pain. When the Filipinos found the Americans were approaching the treatment became better. There was a sign painter in the party and he painted advertisements on the rocks throughout the retreat, with other emblems like a skull and the word "vengeance," by means of which the Americans were able to follow.

"The Filipino treatment of the Spaniards," said Lieut. Gilmore, "was brutal in the extreme. The insurgents had old grudges to wipe out against them. Many talk about the reconcentradoes in Cuba, but I have seen Spaniards dying at the rate of two or three per day of starvation in the hospitals at Vigan. I have seen Tagalo officers strike Spaniards in the face with whips and revolvers."

SAYS WAR WILL CONTINUE.

Lieut. Gilmore declined to speak regarding political conditions, except to say that he thought the fighting would last as long as there were any Tagalos left.

The members of the party were barefooted, sunburned and ragged. Some carried rifles, others pet monkeys. They attracted a great deal of attention as they passed along the streets.

TRAITOR IN THE PARTY.

Brown, who was formerly a preacher in Honolulu, twice revealed to the insurgents plots of the Americans to escape in the hope of gaining the good will of the Filipinos. The rest of the party openly accused him of treachery and entertain the bitterest feelings toward him.

Charles Baker of the Third artillery was formerly one of the prisoners, but he became too weak to travel and the Filipino guards bayoneted him during the last fight through the mountains.

The prisoners of Lieut. Gilmore's party who escaped after leaving Vigan were MacDonald of the Twenty-first infantry, Von Galen of the Baltimore and Farley of the Oregon. They were captured by savages, recaptured by the insurgents, who had stripped and prepared to beat them, and ultimately rescued by the Americans.

Circuit Court Notes.

The case of Jones & Miller vs Austin being tried today before Judge Bratton agd a jury. Hoffman & Link are attorneys for plaintiff and Wickwire and Rose & Rose for Austin. Though not a very important case, it is being thoroughly fought over.

It appears that Austin and a man named Brenner were in partnership in the grocery business in Ashley, but finally separated. Brenner took the the stock of goods, and it is now claimed, agreed to pay the debts of the firm. Later on he became bankrupt, and then Jones & Miller came on to Austin for a debt due them. The plaintiff claims Austin is liable for the debt. Austin claims he is not. We believe the demand is about $350.

The jury has had but little to do so far this term, but they are having a chance to use their heads in this case, for it has some nice points.

During the interim while waiting for the verdict of the jury in the Ashley case, Special Judge Bratton heard and disposed of several other cases today.

In that of Harry Draggoo vs. Anton Hablawitz, on note, the cause was dismissed and the costs paid. The same action was taken in the case of Henry C. Shull vs. John Swank, also on note.

In the case of Harry Draggoo vs. John A. Johnson, on note, the defendant failed to appear and judgment was rendered against him for $171.60.

Charles Moore vs. Rose Moore was the title of divorce case heard today. The defendant defaulted, and the decree was granted to the plaintiff.

Peter Coyle et. al. vs. Alanson Sumner and Stephen Clark, to quiet title and cancel mortgage, was another case in which no defense was made. After hearing the evidence the court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs.

To The Tax-Payers.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties—A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

Mediation in Sight.

A dispatch from Washington says: News of another serious disaster to the British army in South Africa will be the signal for an immediate offer of American mediation between Great Britain and the Boers. This is the belief of well-informed foreign diplomats in Washington. They expect the Administration to take this course in accordance with an understanding already reached with the British Government, the latter having good reasons to fear that if the United States does not come promptly forward as mediator there will be European intervention, and this would be almost certain to lead to a general war. If an offer of mediation is made it is believed it will be accepted.

Our Flour Released.

London special: The American flour seized off Delagoa Bay has been released. United States Ambassador Choate had an interview with the Marquis of Salisbury and received a verbal reply to the representatives of the Washington Government. The British note on this subject was sent later to the United States Embassy. The gist of it was cabled to Washington.

In brief, foodstuffs are not considered contraband of war unless intended for the enemy.

Filipinos Routed.

Manila special: Col. Bullard, of the Thirty-ninth Infantry, moving in three columns from Calamba, with two guns, attacked ten companies of insurgents strongly entrenched in Santa Tomas road. They resisted stubbornly, making three stands. Twenty-four rebels were killed and sixty prisoners were taken. The Filipinos retreated, carrying their wounded, toward Lake Taal. One American was killed and two officers slightly wounded.

Census of Cuba Completed.

The census, which is now completed and being compiled, shows Cuba to have 1,500,000 inhabitants, despite the wars and famines. The Spanish census in the year 1887, gave the population as 1,600,000, but was not reliable. The United States canvassers discovered tribes of Indians who had never been heard of in the mountains, and people were found who did not know the island was in the possession of the United States.

Root Not a Candidate.

Henry C. Payne, National Republican Committeeman of Wisconsin, received a letter from Secretary of War Root, in which the latter states that he is not and will not be a candidate for the Vice Presidency of the United States. In his letter, Mr. Root expresses the belief that it is far more important to the country, the Administration and the Republican party, at this time, that he should attend to the business of the War office.

Officer Takes His Life.

Admiral Schley cables from Montevideo that Lieutenant Commander Francis Green, executive officer of the cruiser Montgomery, committed suicide. The board will investigate the circumstances and report. He had been in the service since 1867. He was appointed from Indiana, and leaves a widow at Janesville, Wisconsin.

Blackburn Elected.

Frankfort (Ky.) special: The two Houses met in joint session at noon Wednesday to compare the ballots for United States Senator taken by each House in separate session Tuesday. Speaker Trimble announced that comparison of the journals showed that Mr. Blackburn received a majority and declared him elected.

Hard to Find.

Manila special: The insurgents who fled before Gen. Schwan have taken refuge in the mountains, in Cavite province, where it will be difficult to dislodge them. At Silang the Americans captured several thousand rounds of ammunition. The insurgents are reported to have four American prisoners with them.

Skaters Drowned.

While skating on the Lake of Bays, at Baysville, Ont., Thomas Brown, Jr., aged 19 years; Margaret Brown, 21, and Jane Brown, 17, children of Thomas Brown, ran into an opening in the ice and were drowned.

Plague Spreads in Honolulu.

Surgeon General Wyman of the Marine Hospital service, has received a report from Dr. Carmichael at Honolulu, stating that there were eight additional cases of bubonic plague there up to January 1.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Jan. 20—Rose Coghlan in "The White Heathen."

May Ask America's Aid.

Santo Domingo special: American residents here are greatly worked up by the attitude of the French in regard to their claims against this government. It is reported that a strong plea has been made to Washington that France shall not be allowed to dictate terms to the Dominican Government.

Phil. Armour Moves to California.

Phil. Armour, the Chicago millionaire packer, is at Pasadena, Cala., and has announced that he will make his future home there.

Accident in Steel Mill.

One man is dead and three injured as the result of an accident at the Homestead steel works at Pittsburg. The men were changing the rolls in the 28-inch mill when the chain with which they raised the rolls into place broke, letting the heavy mass of iron down on them.

Killed for Kissing a Girl.

Carmelo Brigandi, an Italian, was held without bail in the Boston municipal court on a charge of killing Edward Graham. Brigandi says his sister was hugged and kissed by Graham in a hallway on Salem street, and that is why he shot him dead.

TRADE SHOWS A SLIGHT HALT.

Business Men Occupied with Settlements—Failures in 1899.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "Failures in 1899 were 9,893 in number, with liabilities of $123,182,526. The last days of the year added a few to the number and some millions to the known liabilities of firms and banks which failed close to the end, so that commercial defaults reached $90,879,889, of which $30,792,164 was in manufacturing, $48,924,771 in trading and $11,162,954 in brokerage, promoting and other commercial liabilities. Most people in business have been so occupied with the accounts and the settlements of the last year that little new business has yet been done. No new tendency in manufacture or in trading appears, and less change than was anticipated in money markets. There is nothing unsound in the business of the great industries, but an extensive revision of prices may disappoint extreme expectations. Wheat still moves very sluggishly, with small change in prices. In six months of the crop year about 99,000,000 bushels, flour included, have been exported, against 123,000,000 last year. Atlantic exports have now fallen to only 2,060,926 bushels for the week, against 5,214,420 last year, and Pacific exports were 531,225 bushels, against 614,833 last year. The price is practically unchanged, as also for corn, of which 3,923,195 bushels have been exported for the week, against 3,572,412 last year."

CANNIBALS IN CONGO STATE.

Fourteen Villages Destroyed and Ninety or More Natives Slain.

The Southern Presbyterian Board of Missions in Nashville, Tenn., received letters from Rev. L. C. Vass and Rev. H. P. Hawkins, missionaries of the church stationed at Luebo, Congo Free State, Africa, giving accounts of the burning of fourteen villages and the killing of ninety or more natives by State troops. They report that some of the victims were eaten by cannibals, and that the bodies of all who were slain were mutilated, their heads having been cut off. Mr. Vass states that tidings of raiding by the Zappo Zaps in the Bena Kamba country have reached them, and the work of the missionaries being threatened, Rev. W. H. Sheppard was sent to make an investigation. He went to the Zappo Zaps' camp and found that fourteen villages had been destroyed by fire and plundered. He saw forty-seven bodies lying around the camp. From three bodies the flesh had been carved and eaten. It is said the raid was ordered because the people could not pay the exorbitant tribute demanded by the State.

GENERAL GREELY BADLY HURT.

Attacked by a Drunken Roysterer and Unconscious for an Hour.

An unprovoked assault was made upon Gen. A. W. Greely, the chief signal officer and famous arctic explorer. The general's assailant is Joseph C. Furnace, a messenger of the Adams Express Company. Furnace and a friend named Murphy had been drinking, and in a semi-irresponsible condition tried to force an entrance into the Greely home, 1914 G street, Washington. The general came out to remonstrate with them, and Furnace threw him down a flight of steps, inflicting a deep gash in the back of the general's head. Gen. Greely was carried into the house, where he remained unconscious for nearly an hour.

MOODY'S WORK TO BE KEPT UP.

Son of Dead Evangelist Talks of the Plans and Prospects.

W. R. Moody, son of Dwight L. Moody, when asked about the prospect of carrying on the educational work founded by the evangelist said: "So far as I can see the work will go right along the lines which it has been taking for the past twenty years or more. The financial arrangements for it have always been and will continue to be in trustworthy hands."

Condemned Men Give Battle.

Geronimo Parra and Antonio Flores, who were executed at El Paso, Texas, for murder, made a desperate effort to kill some of the officers or spectators when their cell door was unlocked. When the officers unlocked the cell door both prisoners dashed out and stabbed right and left among the crowd with dirks made of coarse steel wire. A desperate struggle followed.

S. D. Greene and Wife Drowned.

Lieut S. Dana Greene, sales manager of the General Electric Company of Schenectady, N. Y., and Mrs. Greene, daughter of the late Rear Admiral Chandler, of the United States navy, were drowned while skating on the Mohawk River. They had raised their skating sails and were being blown down the river by a gale when they saw the open water, but could not stop.

Power House Is Demolished.

The power house of the Cudahy Oil Company, located north of Muncie, Ind., in the Blackford County oil field, was demolished by an explosion, causing a loss of $10,000, in addition to the fact that forty producing oil wells must lie idle until repairs are made in the machinery. The fire originated from an attempt of an employe to thaw out a frozen gas pipe.

Mayor Jones Founds a Town.

Mayor Samuel M. Jones, of Toledo, and Albert S. Dulin, of Philadelphia, have chartered the Association of Altruists and selected Moorestown, N. J., near Philadelphia, for the site of a co-operative communistic colony.

Four Children Are Burned.

Four children of Michael Kerrick, a farmer, were burned to death at Little Falls, Minn., in a fire that destroyed the house. The remains could not be identified and were buried in one grave. The children were from 7 to 15 years of age.

Shoots Four and Himself.

As a result of a drunken quarrel at a Piute Indian camp near Pineville, Ore., Matthew Wewa killed his wife, fatally wounded his brother, Charley, and two squaws named Tyler and Susie and killed himself.

William Wasco Hanged.

William Wasco, a Hungarian, was hanged in the yard of the county court house at Pittsburg. The crime for which Wasco was executed was the murder of Annie Sestak, a Hungarian girl, who had refused to marry him.

Burned to Death in a Barn.

A barn on the Fox farm, two miles south of Hamilton, Ohio, burned to the ground the other night. Eight tramps were sleeping in the barn. Only six have been found since the fire. Of these two are fearfully burned.

Fatally Hurt in a Riot.

Men employed on a sewer in Chicago were attacked by strikers and several shots were fired. One of the strikers, Roger O'Brien, was fatally wounded.

Episcopal Church Burns.

St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., was burned out, the loss amounting to $50,000. A defective flue probably started the fire.

Admits Killing His Father.

Two months ago, C. M. Nelson, a Swedish farmer living eight miles northwest of Kearney, Neb., disappeared. It was generally believed he had gone to Sweden, but Sheriff Funk thought otherwise and made a search of the premises. Nelson's headless trunk, with one arm missing, was dug up. Theodore, one of Nelson's sons, confessed that he had killed his father by striking him on the head with a pitchfork. He then dragged the body away and buried it.

LAKE YIELDS UP A NUN'S CORPSE.

Body of Sister Augusta is Washed Ashore Near Kenosha, Wis.

The body of Sister Augusta, who disappeared several days ago from Kempes Hall, Kenosha, Wis., whither she had come to attend the annual retreat of the Sisterhood, was found in Lake Michigan, south of the hall. Two children walking along the shore discovered the body. It was taken from the water and carried to the parlor in the summer home. For nearly a week the missing woman was in the water and the body is bruised and discolored from the continuous buffeting of the waves. Sister Ella, a friend of Sister Augusta, identified the remains. An inquest was held. Sister Augusta was only a minor Sister of the Order of St. Mary. She was not bound by the threefold vow and could at any time have been absolved from her allegiance to the Sisterhood. Her act must have been unpremeditated, as from all indications she had made every arrangement to go away for a visit to her sister, Mrs. Smith, in St. Louis. She had even written an application for leave of absence and permission was to have been given her. The fact that she left the community room and went to her bedroom, where she put on her veil and cloak and took her purse, which contained money and a railroad ticket, seems to show that her first intention was to get away from Kemper Hall. Her act of suicide must have been an afterthought.

PULITZER'S DWELLING BURNS.

Two Servants Found Dead in the Ruins—Loss Is About $300,000.

The handsome dwelling of Joseph Pulitzer, the proprietor of the New York World, in East 55th street, New York, was destroyed by fire and at least one life was lost. When the flames had been extinguished and a search was made of the ruined interior the bodies of two women were found badly burned. One is believed to be that of Miss Elizabeth Montgemory, the governess, and the other was identified as that of the housekeeper, Mrs. Jellett. In one hand was clutched a small bag, into which, it is believed, she tried to thrust some of her personal effects before leaving her room. The house contained a valuable historical library and many carefully selected works of art. Nothing of value was saved. The total loss is estimated at $300,000.

WOOED BY THREATS OF SUICIDE.

Strange Story of Mrs. Caroline Schmutz in Her Suit for Divorce.

Caroline Schmutz, nee Bunde, who was married a year ago to Frederick Schmutz, has filed a petition for divorce at Toledo, Ohio. She claims Schmutz threatened to kill himself if he did not win her for his wife, and she felt it was incumbent upon her to prevent his untimely taking off. She now says that she thinks he was lying. She says also Schmutz claimed he was wealthy and temperate, but that he proved to be neither.

Preacher Whips a Tailor.

The Rev. E. D. Whitlock, pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of Lima, Ohio, had a hand-to-hand fight with a tailor named Goudy in the latter's place of business. Goudy had repaired two overcoats unsatisfactorily for the preacher, who wanted him to do the work right before being paid. A dispute arose and Goudy struck at the minister, who in return knocked the tailor down three times.

Reformatory Is Burned Down.

The Newark city home, a reformatory for children at Verona, N. J., was burned to the ground, involving a loss of nearly $100,000. Three hundred inmates were got out in safety, and about 275 were marched to other institutions, where where they were placed in confinement.

Famous Priest Passes Away.

Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn, rector of St. Mary's Church, Newburg, N. Y., died after an illness of about seven weeks of heart failure, superinduced by Bright's disease.

Capt. Sigsbee Hurt by a Car.

CLEVER BOER RUSE.

SOUNDED THE "RECALL" FOR BRITISH TROOPS.

English Obeyed the Bugle and Left Their Comrades to Be Surrounded—General Gatacre Promptly Shoots a False Guide—Wauchope's Death.

There was no cause for London to complain of lack of news from South Africa Monday morning. The most important dispatches that had come over the cables in many days were given out Sunday night by the war office. One piece of information contained the details of another British blunder, or which amounts to the same thing—of the success of a brilliant bit of Boer strategy. During the progress of an attack on the Boers at Colesburg by some of Gen. French's command the Boers demonstrated their acquaintance with the British bugle calls. They sounded the "recall," and three companies of four of the Suffolks, which had just been ordered to charge, obeyed the order, leaving the remaining company unsupported. These were surrounded and taken prisoners by the Boers.

Telegrams from Rensburg say seven officers and thirty men of the Suffolks were killed and that about fifty were captured. Gen. French's announcement that the Essex regiment has been sent to replace the Suffolks is more bitter to the latter's friends than the list of casualties, as the only inference deducible from this fact is that the Suffolks disgraced themselves and their flag by bolting and leaving a few of their more stanch comrades to fill the Pretoria jails.

Lord De La Warr, in a graphic description of the battle of Magersfontein, says:

"It is useless to disguise the fact that a large percentage of the troops are losing heart for a campaign comprised of a succession of frontal attacks on an invisible foe, securely intrenched and unreachable. Our men fought admirably, but they were asked to perform miracles. Don't blame them and don't blame the gallant general, who was the first victim of the terrible disaster which overcame the Highland brigade. They marched in quarter column to their doom. Gen. Wauchope's last words: 'For God's sake, men, do not blame me for this,' will gladden the hearts of his numberless friends. There was no accord between Gen. Methuen and Gen. Wauchope in regard to the best methods of attack. Gen. Methuen's plan prevailed, and the mistake lost 700 men."

A private of the Irish Rifles who fought at Stormberg, in a letter to his home, says that when Gen. Gatacre saw the position the guide had led the troops into he shot the guide dead with his own revolver.

BOERS MOVING A BIG GUN INTO ACTION.

WOOL FROM LIMESTONE.

The Remarkable Chemical Process of a Young St. Louisan.

E. C. Hall, a young chemist from St. Louis who is with the Union Steel Company at Hagerstown, Ind., is making wool out of limestone. He has a laboratory near the city limits, the entrance to which is very jealously guarded. There is a strange-looking furnace, into which he feeds by a special mechanical device the limestone that is found in the neighborhood in great quantities. At the opposite end of the furnace a white woollike substance is blown out. The wool has not the properties which make it desirable for weaving, but as a nonconductor it has no equal and possesses the chief quality of asbestos.

The process is a secret one, but Mr. Hall tells some things about it. The stone found in the neighborhood is of a peculiar chemical formation when first quarried, and when in that condition melts readily at a certain temperature. While in a molten state it is mixed with a chemical solution, in which powdered glass is thought to be one of the ingredients. It is then subjected to a blowing process which separates it into threads like finely spun wool. It has sufficient strength, but the nap is not long enough for weaving.

There is a residue in the shape of small beads of a glasslike substance which Mr. Hall has thus far been unable to get out of the wool. He cannot subject it to the combing process, and is now at work on a scheme of chemical dissolution which will run the beads out and at the same time have a refining effect upon the texture of the wool. As it stands to-day, in its crude state, it is a wool silica.

FEW VICTIMS OF PLAGUE.

Bubonic Disease in Hawaii Vigorously Held in Check.

There have been six deaths from bubonic plague in Honolulu. Five of them occurred within a period of thirty-six hours, Dec. 11 and 12. The sixth occurred Dec. 14. Strict quarantine of the districts in which the plague appeared has been established. A house-to-house cleaning of all the infected districts has been made, and it is believed that no more cases will develop, or if they do that there will be no chance of the disease gaining a foothold or assuming the proportions of an epidemic.

Of the six victims four were Chinese, one was a Gilbert islander and one a Hawaiian woman. The four Chinese and the Hawaiian woman died in the Asiatic quarter of the city. The Gilbert islander died some distance away in another quarter. With the outbreak of the plague a complete system of public medical attendance was inaugurated. Every case of sickness of whatever nature is reported immediately to the board of health and a physician from the board is sent to make an examination and make certain that it is not a case of plague.

It is feared that the bubonic plague has reached Manila, and the health authorities are exercising the utmost vigilance to prevent the spread of the scourge. Two suspicious deaths have already occurred.

LIFE LOSS OF SPANISH WAR.

Statistical Exhibit of the Government Shows Volunteer Mortality.

A pamphlet has been issued by the adjutant general's office in Washington under the title of "Statistical Exhibit of Strength of Volunteer Forces Called into Service During the War with Spain, with Losses from All Causes." The volunteer force consisted of 10,017 officers and 213,218 enlisted men, a total of 223,235 who were engaged in the war. The deaths numbered 148 officers and 4,356 men.

During the war fourteen volunteer officers and four officers of the regular army holding volunteer commissions were killed in action, three died from wounds, 119 from disease and eleven from other causes, of whom three were suicides. Of the enlisted men 190 were killed in action, 78 others died from wounds received and 3,729 from disease. There were, further, 159 deaths of enlisted men from various causes, 97 of whom died from accidents, 21 were drowned, 11 were suicides and 30 were victims of murder or homicide. Desertions from the ranks numbered 3,069.

The total losses in the volunteer forces were 1,718 officers, including eight dismissed, besides resignations and discharges, and 30,588 men, including 23,363 discharged for disability by court martial and by order.

In the list of officers killed in action, Kansas and South Dakota lead with 3 each; Nebraska had 2, while no other State had more than one. Of enlisted men killed in action or dying from wounds received in action, Nebraska lost 32, Kansas 30 and South Dakota 24; New York lost 15, while 26 of the States had no losses.

In the total number of enlisted men who died from all causes, New York leads with 417, Illinois 281, Massachusetts 274, Pennsylvania 239, Ohio 225 and Michigan 205. Nevada lost but one man.

The losses of men from murder or homicide were three from Alabama, three from North Carolina, two each from Florida, Kentucky, New York and Virginia, and one each from nine other States, besides seven among the United States volunteers. Of the suicides of enlisted men, three each came from Alabama and New York and two each from Florida, Kentucky and Tennessee.

In deaths from disease among enlisted men New York had 380 out of about 20,000 enlisted, Illinois had 274 out of about 13,000, Massachusetts 265 out of about 6,800, Ohio 219 out of less than 14,000, Pennsylvania 216 out of less than 17,000 and Michigan 200 out of less than 6,600.

In desertions from the ranks New York is charged with 514, or about 2½ per cent, while North Dakota and the District of Columbia had none and Utah had but one. Tennessee had 249 out of a total of about 6,000, about 4 per cent. One desertion is charged to "general officers and staff."

WERE LOST FOR CENTURIES.

Tribe of Eskimo Recently Found on a Lonely Island in the Hudson Bay.

The strangest anthropological discovery recorded in the last decade in the nineteenth century has been made on a lonely island in Hudson Bay and is nothing less than the locating of a lost tribe of Eskimo, which had been without intercourse with other representatives, and whose members never saw a white man until a few months ago. They are still in the stone age, knowing no metals; they grow no plants, and their houses are built of the skulls of whales.

The home of this strange tribe, which seems to have been cut off in some unknown manner from the rest of the world ever so long ago, is on Southampton Island—a piece of water-girt terra firma nearly as big as the State of Maine, situated at the north end of Hudson Bay. Apparently the people have dwelt there ever since pre-Columbian times, and today live and subsist in exactly the same way as they did then. The whale is the chief means of subsistence of these strange people, who hunt the mighty cetacean in skin boats much like those used by other Eskimo.

The tribe comprises only fifty-eight individuals, about equally divided as to sexes. Its members speak a dialect peculiar to themselves, and quite unlike that employed by any other Eskimo. Record of their discovery will soon be made to the American Museum of Natural History.

GAGE MAKES REPLY.

TREASURY'S HEAD ANSWERS INQUIRIES OF CONGRESS.

Gives His Reasons for Placing Public Moneys in National Banks—Says He Simply Followed Law and Custom Set by His Predecessors.

Secretary Gage on Wednesday sent to Congress his replies to resolutions recently introduced in the Senate by Mr. Allen of Nebraska, and in the House by Mr. Sulzer of New York. The text of his reply, which is an exhaustive exposition of the management of that branch of the treasury finances under his administration relating to national bank depositories, contains about 9,000 words, supplemented by special reports from department officials relative to special inquiries in the resolutions, including copies of over 1,000 letters on the subject under consideration.

The reply seeks to exonerate the Secretary of the Treasury from every charge laid at his door, and endeavors to show that he has observed with rigorous fidelity the letter and spirit of the law in the handling of public moneys placed under his direction. The history which he gives of the treasury practice with regard to the depositing of public moneys when the vaults become glutted, his friends say, is information that Congress should have presented to it every two or three years.

The Secretary endeavors to be especially clear in his statement of every detail connected with the sale of the New York custom house site to the National City Bank and to the disposition made of the proceeds. By the acts of his predecessors and the rulings of the Comptroller of the Treasury he would show that he had a perfect right to deposit the proceeds from this sale in qualified government depositories and that moneys so deposited to the credit of the treasurer of the United States are in the treasury, just as much as though they were actually on deposit in the vaults at Washington.

SECRETARY GAGE.

The legal prohibition against depositing public funds in bank depositories secured by government bonds, the Secretary declares, applies only to customs receipts. This statement Mr. Gage tries to strengthen by letters, opinions and memoranda showing that for thirty years the Secretary of the Treasury has exercised the right conferred upon him by the law of placing any such part of public receipts, except customs, as in his discretion he might deem best, with duly qualified government depositories.

The Secretary calls attention to the fact that under his management the Treasury Department has received since June, 1898, $1,100,000,000 and distributed it without disturbance to the financial or commercial equilibrium of the country. This exhibit, he says, gratifies him immensely, and he takes it as proof that he has administered the affairs of the department satisfactorily.

BEVERIDGE MAKES HIS SPEECH.

Senator from Indiana Voices Praise of McKinley's Philippine Policy.

Senator Beveridge in the Senate Tuesday made his long anticipated maiden speech, sustaining the administration in its Philippine policy. Senator Beveridge opened his speech by the statement that the times call for candor. He said the Philippines are "territory belonging to the United States" forever. The speaker argued that if it proves a mistake to hold the territory, "the error can be corrected when we will; every other nation stands ready to relieve us." He went on to argue that the Pacific is our ocean; that China is our national customer and the Philippines is the door of all the east.

With a long prelude as to the resources of the islands, the climate, character of the people and Aguinaldo, in which he said they were "a barbaric race modified by three centuries of contact with a decadent race," the speaker began his arguments on "true military policy." He referred to the proposed cessation of hostilities as "a false peace which will betray us; a sham truce that will curse us." Then he argued that in the efforts to secure peace the mistake has been kindness on the part of this nation. "No," he said, "friendly methods have been thoroughly tried only to make peace more difficult. There is not now, nor never was, any possible course but ceaseless operations in the field and loyal support of the war at home."

In the beginning of his address he had referred to the unlimited resources of the islands and cited the fact that "Spain's export and import with the islands undeveloped was $12,175,549 annually." He continued with the statement that the people were indolent and offered no competition with the labor of the United States. Mr. Beveridge next branched off into suggestions as to the "plan of government needed in the Philippines; it should be simple and strong, for in dealing with the Filipinos we deal with children." He recommended a "Philippine civil service, with promotion for efficiency." In flowing language he concluded his address with an appeal to uphold the flag, and an appeal for continued hostilities.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Finds $2,000 in an Old Book—Price of Oil Land Leases Is Doubled—New Commandant for Lafayette Soldiers' Home—Farmer Is Murdered.

John B. Pankey, manager of the English Hotel at English, while looking through the wareroom of the hotel found a book with the name of Philip McDonnough of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., written on the flyleaf. Between the leaves of the book were four $100 bills, one $500 bill and two $1,000 bills, making a total of $2,000. The book is entitled "Protestantism and Catholicity Compared in Their Effects on the Civilization of Europe." Mr. Pankey has no idea how the book came to be in the wareroom of the hostelry, nor does he recall ever having had a guest by the name of McDonnough at his hotel.

Capt. Stormont Is Selected.

Room in Old Land Leases.

Competition for oil leases throughout the Indiana field has never been so lively as at present. Not until December were farmers paid more than 50 cents per acre for oil rights, while now concerns are putting up the price on one another in their endeavor to secure leases. The minimum now is $1 per acre, with a rising tendency, and many old leases are changing hands around that figure. It is said that in the counties in the oil field two-thirds of the taxes are paid by this lease money.

Official Books All Missing.

Sensational developments have come in Shelby County with the retirement of County Treasurer Wilson and the installation of Treasurer Lee as his successor. All the books of the office for three years and six months prior to last June are missing. The corresponding books of the Auditor for the same period are missing, and it is not known what moneys have been received or paid out in that time.

Farmer Is Shot and Killed.

In Point township James Rutter shot and killed Frank Spottsville. Rutter was trespassing on Spottsville's farm and was ordered off the place, when he drew a revolver and shot Spottsville. Rutter was captured as he was about to escape to Kentucky in a skiff. Spottsville's friends tried to lynch Rutter, but Sheriff Thomas landed him safely in jail in Mount Vernon.

THE OLD TRUNDLE BED.

Oh, the old trundle bed where I slept
when a boy,
What panoplied knight might not covet
the joy?
The glory and peace of that slumber of mine,
Like a long, gracious rest in the bosom
divine;
The quaint, homely couch, hidden close
from the light,
But daintily drawn from its hiding at night.
Oh, a nest of delight, from the foot to the head,
Was the queer little, dear little, old trundle bed.

Oh, the old trundle bed where I wondering saw
The stars through the window, and listened with awe
To the sigh of the winds as they tremblingly crept
Through the trees where the robins so restlessly slept,
Where I heard the low, murmurous chirp of the wren,
And the katydid listlessly chirrup again,
Through the maze of the dreams of the old trundle bed.

Oh, the old trundle bed! Oh, the old trundle bed!
With its plump little pillow and old-fashioned spread;
Its snowy white sheets and the blankets above,
Smoothed down and tucked around with the touches of love;
The voice of my mother to lull me to sleep
With the old fairy stories my memories keep Still fresh as the lillies that bloom o'er the head
Once bowed o'er my own in the old trundle bed.

HIS BUSY DAY.

IT WAS my busy day.

A pile of correspondence as daunting to a man's ambition as Pike's Peak or the Eiffel Tower burdened my desk and there was a kink in my temper which I had calculated would require a dinner at Martin's, tete-a-tete with Marguerite, to effectually straighten out. Martin's chef makes a certain pate that puts a man at peace with all the world, while Marguerite is at once soothing and stimulating, like champagne.

At this point my reflections were interrupted by Forsythe, the best fellow in the world, but with an unlucky habit of turning up at the wrong moment. I didn't give him the glad hand exactly, for which I was sorry enough afterward, but he was too preoccupied to notice.

"Oh, I've something to say to you, Austin," he said after a few preliminaries, with the effect of having just remembered something.

"All right," I replied, taking my feet off a chair to shove it toward him, "but make it twenty words if you can. I'm in a rush to-day."

"I can do it quick enough," he went on, with an uneasy laugh. "I just want to ask you if you've any intentions of a matrimonial sort, you know, toward Marguerite."

"The devil you do!" I exclaimed. "It strikes me that's my business."

"Perhaps it is," he said, with an air of wishing to do me every justice, "perhaps it is, but it's mine, too."

"Indeed," I remarked, feeling that I was unanswerable.

"You see, Austin," cried Forsythe, "when you introduced Dillard and me to Marguerite we both thought you were a trifle gone in that direction, and when I found I thought such a lot of her I couldn't live without her I felt that I had no right to ask for her until I found out whether you wanted her yourself."

"Deuced good of you," I commented, stiffly, seeing he had paused for a reply.

"It only seemed fair to give you the first chance," he finished, looking at me in a hurt sort of a way that made me ashamed of myself.

"You're all right, old boy," I hastened to say. "Forgive me; you took me by surprise. But since you ask me I don't mind saying I never had a thought of marrying Marguerite" (which was true enough, and I'd never thought of any one else marrying her either).

"I'm mighty glad of that," cried Forsythe, joyfully.

"No doubt," I said, a trifle dryly; but he hastened on: "I'm going to take her to a picture exhibit this morning, and thought I'd like to ask her then, if you assured me the field was clear. I hope I have your good wishes, Austin."

"Certainly," I said. "Go ahead and try for her, and good luck go with you, old man."

The painful memory of the grip he gave my hand on leaving still lingered with me when Dillard dropped in an hour later. I gave Dillard the other hand.

"Hullo," he cried. "Busy, Austin?"

"Rather," I returned, shortly. Dillard's only occupation in life is spending an income of forty thousand a year, and it's hard to be glad to see a man like that when you've got your own nose down on the grindstone.

"Just a word in your ear and I'm through," he announced. "It's about Marguerite, you know."

"Marguerite!" I exclaimed, "then you've heard——"

"Heard what," he cried. "Are you engaged to her?"

"Certainly not," I answered, with emphasis; "what made you think that?"

"Oh, I thought you rather fancied her and I'm tremendously glad to hear you don't care about her." (I wasn't aware that I'd said that, but I let it pass.) "She and her aunt are going to take lunch with Forsythe and me to-day, and I thought I might get a chance to try my luck with her then. But as long as you introduced us I thought I ought to give you the first chance."

This sounded familiar—too familiar, in fact.

"Oh, don't mind me," I protested impatiently. "My intentions toward Marguerite are wholly innocuous. Wish you success, Dillard."

I managed to evade his parting handshake, thus saving my fingers a second crushing, and he departed happy.

When I went to lunch and had time to analyze my feelings I found that I resented being forced into posing as a sort of trousered fairy godmother to Marguerite.

Of course as long as I had no intentions whatever of asking her to marry me I could hardly be so absurd as to resent some one else doing so. And certainly Forsythe and Dillard had behaved handsomely—no one could have done more.

But to be asked for my consent to Marguerite's nuptials as though I were her elderly uncle or benevolent maiden aunt was a trifle trying.

At 5 o'clock I was on my way to see her. I felt that however unpleasant my new attitude toward her might be, it at least gave me a right to know which one of my friends she had accepted. By the time I reached the car I was sure it was Forsythe; when I alighted at the corner my mind was made up to accept Dillard as her future husband, and when I entered the door I had come to the conclusion that whichever she took she was undoubtedly doing well for herself.

"What, it is you?" cried Marguerite, when I found her in the library.

"Did you expect some one else?" I asked, scanning her closely. She undoubtedly looked happy.

"You were here yesterday," she replied.

"One good turn deserves another," I said. "Besides I've come to congratulate you."

"Well?" she asked and settled down comfortably to listen. Marguerite is very provoking sometimes. She knew I was all at sea.

"Dillard is a man to be proud of," I hazarded, watching her face.

"Are you proud of him?" she inquired, looking up at me with big questioning eyes. After all the role of fairy godmother to Marguerite wasn't so bad, I reflected, that is, if one couldn't be anything else.

"And his fortune——" I went on, ignoring her question.

"Ah, his fortune—are you proud of that, too?" she asked.

Perhaps it wasn't Dillard after all.

"But Forsythe," I said, shifting my ground, "he is a man in a million."

"Yes, he is," said Marguerite reflectively.

"See here," I cried desperately, "which are you going to marry?"

"The man in a million or the man with a million?" she cried with a saucily lifted chin.

"Yes, which is it to be?" I repeated eagerly.

"Suppose," she said, slowly, "suppose I asked your candid, unprejudiced honest advice?"

"Oh, then I suppose I should have to advise you to take them both."

"Yes, I suppose you would," she assented thoughtfully.

"Or else to refuse them both," I added.

"Ah, suppose I had already done that," she said softly.

I felt my breath fail me suddenly.

"Marguerite!" I cried, and a moment later found myself an engaged man.

"By the way," I remarked as we sat waiting for the pate at Martin's that evening, "how were the pictures?"

"Really I've forgotten," said Marguerite with a happy little sigh. "This has been such a busy day."

"Come to think of it," I replied, "I've had rather a busy day myself."—Chicago Times-Herald.

School Boys as Barometers.

It looked like rain, and naturally he had on a pair of light shoes and carried no umbrella. The car stopped on the far side of Girard avenue and a young lady got in. She bowed, and sat down beside the Saunterer, who recognized in her a school teacher friend.

"What do you think of this beastly weather?" queried he, disgruneedly. "Is it going to rain, or isn't it?"

"I can't tell you to-day," answered the young lady, smiling an acceptance of whatever might come. "If it were a school day, and you were willing to come to school with me, I could tell you in a very few minutes with absolute certainty. It'll sound funny to you, but it's true. I have noticed that you can always tell what the weather is going to do by the children. They're regular barometers. If there's going to be a storm they get restless, and I have the hardest kind of work to control them. Particularly the boys. The girls aren't so bad, but there seems to be some mysterious quality about approaching rain that always affects the former. I've got so now I don't blame them, because I don't believe they can help it. So you see," she concluded, as she got out at Chestnut street, "children have their uses, after all."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Great Pest in South Africa.

One of the greatest pests of south Africa is the locusts, which descend in swarms each year upon the farms of Natal and the Transvaal. They sometimes fly in such numbers that railroad trains are blocked and are forced to wait until the bodies of the insects are shoveled from the tracks. Last year the government of Cape Colony paid out $8,500 for locusts' eggs, at the rate of 12 cents a pound. As it takes 40,000 eggs to weigh a pound an idea of the enormous number destroyed in this way may be gathered. But the locusts are not an unmixed curse. They are eaten by the natives, who say they make delicious food, and all animals, including horses, are said to be fond of them.

Oldest Tree in the World.

The town of Kos, the capital of the small Turkish island of that name lying off the coast of Asia Minor, possesses the oldest tree in the world. Under its shade Hippocrates inculcated his disciples in his methods and views concerning the healing art 2,000 years ago. Tradition carries the age of the tree back to the time of Aesculapius (of whom Hippocrates was a lineal descendant), which would add some 400 years to its age. A great part of the trunk is built round, and there is a fountain known as Hippocrates' Fountain. The circumference of the trunk is 30 feet, and there are two main lower branches, which are supported by masonry columns.

A PECULIAR DISASTER.

Part of a Picturesque Italian City Slid Into the Sea.

In a peculiar manner death came to a number of people at the famous tourist resort of Amalfi, an Italian city situated on the Gulf of Salerno, southeast of Naples. Owing to the action of the water undermining the rock upon which Amalfi stands a portion of the place slipped into the sea, taking with it two hotels, a Capuchin monastery and several villas, and crushing under its enormous weight four vessels, the crews of which fortunately escaped. The number of dead was at first believed to be very large, but, marvelous as it may seem, only ten persons lost their lives. The monastery contained many monks and the hotels many guests, and all of these, together with the occupants of the villas, were at first supposed to be lost. The mass of earth and rock which slipped into the sea is estimated at 50,000 cubic yards and the shock of its rending and crashing into the water shook the principality for miles around. The hotels destroyed are the Cappucini and the Santa Calerina.

Amalfi, the scene of this disaster, is a city of 7,000 souls and has a great antiquity. It took its origin in the fourth century, though its name did not merit the historian's notice until 200 years afterward. It then became an independent republic, with a vast trade with the east, and at the zenith of its power and fame it numbered

CAPUCHIN MONASTERY, WHICH SLID INTO THE SEA.

50,000 souls, with a contributary population in dependent territory of 500,000. During the crusade its inhabitants founded the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, from which the Knights of Malta derived their name. Toward the twelfth century its decline began, partly due to wars with the Pisans and partly to the encroachments of the sea. In 1342 its quays and public works were destroyed by storms and inundations.

Amalfi is now only a shadow of its former self. Its chief industries are the making of paper, soap and macaroni. Amalfi is picturesquely situated and is surrounded by mountains. The Capuchin monastery destroyed dates back to 1212.

MARVELS OF INDIAN MAGICIANS

Wonderful Feat of Which Lord Lytton Was a Witness.

The following story of Indian magic was told me by the person to whom it was told by the late Lord Lytton. I gave it in my own words, for the excellent though humiliating reason that I have mislaid the MSS. When in India Lord Lytton often sought out conjurers, but never saw any but the usual feats, such as the mango tree trick and the basket trick. The method in each case is known, or, at all events, plausible explanations have been given by Mr. Maskelyne and other experts. On one occaison Lord Lytton liked something in the looks of the conjurer who was performing in the open space before his house. After the ordinary exhibition his lordship asked the magician if he could not do something more out of the common way.

The man said he would try, and asked for a ring, which Lord Lytton gave him. He then requested an officer to take in either hand a handful of seeds—one sort was sesame. The name of the other sort my informant did not know. Holding these seeds, and having the ring between his finger and thumb, the officer was to go to a well in the corner of the compound. He was to dispose of the seeds in a certain way—I think on the low wall around the well, into the depths of which he was to throw the ring. All this was done, and then the mage asked Lord Lytton where he would like the ring to reappear. He answered "in his dispatch box," of which the key was attached to his watch chain, or at all events he had it with him on the spot. The dispatch box was brought out, Lord Lytton opened it and there was the ring. This trick would be easy if the British officer was a confederate of the juggler's, and if he possessed a duplicate key to the dispatch box. In that case he would not throw the ring into the well, but would take it into the house, open the box and insert the ring. But this explanation involves enormous improbabilities, while it is unlikely, again, that the conjurer managed to insert a duplicate ring into the dispatch box beforehand. Lord Lytton then asked the juggler if he could repeat the trick. He answered in the affirmative, and a lady lent another ring. Another officer took it, with the seeds, as before, and dropped the ring into the well. The countenance of the juggler altered in the pause which followed. Something, he said, had gone wrong, and he seemed agitated. Turning to the second officer, he asked: "Did you arrange the seeds as I bade you?" "No," said the officer, "I thought that was all nonsense and I threw them away." The juggler seemed horrified. "Do you think I do this by myself?" he said, and packing up he departed.

The well was carefully dragged and at last the lady's ring was brought to the surface. That ring, at least, had certainly been in the water. But had the first ring been as faithfully consigned to the depths? Experts will be of various opinions as to that—yet the hypothesis of confederacy and of a duplicate key to the dispatch box is difficult.—Longman's Magazine.

Power of Imagination.

Everyone knows that the imagination is frequently used by physicians in effecting cures of patients who are suffering from mental and physical disorders. The most successful practitioner is he who possesses the faculty of inspiring confidence in himself to begin with and then in the treatment he advises. A recent number of a psychological journal relates an interesting experiment made by Mr. Slosson with the view of demonstrating how easily this faculty can be called into play.

In the course of a popular lecture he presented to his audience a bottle containing distilled water, which he uncorked with elaborate precautions, and then, watch in hand, he asked those present to indicate the exact moment at which the peculiar odor was perceived by them. Within fifteen seconds those immediately in front of him held up their hands, and within forty seconds those at the other end of the room declared that they distinctly perceived the odor. There was an obstinate minority, largely composed of men, who stoutly declared their inability to detect any odor, but Mr. Slosson believes that many more would have given in had he not been compelled to bring the experiment to a close within a minute of opening the battle, several persons in the front rank finding the odor so powerful that they hastily quitted the lecture-room. It would have been interesting to know the attitude of the audience on learning the liberty that had been taken with their imaginations, but on this point, unfortunately, the report is silent.

PHOTOGRAPHY IN LAWSUITS.

Difficulties in Presenting Evidence Materially Lessened by Camera.

"Photography has reduced the difficulties in lawsuits and trials to a minimum," remarked a member of the bar. "In times past it was the universal custom in murder trials to take the juries to the scenes of the crime, so that they could get a better understanding of the testimony and the facts in the case. Besides the time involved, there was considehable expense in this. there was considerable expense in this. grams, drawings and sketches constantly used in important trials. All this is now done away by the photograph, which is always accurate. In making copies of exhibits in civil causes, notes, deeds, wills and the like the blue print has done away entirely with the services of the draughtsmen who were employed to reproduce the same.

"I remember well the celebrated trial of General Daniel Sickles, then a representative from New York, for the murder of Philip Barton Key, who was the United States districtattorney. The pictorial exhibits in this trial almost filled one of the walls of the courthouse. The clubhouse in the front of which the shooting occurred, now the site of the Lafayette Square opera-house, was, of course, the principal picture. Then there was a drawing of Lafayette square, showing how Key signaled over to Mrs. Sickles, who resided on the opposite side of that square, and a big drawing of the house on Fifteenth street, between K and L streets, where the meetings between Colonel Key and Mrs. Sickles took place, as well as the signals which were displayed on the house indicating to Key whether or not Mrs. Sickles had arrived there. Besides these, there were other pictures and diagrams which were prepared by William Forsyth, the city surveyor. They cost considerable money, but the whole thing could now be better represented at the expense of a couple of dollars and ten minutes' use of a kodak. I have known of hundreds of dollars being expended in the preparation of facsimiles of exhibits, forgeries, etc., all of which can now be reproduced in a half hour by the blue print process and at a very trifling expense comparatively."—Washington Star.

EVANGELIST MOODY.

ONE OF THE GREAT STUDENTS OF HUMANITY.

Incidents of His Early Life and the Cause of His Successful and Remarkable Career—Buried Near the Scene of His Birth.

In the township of Northfield, Conn., is a small elevation known as "Round Top." It is the summit of a gradual rising slope, and is crowned with more than a score of sturdy old pines left from the forests of years ago. In the shade of these trees Dwight L. Moody played when a boy, and on the slope of the hill over which they keep silent sentinel the remains of the great evangelist have been given to the grave. It is a fitting resting-place for a lover of nature and one of the greatest students of humanity. The sighing of the mournful pines faintly echoes the grief of the world that knew him, and the plain, rugged beauty of the surrounding scenery are emblematic of the life and character of the man.

People who have listened to Mr. Moody or who have come within the influence of his personality have wondered why he semed to affect them more than any other person that they had ever heard or seen before. To some small extent this was owing to what is usually called personal magnetism, but the secret of his power lay in the fact that he was one of the greatest students of humanity that the world has ever known; that he could feel, and did feel, as others felt; that he looked upon the practical side of things and used practical means to secure results. He did not fight the devil with snowballs of eloquence, or use soothing lotions upon his seared victims; he fought with fire, and applied the strongest antidotes. He possessed the skill of a general and the tact of a diplomat. He realized that practical work was as necessary as preaching. At one time when he was holding revival meetings in New York City, there was a great cry against the roof gardens. His position on the subject showed the lines of action which he pursued. He said, "We need more roof gardens, but they ought to be on the tops of churches. Every church ought to have a roof garden. Make them as attractive as the beer gardens. Sell lemonade and soft drinks there summer evenings. Have them open every evening. Have songs and sermons."

He was not a highly educated man, nor was he what the world would call eloquent. His power as a speaker lay in the fact that he spoke to his auditors in a manner and in words that they could understand. He was careful never to shoot over their heads, and always endeavored to be entertaining as well as interesting. On account of his plain manner of speaking he was accused on a certain occasion in Boston of lowering the pulpit. This was his reply: "If lowering the pulpit means bringing them to the people I would to God I could! If I wanted to hit Boston you don't think I would mount my guns on Bunker Hill monument and fire into the air, do you?" He made a study of every one that he met. He worked upon humanity through itself. At one time when in Chicago he wished to secure some particular favor from Mr. Armour, who was always a close friend of his. Mr. Moody was always an early riser, but one evening he notified the hotel clerk that he wished to be called unusually early on the following morning. He explained that he wished to call upon Mr. Armour in the morning, and added: "He likes people who get around early." On another occasion when preaching in the slums of a large city he was delayed in leaving the hall till late in the evening. As he left the building a number of roughs were waiting to annoy him. He heard them say, "Here he comes!" and they prepared to jostle him from the sidewalk. He walked directly up to the ringleader, and with the greatest self-possession said: "My friend, won't you just help me on with this overcoat? I am not quite so active now as I was at your age, and some day, when you are as old as I am, I'll be glad to do you the same favor." The bully gracefully held the overcoat, and Mr. Moody, after thanking him, walked on unmolested. Such instances as these show the wonderful tact that the man possessed in handling people.

Beginning His Work.

Mr. Moody began his work as an evangelist in Chicago. He was the teacher of a small Sunday school class, and he determined to reach the children of the slums and streets. He worked among them and used every means to attract them to the Sunday school. Sometimes he attracted them candy, and he had a pony with which he went about the city in search of boys. It is said that he would start out on a recruiting expedition on Sunday morning and return to his Sunday school-room with his pony loaded down with street gamins, and the last enlistments would be hanging on to the pony's tail as they marched along behind. During some of these early Chicago days Mr. Moody would sleep on the benches in the Y. M. C. A. rooms because he had no other place to go. In strange contrast to the many valuable oil paintings which adorn his late home are two plain photographs which occupy prominent places on the wall of his favorite room. One represents 14 ragged and dirty street urchins; the other, 12 of the same group, clean and neatly dressed after they had been under Mr. Moody's instructions for a few weeks.

Mr. Moody will live in memory as one of the greatest, if not the greatest, evangelist of the nineteenth century. He spoke to millions of people, and thousands were brought within the folds of Christianity through his influence. The civilized world has read, and reads, his sermons, and Christendom sings the hymns which he and his fellow worker, Sankey, composed. He aided in the erection of dozens of Y. M. C. A. buildings. The Christian, but non-sectarian, schools at Mt. Hermon and Northfield, Conn., were founded and supported by Mr. Moody, and are now among the most flourishing educational institutions in this country. Hundreds of young men and women are educated there each year. The institutions are so endowed and provided for that the death of their founder will not impair their usefulness.

DUKE OF WESTMINSTER.

An Eccentric Character and One of England's Wealthiest Men.

By the death of the Duke of Westminster, an eccentric member of England's nobility and one of the country's wealthiest men passed away. The Duke, besides owning 600 acres of London realty, had 300,000 acres in the country which gave him an income of $3,750,000. His London holdings were worth probably $150,000,000.

The late Duke succeeded his father as third marquis in 1869. He had sat in the House of Commons for many years, and formed close political associations with Mr. Gladstone, whose neighbor he was in the country, Hawarden and Eaton Hall, where he lived, being adjacent estates. Mr. Gladstone added the highest title of the dukedom in 1874.

Though he devoted himself to fostering the development of his estate in the spirit of a wise economy, the Duke took an active interest in the lighter diversions of English country life. He was an ardent sportsman, and the Eaton stables are among the most famous establishments of their kind.

The Duke was rather careless and shabby in his dress, and his life at Eaton Hall was that of an ordinary country gentleman. To his household the Duke was ever an enigma. He rarely spoke to his house servants, but with such personages as his head coachman and stud groom he was on most affable and confidential terms.

The heir to the dukedom, with all of its vast wealth, is the late Duke's grandson, Viscount Belgrave, now in South Africa, an aid-de-camp of Sir Alfred Milner, the Governor of Cape Colony.

NEW FIRE-ESCAPE TRUCK.

A Telescoping Extensible Steel Shaft Which Is Pneumatically Extended.

No great improvement in fire ladders has been made for some time, the hook and ladder truck having retained its present character for many years. In a new and apparently practicable patented improvement in fire escape trucks the familiar ladder is replaced by a telescoping extensible steel shaft which is pneumatically extended, resembling when extended an elongated pole with many sections. At the top of this steel column is a bracket arm from which swings a basket supported on ropes, in which the fire-bound victims make their descent to the ground. This device is the invention of Henry A. Lades and William C. Parsons, of Binghamton, N. Y. Provision is also made for tilting the steel shaft so as to throw the basket directly in front of the windows where it is required. With a fire-proof basket and rope it is possible for women and children to make their escape from the upper stories of blazing buildings under circumstances where it would be necessary for a fireman to go up a ladder and assist or carry them to the ground. Furthermore, this arrangement can be operated as readily and with as great speed and be made with as great a reach as the longest ladders.

EXTENSIBLE STEEL SHAFT FIRE ESCAPE.

Words Often Mispronounced.

Carnegie (Andrew), Kar-NEG-e ("e" in second syllable as in ebb).

E-ther and ne-ther are preferred to i-ther and ni-ther by Webster, Walker, and Smart.

Room, soot, roof, broom, and soon have long sound of oo, as in food; many give incorrect sound, as in foot.

Decollete da-kol-TA ("o" as in "old"), not da-KOL-ta.

Bap-tis-ter-i, not bap-tis-tri.

Canton—In China, Kai-TON, in the United States, KAN-ton.

Krupp is pronounced as Kroop (oo same as in "ooze").

Nigaragua is pronounced Ne-ka-RA-gwa.

Irrevocable—Ir-REV-o-ka-ble, not ir-re-VO-ka-bl.

Patriotism is pa-tri-ot-ism, not pat-ri-ot-ism.

Figaro is fe-ga-RO, not FE-ga-ro.

Herculaneum is properly her-ku-LA-ne-um ("a" in accented syllable same as in "ask").

Vagary is va-GA-ri, not VA-ga-ri.

Wilhelm is pronounced Vil-helm.—Indianapolis Press.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

God's Son.—A man is God's son, that is why it pays to save him.—Rev. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

The Living Christ.—The living Christ must go with us into the factory, the shop, the store, must sit with us in the office, the legislative hall and the home.—Rev. Albert Hyde, Congregationalist, Toledo, Ohio.

The World.—The world was made that we might be born. We are born that we may know the Creator both of the world and of ourselves, viz., God.—Rev. J. J. Williams, R. C., Archbishop of Boston, Mass.

The Bible.—The Bible is a book which never goes wrong about pride, lust and vanity, about submission, reverence and love—it's teachings shine bright on these subjects.—Rev. H. R. Rose, Universalist, Auburn, N. Y.

Christian Era.—The history of the Christian era is replete with demonstration that rebellion against the religious beliefs of the fathers is "the seed of the church."—William G. Ewing, Christian Scientist, Chicago, Ill.

The Home.—A man may scoff at religion, but he loves his home. He may be indifferent as to the affairs of state, but his thoughts will be upon his home and those awaiting him there.—Rev. C. C. Rowlinson, Independent, Indianapolis, Ind.

Jesus Christ.—As Christ is the source, so he is the active principle by which the world exists. The physical universe is bound to God as closely as body is bound to the soul, and the bond that unites them is Jesus Christ.—Rev. C. M. Jacobs, Lutheran, Philadelphia, Pa.

Communism.—Communism was not a law, but the love which prompted it was, and is as much needed in the stress of present conditions as in the emergency which afforded an opportunity for its exhibition in the early days of the church.—Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Christian Church, Chicago, Ill.

Witness to Christ.—If a man can come honestly before God, and by faith take this spirit of power, God will use him as a witness. That is all we have to do—not to win him, not to save the world, but to witness to Jesus Christ, and through the witness, God will do the work.—Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Poor Preaching.—The reading of pointless essays by some pulpits and the wishy washy preaching of others have doubtless disgusted some men, but as a whole the pulpit is certainly abreast the times intellectually and the undisputed leader of every moral and reform movement.—Rev. H. E. Foss, Methodist, Bangor, Me.

The Word "Ought."—We make constant use of the word "ought"—and a most weighty word it is. What does it mean? It implies obligation. When you say I ought to do such a thing you mean I am under obligation to do it. If I fail to do it, I am false to some obligation; I violate some law.—Rev. S. W. Reigart, Presbyterian, Salisbury, Md.

Society.—Some one claims that society is divided in three parts; the lowest stage is seen when but one word is the motto, "Live;" that the second and higher is seen in this, "Live and let live," but the third and highest, which reveals the high-tone mission of Jesus, is "Live, and help others to live."—Rev. S. A. Northrop, Baptist, Kansas City, Mo.

Materialism.—The masses hold aloof from both the church and the synagogue. There is no denying this. Let me confine myself to the synagogue. We cannot attract the masses. What may the cause be? I have not time to dilate upon them. The materialism of the age—people care for things, not thoughts.—Rev. J. Stolz, Hebrew, Chicago, Ill.

Appeal to the Cross.—Whatever higher conceptions may have followed the first appeal of the cross, through Christ's sacrificial death, was the man's conscious need of forgiveness and to just the extent that his sense of unworthiness has grown has he magnified the value of the sufferings of his Lord.—Rev. A. Y. Raymond, Congregationalist, Schenectady, N. Y.

Work of the Church.—Young Men's Christian Associations and Institutes and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, with the moral and physical forces of the church rightly applied, will perpetuate the grandest conception of God for man, and, high over all, the "preaching of the cross, which is the power of God unto salvation."—Rev. W. H. Tubb, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Broadening Humanity.—At the present time we find the highly educated man linking his knowledge to the ignorance of the world, and by so doing broadening humanity. It is this man who realizes his powers and duty when brought into touch with the social responsibilities. Without this social service culture would vanish, knowledge gradually die away, and the whole life shrink and be shut in.—Rev. J. S. Penman, Bangor, Me.

Problem of the Church.—The problem of the church is that of reaching people for the highest good. This includes method. Method in church work is as important as doctrine. It requires a social conscience, the practice of brotherhood and a knowledge of men. It demands a living pulpit, alive with truth, not loaded with dogmas long dead, but an active, aggressive ministry.—Rev. W. Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

His Benefactor.

"Every old maid has at least one consolation."

"And what's that, pray?"

"She has helped some man to enjoy single blessedness."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A Gentle Hint.

"Dreaming of the future?" he asked, as the conversation lapsed for the fifth time.

"Yes," she replied. "I find it much pleasanter than living in the present."—Philadelphia North American.

THURSDAY....JANUARY 18, 1900.

Effects of High Freight.

Dealers in agricultural products like hay, oats, wheat etc. are just now confronted by a serious difficulty in the sharp rise in frieght rates on the railroads. This is especially true of the hay dealer. All farmers know that frieght east to New England where most of the hay goes, has been very high. Compare the price of hay with the cost per ton for frieght. The frieght rate has been generally for some time $4.90 a ton from here to Boston. But just now the roads have agreed on a heavy advance and have added $1.10 to the former rate so that now the freight on each ton of hay sent from here to Boston is $6, a sum greater than the farmer sometimes gets for his hay. This seems a high price and it will certainly work against the farmer, and still more against the hay buyer who ships his hay east. As the shipper must now buck against a frieght charge of $6 a ton, he cannot pay as high for his hay as before, and he must either go out of business and leave the farmer so far without a market or he must be able to get his hay at a lower price. This means, of course, that the farmer must take a lower price for his hay, or it will be left on his hands. Of course, the hay dealer who does not ship east, but sells at home does not have this extra high frieght to contend against but can pay nearer the old price, because the frieght rate does not touch him. But the local or home dealers cannot use all the hay raised, and therefore, the farmer, as noted before, finds a glutted market. It is a serious question to all soncerned, for there seems no way of overcoming the difficulty except for the farmer to take less for his crop If he does not then the shipper goes out of business. It is one of the many new economic problems now forcing themselves on the producing men and the business public.

Christian Smith, O. K.

After publishing a detailed account in last Thursdays DAILY of the misfortunes of our old friend Christain Smith at Leo we were surprised and greatly pleased to see him come into the office yesterday, smiling, happy and sound. He had just learne of his having had a stroke of paralysis and all the details of it for on his way to Auburn he had just met his daughter on her way down to see him, and find out how serious his condition was, of course he was greatly surprised to hear of the matter as he has been in better health than usual at the time, and is feeling as active as ever Somebody must have invented an elaborate story, or else some sickness of that sort has happened to some other person and the names got mixed. Our informant was S. Shumaker who is administrator of the estate of the late Andrew Smith of Fairfield and he certainly believed the story and he gave it with a great deal of earnestness. Not only did the story appear but it had gone into the first run of the Weekly before Mr. Smith came in. Readers of the Weekly will have a chance to see both accounts. Mr. Smith got a copy of the Daily containing the item and went off happy that it was all a mistake.

OBITUARY.

Ralph M. Hartman, little son of Joseph and Eliza Hartman, was born November 10, 1891, and died December 28, 1899, aged eight years, one month and eighteen days. His disease was what the doctors called membraneous diphtheria. He was sick for about three weeks, and the last week he lived he suffered a great deal, but he never murmered or complained. Ralph was a bright, sweet child and loved by all who knew him. He always loved his books and liked to go to school. He loved to go to Sabbath school for he always loved his teacher.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hartman desire to express their sincere thanks to their neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy during the sickness and death of their little son Ralph. Their kindness will ever be remembered.

—The K. of P. Lodge will elect one trustee at their next regular meeting, Friday evening Jan. 19th.

About the Court House.

After a trial lasting five days, including the time taken up in their deliberations, the jury in the case of Jones, Witter & Co. vs. Lettie Austin and Callie R. Brenner brought in a verdict for the plaintiffs for $355 against Mrs. Brenner, but not against Mrs. Austin. Thirty days were given defendants' attorneys in which to file a bill of exceptions from rulings made by the trial judge.

In the case of Amelia Kraus vs. Rose Venderly and others, for partition of real estate, Judge Bratton decided that the property could not be divided without injury and ordered that it be sold. Frank L. Welsheimer was appointed commissioner with bond of $6,000.

Judge Bratton came down from Angola on the forenoon train, the jury being called for 1 o'clock. The case of Bachtel vs. Harshbarger, on account, appealed from the justice court of Esquire Walter, was postponed on account of illness of the plaintiff. A number of state and civil cases are on the calendar for jury and court trials this week.

Judge Bratton has disposed several cases in addition to those already mentioned.

Gust Long, a young man arrested a few days ago on a charge of petit larceny, came into court and entered a plea of guilty. He was given a sentence of ninety days in jail and fined $1.

John Smith was arrested at Ashley yesterday on a charge of larceny and after being brought here gave bond in the sum of $200 for his appearance for trial tomorrow. Sheriff Snyder has been summoned to bring one of his prisoners here from Angola as a witness in the case.

The case against Walter Eberly, for forgery, has been postponed until the March term, owing to the absence of the principal witness for the prosecution, Royal Fisk.

When the case of the State vs. James Beaty, charged with petit larceny, was called, a motion was made for a change of venue to another judge. This was granted and P. V. Hoffman appointed to try the case, which is in progress as we go to press. Four members of the regular jury were excused. Prosecutor Rhoads and Deputy Pomeroy are for the state, while defendant's interests are looked after by D. D. Moody and C. E. Emanuel.

The trial of Beaty for stealing turkeys went on yesterday afternoon as noted in the DAILY. It will be remembered we published an account of the affair at the time which was sometime in September last. Judge Roby was obliged to get another man to try it, as he had, while he was prosecuting attorney a few years ago, prosecuted Beaty for assault and battery. So Mr. Hoffman was chosen to preside.

The first witnesses were the complainant Mr. Driver, then his wife and next the 16-year old daughter, Evalene. The substance of all was that the Drivers had missed a great many turkeys, but could get no clue to the thieves. They got a big dog to help watch, and had him tied near the barn. On the night they found Beaty there, all the family had gone to bed except the girl Evolene, and quite late she went out to the barn to shut the cows into the pen, and hurried to the house. As the night was clear she noticed someone disturbing the turkeys that were roosting on the log hog pen. She saw there two men, and one, she thought, was Jim Beaty. She hurried to the house, awoke Mr. and Mrs. Driver, and they dressed and ran out, Mrs. D. going out the south door while the girl and her father went north toward the barn. It appears Mrs. Driver got out in time to see two men, one running away, and the other who she says was Beaty, carrying two turkeys by the legs, both in one hand. She says he stepped on their heads to kill them and threw them into the weeds. She asked him about it, and about that time Driver came up with the dog and gun. She asked Beaty why he took the turkeys; told her they were her turkeys. She might take them and eat them. He then went away and took the turkeys, which had had their throats cut. They had Beaty arrested, and also Norman Donaldson believing he was the man who ran away.

Today, the defense put on many witnesses to break the force of Driver's testimony by showing he had a bad reputation for truth. Some said this was so, some said they did not know.

Donaldson was put on the stand and said he and Beaty had ridden from Auburn, that evening, with Mr. Ferguson and when they got out of the wagon to walk the rest of the way home they passed by a lot of Driver's ducks. and Beaty said if they had been turkeys, he would like to have a couple, and intimated that he thought he could get some of Driver's turkeys. Donaldson says he told him he better keep out of such things. Witness said he and Beaty were not drunk in Auburn before going home. Said he was not with Beaty after the latter started toward his own home, but went on to his father's and staid all night. Know nothing about stealing the turkeys except hearsay.

At noon the testimony was done, and the arguments go on, as we go to press.

Several civil cases have been disposed of by Judge Bratton. That of Oliver P. Learned vs. Sallie Skinner and others, to quiet title, was decided for the plaintiff, the defendants failing to appear.

Albert J. and Warren Mason vs. Benjamin D. Moore et al., on mortgage; dismissed and costs paid.

Michael Teutsch was given judgment for $70.13 against George B. Soule on note. No defense was made.

The Chapter Installation.

Wm. Hacker Chapter No. 63, installed its officers last evening, and the occasion was made memorable by a large gathering of the Companions living in this place, Garrett and Waterloo. In fact, the officers were divided pretty equally between the three towns.

By 8 p. m. the Masonic hall was well filled with members of the order, their wives and a few invited guests, for the installation was a public one. Hon. T. R. Marshall of Columbia City, was present and as deputy grand high priest, took the principal part in the installation. L. W. Nichols of Aurora, Ill., was also present and assisted as grand Captain of the Hosts. The rites, were as usual, very solemn and impressive, and doubly so in the hands of Mr. Marshall who is evidently a "master" in the work.

The officers installed were: W. H. Leas, Waterloo, High Priest; A. F. Halter, Garrett, King; G. W. Lackey, Auburn, Scribe; T. H. Sprott, Auburn, Secretary; H. W. Thomas, Garrett, Captain of the Hosts; D. E. Caruth, Auburn, Royal Arch Captain; J. G. Philbrick and J.E. Andrews of Garrett, and J. F. Knott, Waterloo, Masters; S. C. Dickinson, Garrett, Guard.

After Mr. Leas had taken charge as High Priest, he announced that refreshments would be next in order. However, on learning that the banquet had been arranged for ten o'clock, there was a half hour or so spent in a social way, and then all went to the Presbyterian church where a fine banquet was served in most excellent taste. There were seventy three plates and the guests were served in four courses. At the conclusion Mr. Leas announced that a few speeches would be in order, and called first on Mr. Marshall, who responded in his usual ready and eloquent manner. Many had never before the pleasure of listening to him, and were delighted with his extemporaneous effort. Rev J. N. Wilson was called, and responded in a fitting and most sensible speech, giving his idea of what Masonry meant and should be. Both gentlemen were liberally cheered. After a few remarks by the newly installed high priest, the meeting adjourned.

It might be mentioned that J. L. Davis and D. A. Garwood were not inducted into their offices, as the former was sick, and the latter absent, reaching the meeting when the installation was closing. Mr. Davis is treasurer and Mr. Garwood P. S.

Those who came over from Garrett were: Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Halter, Herschel W. Thomas and his mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Philbrick, Mr and Mrs. H. E. Sarber, Mr. and Mrs. C. H Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Moughler, J. E. Andrews, W. O. Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Snyder, Mrs. Frank Kircher and daughter and C. J. Casper.

From Waterloo were: Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Leas, Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Leas, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Speer, Dr. and Mrs. Broughton and J. F. Knott.

Club Notes.

The second guest day of the L. L. C. for the club year was held at the home of Mrs. Lackey last Saturday. Quite a goodly number were present, although several of the members were absent on account of sickness, and the program was not fully carried out as printed on that account. Character Study—James Barrie, was given by Mrs. Guild, this was followed by a dissussion by the members. "Review of the Little Minister," by Miss Hague was enjoyed by all. Miss Margaret Buckley gave a paper entitled "A Mad Rush for Popularity." This was followed by a discussion by both members and guests. The meeting was adjourned for a social hour, during which time light refreshments were served, consisting of raisins, nut cakes and Russian tea. The club will meet with Mrs. Hortense Robbins next Saturday.

BUTLER.

Henry Aldrich is reported as slowly improving with increased hopes for recovery.

Edwin Packet, living at the west end, is in very poor health with poor hopes of improvement.

Rev. McClos continues his revival effort at the U. B. church with some substantial success.

The type made me say several things wrong last week. It was Frank Good who moved to town instead of Grant Good. It was Mrs. John Rudd who was elected superintendent of the Sunday school, instead of Tom Rudd.

The directors of the canning factory are still wrestling with the Curtis defalcations. The more probing done the more deficiencies are discovered; but with all the misfortunes they expect to clean away the decks for another vigorous forward movement.

Ed. Showalter, living on north Main street, had a close call from fire last week. In the absence of the family, the house caught fire from an overheated stove pipe, and was well under way when discovered by neighbors. About one-third of the household goods were destroyed and the house damaged to the amount of $150, which was covered by insurance in J. A. Campbell's agency. There was no insurance on contents, but kind friends made good a part of their loss. Mr. and Mrs. Showalter are worthy young people just starting in life, and their loss occurring as it did in winter makes it a great hardship for them.

OBITUARY.

Newton Grant Shaffer was born in Campaign county, Ohio, May 15, 1868, died in Jackson, Mich., Jan. 10, 1900. Aged 31 years, 7 months and 25 days.

He was the youngest child of Jacob B and Matilda Shaffer, and one of a family of fourteen children, ten girls and four boys. At the age of nine months his parents and family came to Waterloo where he grew to manhood. He was orphaned by the death of his mother while very young, but at the age of six, his father was again married to Mary Walkley, his present wife. July 2, 1874, who cared for him during his childhood.

About fourteen years ago he went out into the world for himself and followed various occupations with varied and for several years past has resided at Jackson. Mich., engaged in the butcher business. Two years ago he became the victim to that insiduous disease, la grippe, which fastened itself upon the lungs and other vital organs to which he at last succumbed after a lingering illness. He leaves to mourn him, his father, step-mother, seven sisters, one brother and a half brother. Cottage services were held on the 13th inst., at the home of his parents in Waterloo, conducted by Rev. W. O. Butler. Interment in the Waterloo cemetery.

ENGAGEMENT BROKEN OFF

A girl in Montgomery broke her engagement with one of the wealthiest young men in the county, because he had indigestion so bad he was a menace to her happiness and no good to himself. What a relief just one bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin would have been to that man, and what a boon it is today to many a household, where it keeps all the family in a state of health that warrants true love, confidence and happiness in the home. Try it yourself. At H. B. McCord's.

A PROMINENT LAWYER.

Of Greenville, Ill., Mr. C. E. Cook, writes- "I have been troubled with billiousness, sick headache, sour stomach, constipation, etc., for several years I sought long and tried many remedies, but was disappointed until I tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I can cheerfully recommend it to any suffering from above complaints." H. B. McCORD.

The Road, Poll and Dog tax are included in first installment.

Taxes of 1899 are due the first day of January, 1900, and may be paid in full or in two installments. The first installment must be paid on or before the first Monday in May, 1900; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1900. If the first installment is not paid when due both installments become delinquent. Ten per cent will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of property.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty and charges on delinquent taxes resulting from any omission of the person paying to state definitely on what property, in whose name and in what township and corporation it was assessed.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once. The law is of such a character that there is no option left to the Treasurer but to enforce the collection of delinquent taxes, however much he may regret to collect the same by sale of property.

"The owner of property on the first day of April of each year shall be liable for the taxes of that year. The purchaser of property on the first day of April shall be considered the owner on that day."

Examine your receipts before leaving the office and see that all your property is included.

No county order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of land and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday in February, 1900.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days. We have 6,000 receipts to make, and all cannot be made in the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the first Monday in May and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipts will be made out for any party until they are ready to pay.

Assignees, guardians, administrators, and others who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as individual estates, etc., are earnestly requested to settle such taxes before the last few days as it requires considerable time to make the divisions and separate receipts therefor. As the Treasurer cannot know the location of each person's property, taxpayers should designate the property on which they wish to pay taxes and see that all property is specified on their receipts. If they have land in more than one township or town, or desire to pay taxes on lands not in their name, call the Treasurer's attention to the matter.

FRANCIS M. HINES, Treasurer

Examine receipt before leaving office, see if all personal property is included

Monday's Daily.

—R. O. Talbert of Richland was in town today.

—P. D. West is erecting a new barn on his property on south Main street. P. D. has a good horse and will show a fine turnout in the spring.

—Last fall apples were shipped out of Goshen to Chicago in car loads lots; now they are shipped in there from Chicago and are selling at a high figure.

—Miss Mary Beuret went to Fort Wayne this afternoon to visit friends and attend the funeral of Bishop Rademacher which will be held tomorrow.

—Mexico is one of our best customers for sewing machines. The Indian women, always noted for their fine needle work, are now taking to machines.

—John Koons is temporarily occupying the west room of the Huelsenbeck building, where he is making several large tables to be used in the new sample rooms at the Swineford Hotel.

—J. A. Lambert of Rachel, N. C. writes: 'I heartily endorse Foley's Kidney Cure. It does what you claim it will do, and there is nothing equal to it and I thank you for the good it has done me." H. B. MCCORD.

—A letter from the Editor's brother who was here last week, says his team failed to meet him at the station and he walked home five miles in the storm and mud of a dark evening, and got there fresh as a daisy. He is over 71.

—All over the state the bids of foreign firms for county printing seem to be too high for the appropriation. The appropriation is probably about right. We do not believe an ordinary county should need over $1,600 worth.

—James Farmer, who has charge of a force of men building new telephone lines for the United States company in Northwestern Ohio, has been at home several days visiting his family. He will leave this evening for VanWert where the company is doing considerable work.

—Prof. M. H. Kasper, Evangelical Lutheran Seminary, Addison, Ill., writes:—I had been suffering for some time with severe pains in my lungs, and coughed almost constantly. One bottle Beggs' Cherry Syrup entirely cured me." It is guaranteed to cure, has never failed.—H. B. McCORD.

Tuesday's Daily.

—C. C. Buss went into our honor roll of 1900 Monday.

—John M. Ketcham is one of the latest of our new subscribers to the Weekly.

—Thomas Summers is the next lucky man to go on our list of 1900 and has thanks for same.

—J. B. Bryant of Artic and Abram Sherck of Concord townships have gone onto our 1900 list.

—South Bend wants the democratic state convention and offers $1,000 in cash as an inducement.

—Mike Kiplinger of Waterloo spent Sunday here in the family of his daughter, Mrs. Ralph Thomas.

—There is but one Russ' Bleaching Blue. Three times within a year the courts have suppressed fraudulent imitations.

—Mr. Albert Guilford of Sherwood, O., is here visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Guilford, and also other relatives.

—John Ketel, the ice hauler, brings word that the roads are pretty bad. Not broken through fully, but very tough and deep.

—Only one marriage license was issued by County Clerk Long last week, the parties being Edward C. Lines and Estella M. Voss.

—Mrs. T. R. Marshall accompanied her husband last evening on his visit here to assist in the installation of the Chapter officers.

—You take no chances when you buy Russ' Bleaching Blue. This famous article makes clothes whiter than snow. Refuse imitations.

—Chapped hands, cracked lips and roughness of the skin cured quickly by Banner Salve, most healing ointment in the world. H. B. MCCORD.

—Thomas M. Reed was yesterday elected chairman of the Noble county republican committee, J. M. Maine in Whitley, and C. C. Gilham in Lagrange.

—FOR SALE:—A good nine-room house with woodshed, summer kitchen and good barn. About four blocks from public square, Auburn. Inquire at this office. d & wtf.

—The "Immortal J. N." is quoted as having said; "There is no record that I am insane and no proof that I am sane, so what the devil will we do with the pressure."

—Mrs. Mary Boyer will be home on Thursday evening. Mrs. Fildes saw her yesterday and this is now the time set. Her many friends will be glad to hear of it.

—This year's conference of the Methodist church will be held at Elkhart, April 4, and the people there have already begun their preparations for the event.

—Save doctors' bills by giving Foley's Honey and Tar to infants and children in time to prevent pneumonia or croup, which are fatal to so many thousands of babies. H. B. MCCORD, DRUGGIST.

—It takes as much genius to bake a finely flavored nutritious cracker as it does to paint a picture or write a poem. "Fox's "Forex" Butter Crackers are above criticism because there's genius in the bake shop from which they come.

—As seen in our report of the Auburn sewer system, the total length of sewers in the town is eleven and three-tenth miles. In other words, if put in a straight line it would reach from the court house to Hudson.

—Rev. J. A. Krum was in town today visiting his cousin Fred Krum of this place. His home is at Hudson, where he has been for some years. He was at one time a teacher in this county and of course he called on his old friend the editor.

—"I strongly recommend Beggs' Cherry Cough Syrup; it cured me of a throat and lung trouble of many years' standing."-Mrs. J. Bremen, Rifle, Colo. Cures coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, la grippe, pneumonia, whooping-cough, croup and consumption.

—Rev. James B. Tims, of Allokchi, Checotah Nation, I. T. says of Begg,s Blood Purifier, the great blood remedy and system regenerator: "Both myself and wife were entirely cured of bad case of scrofula by it." A guaranteed remedy, of sterling merit. Sold by H. B. McCord.

—Congressman Robinson is working to obtain permission from the war department to have the body of General Lawton lie in state one day at Fort Wayne, on its way from San Francisco to Washington. If the request is granted, a great throng of people will go to Fort Wayne that day.

—Mr. Arlen's little boy, like many other little folks, finds it hard work to distinguish clearly between names and terms that are allied in business and nature. For instance, he meant the "Masons" when he remarked yesterday, that his papa would be at the masonic meeting in the evening, only that "he was not a plasterer."

—D. Z. Hoffman says his last letter from T. P. Scott says, at that date, January 7, they had sleighing in Cleveland. Mrs. Scott's health at that time was slightly improved, though she has been poorly for some time. Mr. Scott renews his subscription to the old Auburn home paper, the COURIER, and we hope its weekly visits may be a comfort to both of them.

—Goshen Democrat:—B. J. Jarrett, the traveling salesman, went east on a business trip today. He says he saw a peculiar fire in Garrett Saturday. An oil wagon was driven up to a store and some oil drawn from the big tank. A few drops fell upon some burning paper ignited and communicated with the oil in the tank and the whole lot including the wagon soon burned up.

El Paso, Ark., Jan. 10, 1899.

After having spent ten years suffering, the doctors finally confessed they were unable to cure me or do me any good. I moved to Texas in search of health, but found it not. One day, while suffering intensely, a lady brought me a bottle of Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier and insisted that I take it. Without faith, I began to take the medicine, and to my glad surprise I found, before I had taken one-half of a 50c bottle, I began to improve. After taking four or five bottles I became well —LULA BERRY.

WORRYING ABOUT TRIFLES.

FROM time immemorial women have been told—by women as well as men, though naturally more often by the latter—that worry digs wrinkles in their faces and sprinkles gray among their tresses. Those warnings do little good. The fair creatures go on worrying and will probably continue to do so until the millennium comes. The Detroit Free Press asks why this is so, and then proceeds to answer its own question in this way. The question of worry with women seems to be simply this: Women are so hedged about by the littleness of their protected lives—for it is the protected woman who does the most worrying—that it is hard to see beyond and above sometimes, and matters in this way get wholly out of focus. If women had the capacity with men of getting up and doing battle with things worry would slip off their shoulders as easily as from off those of the average masculine. Man doesn't woryy about debt, because he feels that he has it within him (since money-making is his business) to make sufficient money to pay his debts—some time. Women look at it more practically and consider the now.

Man doesn't generally worry about his health, because he really has not the time. Let him become ill, though, and have to stop his work, and how is it with him? Man doesn't worry about the future—he is so madly interested in the present; nor about his clothes, for the tailor stands between him and that; nor about home matters—they, from his point of view, are too trivial—until he comes home to a badly cooked dinner, and then in his broad outlook there is no excuse for this state of things, for in business circles if an employe does not do his work properly his employer gets some one who can, a method that will yet come to be a powerful lever in the leveling of woman's worries.

Miss Adah Roberts.

In point of human interest, Miss Adah Roberts, daughter of the Utah Congressman who has been excluded from the House, is the central figure among the female portion of governmental circles. Whatever may be said of Mr. Roberts and his policy, the universal verdict in regard to his daughter is that she is on of the most charming, beautiful and intellectual young women who have located at the capital in recent years. She is tall and straight as one of the pines of her native mountains. Her complexion is that of rare white and pink seldom seen in the crowded Eastern cities. She moves with the grace of a queen, and, although barely 20, her self-possession is that of an experienced woman of the world. When 17 she graduated with high honors from the State University at Salt Lake City. For two years she taught in the public schools. When her father decided to run for Congress she relinquished her position to become his private secretary. Her gentle dignity and kindliness have gained whatever of courtesy and fair hearing has been accorded to her father's cause.

MISS ADAH ROBERTS.

Formality of Calling.

During an ordinary afternoon call the hostess rises to receive each guest. She makes sure that each one who enters has a seat. If there are so many in the room as to prevent general conversation, she talks with the latest arrival. When any of her guests depart she arises, but does not go to the door with them. It is not necessary for those who have first called, when there are several persons in the room, to hasten away on the arrival of newcomers, although generally they should not outsit the latter. Ladies who are calling do not arise on the entrance or departure of other callers, except in the case of the very aged. A general bow on entering or departing should include all in the room. A formal call should never be less than fifteen minutes in length, nor should it often be much longer. Cards are seldom sent into the drawing room, but are better left on a salver in the hall. A lady must never forget to leave a card for each lady in the family on which she is calling. A wife leaves her husband's card, motherless daughters their father's, but brothers and sons are supposed to leave cards in person. In some places one may call from 2 to 6, in others, 3 to 5, but the best hours are from 4 to 6.—Leah Lanceford, in Woman's Home Companion.

Flirting Proves Vulgarity.

The ethics of flirtation have yet to be defined, but the results are tolerably well proved. Now and then an arrant flirt may marry happily, but these cases are exceptional. The man who is weak-minded enough to be seriously smitten by the coquetries of a flirt is rarely good material out of which to make a husband. But most flirts remain unmarried, or marry in despair some man for whom they don't care an atom, because marrying men as a rule either leave them severely alone, or take them at their own value and consider a flirt just good enough to flirt with.

"A youth of folly, an old age of cards," might be adopted as the flirt's motto, as it is her usual fate. That flirting is foolish would probably check scarcely any; that it may develop into a tragedy if the flirt is caught unaware in a grande passion which is not returned may possibly give pause to a few; that it is essentially vulgar and the hall-mark of a vulgar mind may perhaps induce the majority to discard the practice if they have hitherto been inclined to it, says the London Pictorial. It has been well said that flirting is an education in flippancy, lightness of manners and hardness of heart, and that as practiced to-day it is not readily distinguished from general bad manners.

The Youngest Commissioner.

Miss Elsie Reasoner, the celebrated war correspondent and only American woman who witnessed the coronation of Queen Wilhelmina, is the recipient of new honors, as she is the youngest member of the Paris commission, being the Chicago representative of the Associated Press at the French capital. The New York and London offices will be represented by experienced men, but this young girl with twenty summers to her credit was unanimously chosen for this responsible position by the manager of the three departments, as she has fully demonstrated her ability as a correspondent.

MISS REASONER.

Has Given Away Her Fortune.

Mrs. Leland Stanford writes to friends in Washington that she has now disposed of every vestige of the enormous fortune bequeathed to her by the late Senator Stanford, and has recently signed deeds transferring all his real estate to the trustees of Leland Stanford University. This includes the largest cattle ranches, horse-breeding establishments and vineyards in the world, with various farms, country houses and large tracts of wild land. The deed covered sixty-six pages of typewritten manuscript and required $7,000 in internal revenue stamps. Mrs. Stanford had previously transferred to the trustees of the university all her personal estate, embracing stocks and bonds valued at $15,000,000, and, so far as the actual ownership of property is concerned, she is now as destitute as the day on which she was born. She has a contract, however, with the trustees, under which she is to receive for life, an annuity of $25,000, to be used as she pleases, and all her relatives were liberally provided for in Mr Stanford's will.

Change Is a Good Tonic.

A change of scenery, fresh faces, or a good blow of fresh air is worth all the tonics in the world to a woman whose face is beginning to look old, or who is nervous and tired, and gives a prettier glow to the cheeks than the finest rouge in existence.

Obesity goes a long way to making a woman look older than she really is, and it is the encouragement of indolent habits which allows obesity to gain the ascendency over elasticity. A person whose mind and body are ever on the alert will seldom have recourse to diet or science to decrease her size and weight, and at the same time she will keep her youthful appearance.—Detroit News.

Dainty Stationery.

Stationery at one time might have been a luxury—now it is a necessity. One is not in good form using cheap paper, and nothing is criticised more than the paper used in correspondence. A good or bad impression is formed by the stationery one uses. To be quite up-to-date the fashionable young woman will invest at once in French organdy, the dull gray, with hair line white border being the height of elegance, although the blue tints are much liked by the younger element in society.

HOME-MADE WINDMILLS.

IN NO State throughout the Union is American ingenuity—and Yankee ingenuity, at that—shown to finer advantage than in Nebraska, where home-made windmills, constructed at a slight cost, do the work of mill-made machines for which a much larger price is asked. New England and the Middle States, says the New York Press, might just as well as not claim some of the credit for the inventiveness and power of adaptation which these Western farmers display, for the farmers came from the East, or their fathers did, and the farmers of the West haven't a much harder row to hoe than the farmer of the rocky hills of New England.

These Nebraska folk can take a wornout mower and a few boards which have dropped off the pig sty and make out of them a windmill that will insure them profit, even if in the long, clear summers the sky refuses to "give down." The labor can be put in when nothing more profitable is to be done than praying for rain, and the ridiculous sum of a dollar or so pays all the money outlay necessary.

Erwin Hinckley Barbour, in a bulletin from the University of Nebraska, in Lincold, tells of the Nebraska farmer's marvelous manner of making the means fit the end. Not only is water provided for irrigation, but stock is supplied with water, ranchmen and sheep herders are benefited, dairy products are increased and improved, and the comfort of the village and rural home is enhanced.

HOME-MADE SAW MILL.

MILL MADE OF WAGON WHEEL.

Most of the home-made mills are found in the Platte Valley, from Omaha to Denver, and in the lesser river courses which branch out from this valley. Columbus, Grand Island, Kearney, Overton, Cozad, Lexington, Gothenburg, Ogallala and intermediate towns are centers for these mills as well as for other kinds of water lifters. The favorite form in Eastern Nebraska is the Jumbo, or the "Go Devil," which latter name probably is a contraction of "Go-Like-the-Devil." In Central and Western Nebraska the prevailing type is called the Battleax Mill. Both kinds do far more than pump water. They run the grindstone, the churn, the feed grinder, the corn sheller and wood saw and other farm machinery. All this work is done by a machine that costs, labor included, from $4 to $5. Of course the time is put in when there is nothing else more pressing to be done, for if the time were to be taken out of important work the result hardly would pay. While the average cost is placed as low as $4 or $5, below which the minimum, it would seem, scarcely could go, the maximum that has been put into the construction of such mills sometimes is as much as $150. A mill at this price will have at least eight horse-power and will grind from 200 to 300 bushels of grain a day.

MILL NEAR KEARNEY.

The Nebraska home-made mill seems to classify itself into six types. Beginning with the lowest type and going up, there is the Jumbo, the Merry-Go-Round, the Battle Ax, the Holland Mill, the Mock Turbine and the Reconstructed Turbine. While farmers may be rather particular what material they put into the higher cost machine, for those of the lower class no kind of stuff lying around the barn is too mean to find some use. Old lumber, lath, shingles, split rails, old packing boxes, barrel staves, coffee sacks, tin from old tin roofs, the gearing from old mowers—there is scarcely an odd and end that does not have a use in the home-made mill.

For $3.70 W. W. Iler of Havelock made a baby jumbo, which pumps not only water enough for his stock, but supplies his boarding house with all the water needed. It has four fans, each three feet long and arms two and one-half feet long, and is mounted on a sixteen-foot tower.

J. L. Brown's mill, which is on the Midway nurseries, near Kearney, is one of low cost. Out of old grocery boxes he made the fans and the box, and the gaspipe axis cost him $1.50. What could such a mill as this do? Well, it pumped enough to irrigate his garden through a killing season of drought, and kept his strawberry patch and his small fruit from death. Pretty good investment for $1.50. In fact, Brown has figured out that the profit from that little mill during three pretty tough times of drought exceeds that of the whole farm in three ordinary seasons.

The regulation jumbo mill is set permanently to face the north or south and thus catch the force of the prevailing winds. But when the winds blow from another direction these mills would be of no use, so this difficulty is overcome by putting up "universal" jumbos, which are set on a screw, and which will turn with the wind in any quarter. Sometimes, too, jumbos are set up in pairs, quartering the compass, and with such an inexpensive machine it is easy to do this. The merry-go-rounds look like huge side wheels of steamers set horizontally on towers.

In the general class of turbine mills are included the Holland mills, the battleax mills, with two, four, six and eight fans; the giant battleax, the mock turbine—the fixed, revolving, with and without rudders—and the reconstructed turbines, which last named usually are the shop-made ones which have been injured and are bought cheaply and repaired.

A MILL OF BARREL STAVES.

The battleax mill gets its name from its resemblance in the arms and the blade to the ax. Like the jumbo, it usually is set in a north and south position, and as the prevailing winds of Nebraska are from these points of the compass, it is seldom that these mills cannot be used. The axis of this mill may be of wood, gaspipe, shafting or an iron rod. The battleax mill of J. A. Carroll, near Overton, cost $25—more than the average, because it has a thirty-barrel tank connected with it. Near Grand Island, Diedrich Huennecke spent $14 on a battleax mill and tank. The fans of the mill are fixed in the driving parts of an old thresher, and the brake is taken from an old wagon. Near Grand Island, too, is a mill put up by a farmer named Schroeder, who used barrel staves for the fans. A. G. Tingley of Verdon put up a cheap battleax mill which does all the work of sawing 30-inch logs. Elmer Jasperson put up on his farm, near Ashland, a two-fan battleax mill, which has only one like it in the whole State. Its cost was $11, and for this outlay it runs a corn sheller and feed grinder and a grindstone.

One of the most ingenious mills in the whole State stands on a farm near Gothenburg. It is made merely of a wagon wheel attached by its axle to a barn. To the spokes are fastened blades. This contrivance pumps all the water needed for the barn. Still another mill is a two-fan turbine, and is made from an old mower. Near Grand

MADE FROM AN OLD MOWER.

Island, Fred Mathiesen built a mill, the driving parts of which were taken from an old self-binder. It waters his stock, and yet the cost was under $5.

By putting a rudder on a mill the arms can be made to swing around and stand in the wind, and by putting a mill within a tower instead of upon it, the chance of destruction through being blown down by the high winds is lessened greatly. One of the queerest mills is that of a farmer named Boerson, who lives near Grand Island. He took the sprocket wheel and fly wheel of a cornsheller and at a cost of $2 put together a contrivance that pumps enough water for sixty head of cattle.

Another odd and ingenious bit of mechanism is a reconstructed aermotor that cost practically nothing, yet pumps for the house, lawn, garden and a small fruit orchard, bringing up 270 gallons of water an hour in a fifteen and one-half mile wind. Then there is the "toy" water mill of A. C. Walker, a civil engineer, which pumps 6,480 gallons of water in twenty-four hours.

Near Kearney was an abandoned mill and storage reservoir. The mill was fixed at slight cost, bits of broken-up boxes were nailed to the arms and the whole thing worked as well as it did in its better days.

To shop-made mills and even to the better class of home-made can be attached wires, by which the power can be transmitted several hundred feet to where it is needed. Sometimes the mill is set at the house, and its energy is directed so that it will run the pump at the barn—in fact, the Nebraska farmer's ways of utilizing these home-made contrivances are endless.

American Beef in Scotland.

Owing to the scarcity of beef cattle and fat sheep in the country, and the consequent rise in price, very large supplies of American beef are finding their way all over the country. Edinburgh butchers, who, as a rule, decidedly prefer the home article, have of late been forced to procure supplies from Liverpool and Glasgow of port-killed States beef. In addition, the chilled beef agencies in the city have been selling large quantities of American-killed beef. A Chicago company is doing a very considerable trade in a high-class grade of beef. They have already established forty agencies in the United Kingdom. The supplies coming into Edinburgh for last week are phenomenal, bearing in mind always that this city has been in the past particularly independent of foreign supplies of beef and mutton. Upward of 400 quarters of chilled beef have gone into consumption, and, in addition, a like quantity, viz., 200 sides port-killed, all of American origin. Supplies of frozen mutton continue about an average of 350 carcasses, mainly from the Argentine Republic.

Lightning Kills Fish.

The Pennsylvania Fish Commission had heard tales that the brown trout with which some of the streams of the State were stocked were particularly susceptible to destruction from lightning, so they began an investigation and they now announce that the stories are true. It is the habit of the brown trout to swim close to the bottom of the stream it frequents, and though he is not literally struck by lightning, the electricity is conducted to the bottom of the streams which have rocks containing a considerable amount of iron in them, and so reaches and kills the trout, while it does not affect the fish that swim higher in the water.

Increased Strength of Chins.

A German engineer has brought forward a new method of constructing chains so as to eliminate the weakness due to faulty material or construction, which sometimes occurs in chains made of solid metal. The method consists in winding wire into links and binding the turns of wire by dipping in a bath of liquid zinc or other noncorrosive material. The wired links may also be stiffened by being wound on an internal steel lining adopted to receive the wrappings of wire. It is claimed that chains made by this method provide equal strength with less waste of metal.

SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE.

ALIEN ADVENTURERS MAKING A LAST STAND IN THE TRANSVAAL.

Men Who Have Served Under More Than One Flag in the Nineteenth Century—They Form a Picturesque Gallery—Prejudice Existing Against Mercenary Swords.

In the Transvaal to-day the soldier of fortune is making his last stand. No other country in the world is likely to offer the alien adventurer of the future the same positions and profit that have hitherto been the portion of Schiel, Von Albrecht, and the other European mercenaries of Krugerdom. And in this very fact we may see the decline of the soldier of fortune, if we compare his gains with the colossal harvests of his predecessors in history. Perron, the wonderful Frenchman who commanded the Mahratta army, arrived in Hindustan a penniless petty officer from a man-o'-war, and in nine years had amassed between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000. Even more rapid was the progress of Col. Hannay, who had to leave "John Company's" service to avoid the bailiffs. He entered the service of the Nawab Wazir of Oude in 1773, and left it after three years with a fortune of $15,000,000. Many other French and English adventurers were nearly as lucky.

At that time there was not the prejudice against these mercenary swords which the military ethics of modern Europe have fostered. Few foreigners have risen to eminence in the English service, but large numbers of aliens were recruited for us in the Napoleonic wars. Besides the famous Hessians, there were the French Chasseurs Britannique, three Swiss regiments, the Corsican Rangers, and the Greek Light Infantry. In the Crimean War a German legion was recruited in Heligoland, but they never distinguished themselves on the field, and the precedent is not likely to be followed.

In spite of the chilling effect of modern ideas, the soldiers of fortune of the nineteenth century form a picturesque gallery—heroes and rascals. Fenians and Royalists, Poles, Englishmen and adventures of no country. Some of them like Lord Cochrane and Hobart Pasha, have established themselves on a higher plane than the mercenary can usually hope to occupy. The former's brilliant record with the English, Chilian, Brazilian and Greek navies in turn is probably unique, though Paul Jones may be set down as a bad second. The ex-apprentice of a Whitehaven collier, who was the most successful American naval officer in the War of Independence, and held command thereafter in the French, and then in the Russian Navy, is not the heroic figure which modern eulogists in the United States like to picture, but he was a fine seamon and a gallant fighter. In fact, he was the typical soldier of fortune, (for the accident that he fought at sea does not rob him of his place in that gallery).

The revolutionary wars of the Continent have naturally attracted many of these adventurers. Count Ilinski was a Pole who fought the Russians in his native land, and when all was lost took service under Schamyl, Prince of Circassia. The Hungarian War of Independence in 1848 next employed his desperate valor, and at Temeswar he had three horses killed under him. Finally, he became Colonel of a Turkish cuirassier regiment, and was known as Iskander Bey. In the Hungarian Revolt, Gen. Guyon, an Englishman, was a famous figure, and at Tyrnau he held his ground until he had lost three-fourths of his battalion and the village streets were streaming with blood. A less attractive personality is Gen. Cluseret, who served as a Captain in the French Army in Algeria, then under Fremont, in the American Civil War; was next a Fenian "General," and then War Minister under the Commune. Dombrowski, another "General" in the Commune, and a far abler and braver man than the ex-Fenian, had fought in Poland and under Garibaldi. He was killed at the barricades in 1871. Among Continental forces of aliens one ought to mention the French the runaway aristocrats and broken men of half Europe, and the Irish Brigade which so gallantly fought for the Pope in 1860 under the command of Major Myles O'Reilly, M. P. An old soldier of the Papal Zouaves, another Irishman, is now General Coppinger, of the United States Army. Garibaldi himself is of course entitled to a niche in this gallery of fame, and his son Ricciotti has since his Italian campaigns fought for France in 1870 and for Greece in 1897, in both bravely fighting for a lost cause.

The New World offers us condottieri of a new type, like Walker the filibuster, who became Dictator of Nicaragua and might have ruled Honduras but for a British man-o'-war. General Caroll-Teviss, who served in the Franco-Prussian war and a good many South American struggles, was a Fenian hero. So was Captain John McAfferty, who served in the Mexican War of 1855, and was twice tried in London for treason-felony. He was acquitted at one trial, and amnestied after the second, a leniency which he repaid by renewed activity in the ranks of the Clan-na-Gael. He was said to be the real "No. 1" behind the Pheonix Park murders.

Egypt has employed many aliens. Muzinger Bey was a Swiss who had been British Consul at Massowah; Gessi Pasha, an Italian who, after serving as interpreter to the English Army in the Crimea, became Gordon's Lieutenant in the Soudan, and smashed the slave-hunters' revolt in Darfur. Loring Pasha was an American soldier; Lupton Bey, Governor of the Bahr-el-Gazel, who died in the Mahdi's dungeons, an Englishman. Slatin and Emin were both Austrians.

In more recent years we have had General Kohnes, an ex-major in the German Army who landed a cargo of Mannlicher rifles for the Chilian Congressionalists, drilled their troops, and defeated Balmaceda; General Ronald McIver, a Scotsman who has served under fourteen flags, from the Confederate to the Carlist, is another roaming Briton, like Kaid Maclean, an ex-lieutenant in our service who is now commander of the army of the Sultan of Morocco. General Digby Willoughby, who commanded (in blue and silver) the Hova army, has since fought for the Chartered Company in Rhodesia, but has now turned to the arts of peace.

THE UNEMPLOYED.

New Zealand Leads the World in Solving the Problem.

"New Zealand is far ahead of the other colonies of Australia, and in fact, of any other country in the world with which I am acquainted, in its treatment of the unemployed. It has a well-considered plan in actual operation, by which the unemployed are gathered up in cities, at government labor bureaus, and are forwarded to one point or another, where they are wanted on government railroads or other public works. At these points they are not kept in camps to be scattered again when the work is through, but they are assigned work alternately for the government and on their own land. The government advances them funds to clear their land and to build themselves homes. In all parts of the colony the penniless-out-of-work is by this system being converted into a thrifty land owner.

"It is not to the unemployed alone that the government gives land. It has entered upon a deliberate policy of breaking up the large estates which were formed in the early days. It purchases these estates, if the owners are willing to sell; if not, it condemns them. The land is then improved with roads, properly surveyed, and is resold in small farms.

"A specimen case is that of the estate of Cheviot, of 80,000 acres, which, under the old regime, supported a single family. The estate was entirely devoted to the grazing of sheep, but New Zealand statesmanship thinks that a man is better than a sheep. This estate has now been divided into a hundred or more prosperous little farms, and where there was once only one family there is now a population of 2,000.

"New Zealand's latest experiment is not its least important. It now treats its worn-out workingmen and women not as paupers, but as pensioners. Every one who has been in the colony twenty-five years, and is a citizen, and has an income of less than $170 a year, is entitled to a pension of a shilling—a quarter—a day. This is not merely a tenderer form of charity than that which obtains in other countries; it is a distinct recognition of the honest toiler's right to a share in the wealth he has created."—H. D. Lloyd in Ainslee's Magazine.

The Angler Fish.

Most remarkable of the strange fishes is the anglerfish, whose very name seems a paradox. The fishing-fish is nevertheless, a reality, and a stern one to all that approach those awful jaws of his. With a body the color of mud, he generally lies in the shadow of some rock on the bottom of the sea, waiting, motionless, for the approach of his prey. He is provided with an odd kind of fin just over the mouth, and this is held out in front of him to give warning of the coming of something to be swallowed. One taken alive was experimented on, and it was found that if this projecting fin was touched with a stick, even though the stick did not come near the mouth, the jaws closed as soon as it is touched. The mouth is tremendous, growing to the width of a foot when the whole fish is only three feet long. One of these anglers was caught not long since, and though it was only twenty-five inches long, a fish fifteen inches long was found sticking in its throat. The angler is provided with peculiar teeth set in double or treble rows along the jaws, and at the entrance of the throat. Some of these teeth are a foot long. He is not a pretty fish to look at, but he attends strictly to business and will swallow anything that touches his warning fin; whether it is meant for food or not. All kinds of things have been found in the stomachs of anglers, from bits of lead and stone to fish almost as large as the angler itself. This is without doubt one of the most peculiar and interesting fish in the whole ocean.

The White House Fighting Fish.

A gamy, omnivorous fish with a cannibalistic tendency is the Paradise fish which sports in the White House aquarium in Washington. In size it is no longer than one's little finger. The male is the fighter, though its mate "will not hesitate to take a fin against anything that comes its way. A pair of these fish were brought to the White House from Siam ten years ago, and it is estimated that there are now between six hundred and a thousand of the species in the aquarium. They are fed principally on raw meat and are kept in separate tanks. Their favorite prey is the gold fish, and a tiny Paradise fish, when the opportunity offers, will tackle a goldfish treble its size and kill it with one blow from its fins.

The Paradise fish displays instinct that comes close to intelligence. It knows its keeper and when he goes near the tank, which he never does except when he has food for it, the little fellow comes to the surface and makes a peculiar noise which resembles a low whistle. This is continued until the keeper tosses in the food.

When a number of these fish come to the surface at the keeper's approach the sound recalls that of a flock of quail drumming.

A Preoccupied Fox.

Amos Bragdon, a resident of Sorrento, while walking out in his field one day recently noticed a fox, and being somewhat interested, although he had no shotgun with him, walked up to within fifteen feet of the fox. The fox did not seem to notice Mr. Bragdon, but appeared to be watching for mice in the grass.—Bangor (Me.) News.

Keeps My Hair Soft

"I have used your Hair Vigor for five years and am greatly pleased with it. It certainly restores the original color to gray hair. It keeps my hair soft and smooth. It quickly cured me of some kind of humor of the scalp. My mother used your Hair Vigor for some twenty years and liked it very much." —Mrs. Helen Kilkenny, New Portland, Me., Jan. 4, '99.

Used Twenty Years

We do not know of any other hair preparation that has been used in one family for twenty years, do you?

But Ayer's Hair Vigor has been restoring color to gray hair for fifty years, and it never fails to do this work, either.

You can rely upon it for stopping your hair from falling out, for keeping your scalp clean and healthy, and for making the hair grow rich and long.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

Write the Doctor

If you do not obtain all the benefits you desire from the use of the Vigor, write the Doctor about it. Address, Dr. J. C. AYER, Lowell, Mass.

Wabash Mexican Tour 1900.

On Feb. 14th, 1900, the Wabash Will run a personally conducted Special Tour to Old Mexico and return.

The Train will consist of elegant drawing room and compartment sleepers, observation and dining cars, built by the Pullman company especially for this service.

Arrangements are being made for a select party of fifty people and will positively not exceed that number. The tour will consume a period of thirty days, covering 7,000 miles. The dining car will be stocked with every delicacy and the drawing room and observation cars will afford the comforts of a model hotel. The whole tour costs about $10 a day.

Mexico can only be seen and appreciated by accompanying a party of this kind. Mr. R. G. Thompson, Special Passenger representative will manage this tour and is eminently fitted for the task owing to his numerous visits to Mexico.

For descriptive matter, sleeping car reservations and rates, call on or address,

JOKES FROM THE PENS OF VARIOUS HUMORISTS.

Pleasant Incidents Occurring the World Over—Sayings that Are Cheerful to Old or Young—Funny Selections that You Will Enjoy.

Sandy Pikes—Could yer give a poor man a dinner?

Housewife—Why do you consider yourself deserving?

Sandy Pikes—I wuz at de front, ma'am.

Housewife (after dinner)—You are not deceiving me? You were really at the front?

Sandy Pikes—I wouldn't deceive yer, mum. I wuz at de front, but de door wuz locked. Dat's why I cum aroun' to de kitchen.

Hit the Nail.

"What did the poot man say when he was accused of taking the cattle?" inquired the tourist.

"The right thing, stranger," responded Amber Pete.

"What was it?"

"I'll be hanged!"

Hard to Catch.

Quinn—I wonder why this man Aguinaldo runs so much?

DeFonte—He probably intends to make Chicago his future home. You know it takes a little practice to catch a car there.

Very True.

The blue-eyed one—Brilliant and impulsive people usually have black eyes.

The other one—Yes; and if they don't have them they're apt to get them if they're too impulsive.

Of Course Not.

Pearl—So your friend is from Key West?

Ruby—Yes; and he must be wealthy.

Pearl—Why, dear?

Ruby—Because he told me when home he was not accustomed to bathe in anything but Florida water.

Handy.

Maud—Luther is a nice young man.

May—Yes; but Harry wears button shoes.

Maud—What of that?

May—Why, how convenient it would be if we were married! I would be sure to misplace my button hook and then I could just borrow his. If the two were misplaced we could both use hairpins.—Chicago News.

Not a Dead Secret.

"People often suffer from dyspepsia without knowing it."

"Well, at least they let everybody else know it."—Chicago Record.

A Pertinent Query.

Browne—Come around to my house to-night and we'll have a quiet little game.

Towne—When did your wife leave?—New York World.

A Wise Girl.

Nettie Newlywed—Papa, dearest, won't you let Augustus and me have $15,000?

Papa—What do you want all that money for?

Nettie—We want to build one of those houses that cost $3,000 in the advertisements.

A Severe Summary.

"It's wonderful," said the man with the solemn air of erudition, "what a difference a slight matter will make in the world's estimate of a man."

"It isn't so in literature," was the answer. "A man must have merit there——"

"Not necessarily. If he gets his spelling wrong—that's plain ignorance. But if he gets his facts and logic all twisted—that's originality."—Washington Star.

Had Her Sympathy.

"I just learned to-day," said Mrs. Wederly, "that my husband is leading a double life."

"Well, I don't blame him much," replied her spinster cousin. "A single life is awfully tiresome."

Where Ignorance Is Bliss.

"Whose new silk umbrella is this you've brought home?"

"I don't know."

"Don't know?"

"No; and, what's more, I don't want to know."—Chicago Record.

An Exploded Myth.

"Do your little ones believe in Santa Claus?"

"No. They did till last Christmas, when their papa played the part. I had the children in the hall, and he was to come from upstairs with a lot of presents for them."

"Yes?"

"Well, we had the lights turned low, and he thought he was down when he wasn't. They recognized his language."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Enjoying the Scenery.

"Did you have a pleasant trip to California, Mrs. Skinner?"

"Yes, indeed; we played euchre all the way out and all the way back."—Chicago Record.

New at the Game.

She—I don't like her; she has a bad habit of calling a spade a spade.

He—You'd think differently if you had ever attempted to teach her euchre, as I did.—Philadelphia Press.

Method in His Madness.

Short—I wish I were a rumor.

Long—Why so?

Short—Because a rumor soon gains currency.—Chicago News.

Very Swell.

Shoe dealer—Your feet seem to be swollen.

Customer—Yes, honey, dey swelled 'bout de time I got my growth, an' de swellin' ain't nebber gone down.

He Was Making Them.

"You should make some allowance for your former wife's faults," said the friend.

"I do," replied the divorce man; "I pay her alimony."—Philadelphia Record.

In the Dim Light of the Elevator.

"Why, good-morning, Mr. Thornhill."

"Good-morning, Miss—ah—Twyman."

"But I am not Miss Twyman."

"Glad to hear it. I'm not Mr. Thornhill, either."—Chicago Tribune.

Impossible.

"In this third act," said the stage manager, "you must show that you are violently in love with the heiress."

"How can I," wailed the walking gent, "when I know that she is drawing $10 less than I am?"—Philadelphia North American.

A Slight Misunderstanding.

She—I suppose you were presented at court while in London?

He—Yes, twice; but I was acquitted both times.

A High Reach.

Mr. Williams—Watcher yu totin' yer arm in er sling fur?

Mr. Fowler (in a whisper)—Strained it reachin' after a turkey what wuz roostin' in er sycamo' tree.

Saves Her Feelings.

Miss Askit—Does your husband smoke those cigars you gave him Christmas?

Mrs. Nuwed—He smoked one, and said he would keep the rest to remind him of my kindness.—Baltimore American.

One Thing Needful.

He—Man has a perfect organ of speech.

She—Well, so has woman.

He—Oh, no, she hasn't. Hers is made without stops.

Not Very Consoling.

Humorist—The editor makes fun of my jokes.

Spacer—Well, I don't see that you have any kick coming. That's more than you are able to do.

Horseless Truck.

"What kind of truck is this?" demanded the editor.

"Truck?" echoed the pen aspirer, "I wasn't aware I made mention of any. But rest assured if I did it is one of the latest horseless variety."

The Letter and the Spirit.

Askum—Do you approve of abbreviating "Christmas" to "X-mas?"

Tellum—I wish I could. It usually costs me a "C" or an "L." I'd be willing to abbreviate it to "V"-mas if my wife would agree.—Baltimore American.

Trouble in the Clock Works.

The big hand—Say, it's 12 o'clock. I'm all run down.

The little hand—Let's strike for shorter hours!—New York Press.

An Explanation.

Jones—I saw a messenger boy running this morning.

Brown—Why, what was the matter?

Jones—He had just lost his job.

A Novel Invitation.

A wedding is so overpowering an event that few persons will venture to blame John Kurtz, hotel-keeper, of Queens Borough, who, according to the New York Press, forgot to invite to the ceremony his fellow-members of the volunteer fire company.

But when the best of everything in the hotel had been placed before the wedding guests, and everybody was feeling happy, Kurtz remembered his fellow-firemen, and concluded that the wedding could not be complete without them.

So he turned in a fire-alarm. When the firemen came dashing up to the hotel with the fire apparatus Kurtz stood at the door and invited them all to come in.

At first the boys were indignant, and some of them wanted to turn the hose on the bridegroom; but they relented, and accepted the invitation.

Passed Along.

Young man—Will you be my wife?

Young woman—I am sorry to say I am engaged myself, but you will like my sister just as well.—Somerville Journal.

America's Great Locomotives.

The American locomotive engineer deems it advisable to design his engine with a large margin of power. If an express engine is designed to take a 200-ton load at fifty miles an hour, and if that load should happen to be increased to 300 tons, the locomotive is still expected to be able to take it and keep time, and usually does so. Such, at any rate, is the experience of such an impartial and level-headed observer as W. M. Acworth. If an American express be late at one point of its journey the engine is expected to make up the lost time even if the load be larger than usual. And again, this is generally done.

But if an English engine is given a single coach above its prescribed load the driver at once insists upon having a "pilot," and commonly he gets one. Or should the weather be bad, with strong side wind or a slippery rail, he demands an assisting engine and is accorded one, as a matter of course. Obviously this applies especially to the case of single-wheelers, which are so largely used on some English railways because their range of power is much more sharply limited by adverse conditions than is the case with coupled engines. But in either case, it seems indisputable that a smaller range of power is given to an English locomotive than to an American.—Engineering Magazine.

One Way of Killing Time.

"I have hit," observed a friend, "upon the very best way of killing time. You know my work takes me on street cars a great deal. I also come in in the morning and go out at night in the train. And any commuter will tell you that it's an awful bore. You either spoil your eyes reading or sit there with your hands in your lap, looking all around, as one who has never been in a car before. Well, I've got the only real method now, and if ideas were patentable I wouldn't have to work much longer." The inventor lighted a cigarette.

"This is how I do it," he finally went on. "When I get in a car or train and have any distance to go I get as comfortable a seat as I possibly can. And then I get all settled and either close my eyes or look at the back of the seat in front of me. So as not to interrupt the train of my thoughts, you see. And then" (he paused dreamily) "I think of what I would do if I had $50,000 and had to spend it in a week. That dosen't sound much if you've never tried it, but just start that train of thought some time and you'll be immensely surprised at the way time will fly."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

New Cable Lines.

France is dependent upon England for news of the Transvaal war, because the cables are under their control, and she is ready to spend a vast sum of money to free herself. This is like many people who have dyspepsia, spend a fortune seeking deliverance. They should try Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It never fails to cure dyspepsia, constipation and biliousness.

No Old Maids.

A woman who has lived in the Transvaal says that there are no "old maids" in South Africa, and that the supply of wives is never equal to the demand. A school teacher seldom remains a teacher for more than one term, for the admiration of the young boer planters is so great for a woman gifted enough to read and spell, and thrifty enough to earn money with her brain, that some well-to-do bachelor soon persuades her to marry him.

Earthworms in Flower Pots.

Earthworms, or angleworms as they are often commonly called, if the soil in pots is a matter that ever seems to trouble the flower grower. It has been a disputed point as to whether or not they do any real harm, or whether they are not of some value in assisting drainage. I think they are better out of the soil than in. Being of a somewhat slimy nature like snails, only not so bad, they impart to the soil, by constantly working through it, much the same consistency as that induced by plowing or cultivating land when it is too wet and pasty. It seems to kill the natural life and friableness of the soil, making it tough and putty-like. When practicable it is well to repot the plant, using new soil. If during the winter, saturate the soil in the pot containing the worms with a solution of lime-water. Give enough to insure the penetrating and saturating of all the soil. This should exterminate the pests. There is no danger of getting too much lime in the water, as it will hold only a certain quantity.—Woman's Home Companion.

Libby, McNeill & Libby.

The visitor passing through the plant of Messrs. Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago, is not only deeply interested in the cutting rooms, cooking kitchens, canning department and the wonderful mechanical contrivances for accomplishing the work speedily, but is greatly surprised by the vastness of their industry of packing and preserving dainty meats and specialties for consumers all over the world.

Some idea of the enormous business of this firm can be obtained from the fact that they require capacity for 300,000 cattle and 100,000 sheep per annum, manufacture forty millions of cans a year or an average of 140,000 cans a day, and require 2,000 employes to meet the demands of their trade. The arrows indicate the direction which the contents of the bowels must take in passing through the alimentary canal.

are packed away in your insides and must be kept clean, in order and doing business.

It's a long way, with many turns and pitfalls to catch the refuse and clog the channel if not most carefully cleaned out every day.

When this long canal is blockaded, look out for trouble—furred tongue, bad breath, belching of gases, yellow spots, pimples and boils, headaches, spitting up of food after eating—an all-around disgusting nuisance.

Violent pill poisons or griping salts are dangerous to use for cleaning out the bowels. They force out the obstruction by causing violent spasms of the bowels, but they leave the intestines weak and even less able to keep up regular movements than before, and make a larger dose necessary next time.

Then you have the pill habit, which kills more people than the morphine and whiskey habits combined.

The only safe, gentle but certain bowel cleansers are sweet, fragrant CASCARETS, because they don't force out the foecal matter with violence, but act as a tonic on the whole 30 feet of bowel wall, strengthen the muscles and restore healthy, natural action. Buy and try them! (Look out for imitations and substitutes or you can't get results. Cascarets are never sold in bulk. Look for the trade-mark, the long-tailed "C" on the box.) A New Year Gathering

There was a pleasant New Year meeting at the residence of John Carnahan. He and his wife had invited a number of friends, including Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Dickinson whose wedding anniversary this was. There was a grand feast, such as Mrs. Carnahan knows so well how to prepare, and they had a good time all around. Many had been schoolmates in the old days when C. C. Walter wielded the birch, and regretted that C. C. could not be present. Among those who enjoyed the occasion were:

E. N. Myers, Nancy Myers, Otha, Martha, Mary, Rosa and Blanche Myers, Anna Reinhold, John Dove, Linnie and Marion Dove, Sam Carnahan, Mary Ann Carnahan, Martha Hilkey, Geo. Zetaman, Prine Ferguson, Ada Paulen, Elmer Paulen, Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Dickinson and daughter Hazel, John Carnahan, Lulu, Charley, Alice and Irena Carnahan.

A PROMINENT LAWYER.

Of Greenville, Ill., Mr. C. E. Cook, writes- "I have been troubled with billiousness, sick headache, sour stomach, constipation, etc., for several years I sought long and tried many remedies, but was disappointed until I tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I can cheerfully recommend it to any suffering from above complaints." H. B. McCORD.

Notice of Sale of Real Estate.

Notice is hereby given that I, Sylvester Shumaker, administrator of the estate of Andrew Smith, deceased, will offer at private sale to the highest bidder, on Saturday, February 10, 1900, between the hours of 9 o'clock a. m. and 1 o'clock p. m., at the premises, the following described real estate, belonging to the estate of said decedent, to-wit:

The north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of section eight (8), in township thirty five (35), north of range twelve (12) east, except one acre heretofore sold and conveyed to Fairfield school township for school purposes out of said tract; subject, however, to two mortgages owned and held by the Noble County Bank, which mortgages are liens thereon and may be found on page 105 of record 45 and page 568 of record 43, respectively, in the recorder's office of DeKalb county, Indiana.

TERMS OF SALE.

One-third cash, one-third in twelve months, and one-third in eighteen months from date of sale; deferred payments to be evidenced by the purchaser's notes drawing six per cent. interest, waiving relief from valuation and appraisement laws and to be secured by a mortgage on the premises sold.

SYLVESTER SHUMAKER,
Administrator.
Moody & Rickel, Attorneys for Estate.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sample bottles at O. P Barber's, Corunna.

OBITUARY.

Susanna Treesh, Lehner was born in Stark county, Ohio, May 13, 1838. She was married to Jacob J. Lehner, May 19, 1861, died. Jan. 3 1900, aged 61, 7 months and 20 days. She was a member of the Methodist church at the time of her death. She leaves five children and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services were held in the Richland Center church, conducted by Rev. A. Gaff of the Lutheran church.

WEDNESDAY'S BALL.

—J. E. Grimm of Gloyd, is now on the 1901 roll of honor.

—Mrs. W. C. Hartman went home to Roann this morning.

Gen. Lawton's fund to help his widow is getting near $100,000.

—Joshua Miller of Butler township made us a business call this morning.

Cubans are getting impatient for independence. They want more officers.

—Mrs. G. W. Everett returned last evening after a week's visit with friends in Fort Wayne.

—Sylvester Shumaker of Fairfield township is the next lucky man to go onto the 1900 list.

—Mrs. Harriet Culler, who has been a guest in the home of Alva Baker, returned to her home in Hicksville today.

—Are those stoppages of German ships a put up job on the part of the Kaiser to get his new navy bill through?

—The last census of Canada shows that emigration has exceeded immigration by 300,000 during the census period. Canada should come into the union and prosper.

—Of course no one expects Congress to adopt a resolution of sympathy with the Boers. Such are introduced only by men who can find no other way of getting into the newspapers.

—Samuel Date, aged 83 years and a native of England, took out naturalization papers at Goshen the other day. He said his lease of life was short and he wanted to die an American citizen.

—The Connecticut tobacco growers are petitioning against free trade with Porto Rico. Yet that island produces only $100,000 worth of tobacco annually and has reached the limit of her production.

—We understand that the Rakestraw school, west of town, has been closed on account of the prevalence of diphheria in that district. Several cases are reported, but it is thought none will prove serious.

—Among the visitors to Auburn yesterday was Frank Dunten, the well-known Lagrange attorney. Mr. Dunten is state instructor of the Knights of Pythias, and says the district meeting at Garrett will be largely attended.

One reason for bad wheat market has just come to light. It is found that many ship loads of poor wheat have been sent abroad as good wheat on the certificate of dishonest inspectors in this country. Of course that hurts the market abroad.

—William Kaough, who was chosen yesterday as district chairman by the democrats of this district, has been chairman of the Allen county committee for several years. It is the general opinion of all that no better choice could have been made.

—Senator Frank Heller of Columbia City had an opportunity last evening to show his ability as a sprinter. Heller is by no means a feather-weight, but the way he covered the distance between the Swineford hotel and the Wabash station in order to catch the train for home was a caution.

—Those who have been licensed to wed since our last report are: Edward W. Koons and M. Idella Weaver; John Franklin Walker and Dora Elizabeth Gfellers; Norman W. Jones and Flora Thompson; Emory L. Noragon and Harriet B. McClintock; Jay D. Skelton and Mary Rench, and one couple who didn't want their names published.

—A letter from Mrs. Guy Plumb, brings the usual $1.50 on subscription and the good wishes of the family to all the Auburn friends. All are well and she is spending the winter with her daughter, Dr. Amy Plumb, at Baltimore where May is also. Mr. Plumb is at Easton as usual. They have had a season of lovely weather, with only a few cold days.

—We have a letter criticising the action of the town council in giving a license to that fakir who sold watches and $20 gold pieces. It may be hardly the thing to do this, but we believe it would pay some of our DeKalb men to hire a steady fakir to stay here and gull them till they get onto the game. We have little pity for a man who will tackle another man's game. In fact a man who does this, is himself dishonest for he really believes he is going to cheat someone. How much better is such a man, than the fakir who actually does cheat someone.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood. If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

OBITUARY.

Nona Rowley, daughter of J. D. and Ella Rowley, was born in DeKalb county, Indiana, February 29, 1876, and departed this life at her home in Allen county, December 23, 1899, aged 23 years, 9 months and 26 days. She was married to William Martin May 5, 1896. To this union were born three daughters all whom survive. The deceased leaves to mourn her departure a husband, father and mother, four sisters, five brothers and a host of relatives and friends. The funeral service was conducted at the St. Vincent church by Rev. Father Lafont. Interment at St. Vincent cemetery.

Nona dear has gone from our family circle.
On earth we shall see her no more.
She has gone to her home in heaven,
Poor Nona's troubles are o'er.

THURSDAY'S BALL.

—August Bartels made this office a pleasant business call today.

—Mrs. I. V. Shipe died at the home of her father, Joel Hartman, near Ashley, yesterday.

—It is reported that Agujnaldo has a cyclometer attached to his bicycle geared high for a long run.

—The bar association of this judicial district will hold its annual meeting at Angola on Friday, March 2.

—It is rumored that the Wabash will extend its branch line from Helmer to Orland, a distance of twelve miles.

—Winston Churchill tells in tragic tones how he escaped. Oom Paul says he let him go, thinking him harmless. Which tells the truth?

—W. P. Myers of Kendallville was at the democratic meeting here Tuesday, looking the picture of health. He reports his family well.

—Lord Methuen refers to the battle of Modder river as "the bloodiest of the century." It is very evident that his lordship has never heard of the battle of Gettysburg.

—The United States court of apeals has decided that a suicide does not invalidate a life insurance policy unless it can be proved that the insurer contemplated suicide at the time of taking out the policy.

—S. H. Long of Benzonia, Mich., is here visiting his son Perry, and his other children. He likes the country up in Michigan fairly well, and seems to be prospering. At least he paid his COURIER way ahead.

—Editor McDonald of the Ligonier Banner has just added to the equipment of his office a new cylinder press and is arranging to put in a new engine. He now has one of the best newspaper plants in northern Indiana.

—Puerto Rico should be admitted to the United States markets as soon as possible. Her products will make no difference at all to this country, but their exclusion will be death and destruction to the little island.

—Dr. Baxter received a otification from the pension office today to go up to Artic and examine a young man near there as to the nature of his disabilities. He has applied for a pension on account of the Spanish war.

—A letter from George Picker at Coffeyville says they are having nice warm weather and are laying brick same as in summer. He also has thanks for subscription to September 1900. George is going to winter through all right.

—A Fort Wayne man has asked the county clerk to refuse him a marriage license should he apply for one at any time, averring that a certain young woman can hypnotize him and he fears her designs. She may block this move by hypnotizing the clerk.

—An Indiana man has sued a prominent yolitician for damages because he shook the plaintiff's hand so heartily as to wrench his shoulder, leaving him a cripple for life. Good politicians who insist on wrenching off a man's arm ought to have their legs pulled.

—So far as we have been able to learn there are no new developments in the Curtis matter at Butler. The story that Curtis was accompanied in his flight by a young woman employed in the canning factory is denied, but there is no doubt that his stealings amount to a large sum.

—Mrs. Conrad Mabus has paid up the costs in the case tried in Esquire Walters' court recently, to replevin certain good in the hard cider joint at Waterloo that were levied on by the constable to pay Mabus' fine for selling liquor without license. The amount of costs was over $50.

—J. J. Lateon was here a while yesterday. Just now he is making his home with his son, Toad Latson, in Butler. He reports that Mrs. Andy Baxter is in Toledo with her daughter Mrs. Rilla Duncan. His son Will, is with Mr. and Mrs. Phil. Plum at Waterloo and in very poor health.

—A special from Butler states that while Frank Casebeer and George Carpenter were racing their horses on the road near Artic, Wednesday, the animals collided with terrific force, killing themselves instantly. It was also reported that Carpenter was killed and Casebeer fatally injured, but this is not true, though both were considerably hurt.

—Benjamin Conn, a B. & O. conductor living at Garrett, has a son who has been in the habit of staying out of school without his father's knowledge Truant officer VanFleit had Mr. Conn arrested for violation of the truancy law and he plead guilty in Esquire Walter's court yesterday afternoon, paying a fine and costs amounting to $17 50. From a remark dropped by Mr. Conn after he had settled the bill, his boy will hereafter be more regular in his attendance at school unless he has a good excuse for his absence.

FRIDAY'S BALL.

—Lagrange county has $20,000 of unclaimed school money on hand.

—Adam Helts is on the 1900 roll and has thanks for cash advances.

—Mrs. H A. Stevens returned to her home in Paxton, Ill., today after a visit of two weeks with friends in Auburn.

—Gill Jackson our young Butler township friend has now joined the honor class of 1900.

—John Shugers is the next lucky 1901 man. And still there is room on our roll of honor, both for 1900 anb 1901.

—Rev. A. E. Guff of Corunna goes on our 1901 list today. We are indebted to him also for numerous other favors.

—Go to Shoffer & Chaney for Michigan Lake Salt, a car load just received. Guaranteed not to get hard in the barrel. oct.26w-tf

—J. W. Lawrence is a believer in the "out of debt" system of doing business. Hence he has his COURIER paid into February, 1901.

—Congressman Robinson delivered the Jackson day address before the Berks county democratic club at Reading, Pa., Monday evening.

—It is said that Walkerton has a patient ready for the insane asylum, the result of trying to figure out when the twentieth century begins.

—To all points in competition where the fare is $2 or more we have free bus and free baggage to the Junction. tf SPROTT & KNAPP, Agency B. & O. Ry.

—From the Albion Democrat we learn that Solomon Harding of Corunna and Mrs. Angeline Baker of Kendallville were married at the latter place Wednesday.

—The residence of Edward Showalter at Butler was destroyed by fire Wednesday, together with the greater part of its contents. The loss is partially covered with insurance.

—The changing of the year from 1800 to 1900 has caused an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars to many railroad systems as an entire lot of new tickets were necessary.

—Indiana has a total permanent school fund of over ten million dollars, all of which is held by the different counties to loan to the people, only the interest being used for school purposes.

—A Michigan man recently sold his wife to another man for fifteen bushels of potatoes and $15 cash. That was a pretty good price for a woman who would be a party to such a transaction.

—Mrs. Sarah Treesh, wife of William Treesh of Fairfield township, died at Hope hospital in Fort Wayne yesterday, where she had been taking treatment. She was thirty-six years of age.

—An Elkhart woman tried the old trick of filling the tank of a gasoline stove without shutting off the burners. The woman was severely burned and the house damaged about $700 worth.

—J. E. Pomeroy added several volumes to his library this week. He now has as fine a library as any attorney can boast of, and besides they are all the very latest. They represent nearly $2,500 of a cost outlay.

—It was announced in the east last week that when the festive circus man bestirs himself next spring there will be one "round top" less in the galaxy of larger enterprises. This is said to be on the authority of Walter Main, who is to sell his entire outfit and retire.

—Contractor Myers has had a force of men at work today putting in the cement floor in the basement of the power house. It will require a large amount of material, but it is thought the floor when completed will effectually shut out the water which has caused so much trouble. When this work is completed the steam heating apparatus will be placed in position.

—At the close of the installation of officers of the G. A. R. and W. R. C. at Angola the other evening, Captain Jesse Carpenter and Mrs. Susan Trudell were married in the presence of the assembled crowd, Rev. C. S. Medbury performing the ceremony. Only a half dozen persons in the audience had been let into the secret and the wedding was a great surprise.

Fine Figure

Many women lose their girlish forms after they become mothers. This is due to neglect. The figure can be preserved beyond question if the expectant mother will constantly use during the whole period of pregnancy. The earlier its use is begun, the more perfectly will the shape be preserved.

Mother's Friend

Mother's Friend not only softens and relaxes the muscles during the great strain before birth, but helps the skin to contract naturally afterward. It keeps unsightly wrinkles away, and the muscles underneath retain their pliability.

Mother's Friend is that famous external liniment which banishes morning sickness and nervousness during pregnancy; shortens labor and makes it nearly painless; builds up the patient's constitutional strength, so that she emerges from the ordeal without danger. The little one, too, shows the effects of Mother's Friend by its robustness and vigor.

Sold at drug stores for $1 a bottle.

—Frank Long, the Fort Wayne piano man, goes to Minneapolis, not to Indianapolis as we had it yesterday.

—WANTED:—Black Walnut logs for timber. Highest cash prices paid for same. Address, The Sanders & Egbert Co., Goshen, Ind. 8

—Mr. Zelders, who has been on the Houser farm south of town, has moved here and occupies the Less property, west of Dr. Hoffman's.

—L. D. Miser was here today, bringing subscription for Mrs. Emma Helwig who is a relative. He has put up a house near Summit recently for Wm. Rinehart.

—M. B. Willis and wife took the early train to Waterloo carrying a big basket. They were going up to surprise his father, who is 90 today. He and Frank Willis and the other relatives were in the secret.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wingard were the guests yesterday of Mr. and Mrs. Walsworth. They are in the habit of holding joint meetings at one home or the other each yerr as January 12 is the birthday of both gentlemen. They always have a good time.

—Surveyor Krontz and Deputy Scholes are busy at work cleaning up old ditch matters which have been accumulating for several years. The county council made an appropriation to cover the expense of the work which they expept to have completed in about six weeks. He has about 130 ditches to prepare for the different trustees.

A Night Of Terror.

"Awful anxiety was felt for the widow of the brave General Burnham of Machias, Me., when the doctors said she could not live till morning" writes Mrs. S. H. Lincoln, who attended her that fearful night. "All thought she must soon die from Pneumonia, but she begged for Dr. King's New Discovery, saying it had more than once saved her life, and cured her of Consumption. After three small doses she slept easily all night, and its further use completely cured her." This marvelous medicine is guaranteed to cure all Throat, Chest and Lung Diseases. Only 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at McCords drug store.

Christian Smith Sick.

Sylvester Shumaker was here yesterday from Fairfield and brought word of the serious illness of Christian Smith at Leo. Mr. Smth carries the mail back and forth to Ft. Wayne, and a few evenings ago it was noticed he was not home on time. His son getting uneasy, hitched up a horce and was just starting to go and look for his father when he saw the rig coming. He found Mr. Smith in his rig but he was paralyzed and the team was coming home without a driver. He was gotten into the house and has not since left it. It appears that he was stricken while riding alone, and his horse went astray. A little girl met the rig and knowing whose it was led the team to the right road and headed it for home. She did not know what else to do as she was unable to help him. As good fortune would have it the team had sense enough to take him home.

Help... Nature

Babies and children need proper food, rarely ever medicine. If they do not thrive on their food something is wrong. They need a little help to get their digestive machinery working properly.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA will generally correct this difficulty.

If you will put from one-fourth to half a teaspoonful in baby's bottle three or four times a day you will soon see a marked improvement. For larger children, from half to a teaspoonful, according to age, dissolved in their milk, if you so desire, will very soon show its great nourishing power. If the mother's milk does not nourish the baby, she needs the emulsion. It will show an effect at once both upon mother and child.

50c. and $1.00; all druggists.

Took A Bath.

Of all the funny accidents due to the sleet, the most complete was the one that happened to a good looking young lady whose home is on North 62nd street. She had finished washing the breakfast dishes and with a well filled pan of the greasy dishwater, she started for the back yard to throw it out. As she left the door and started on the slippery boards, her feet flew as if they had wings and her fall was so sudden that she came down before the dishwater did, and that fell in a body on to her. Half drowned, for she got the full dish, she rose, streaming and thoroughly soaked, not a dry garment left. Though she don't think the experience funny, she can't help laughing over it. There was not a drop wasted.

Cold Steel Or Death.

"There is but one small chance to save your life and that is through an operation," was the awful prospect set before Mrs. I. B. Hunt, of Lime Ridge, Wis., by her doctor after vainly trying to cure her of a frightful case of stomach trouble and yellow jaundice. He didn't count on the marvellous power of Electric Bitters to cure Stomach and Liver trouble, but she heard of it, took seven bottles, was wholy cured, avoided surgeon's knife, now weighs more and feel better than ever. It's positively guaranteed to cure Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles and never disappoints. Price 50c at McCord's drug store.

THEY FOUND HIM GUILTY

Jury in the Beaty Case Return Their Verdict.--Other Court News.

Shortly after 4 o'clock last evening the jury in the case against James Beaty, charged with stealing turkeys from George Driver, received their instructions from Judge Hoffman and retired to deliberate upon the verdict. From the evidence given and the facts surrounding the case there was but little doubt of the outcome, and it seems that the only question before the jury was the amount of punishment to be inflicted. At 5:45 the jury returned to the court room and through the foreman, F. J. Yeabera, presented their verdict, which was that Beaty should pay a fine of $10, be imprisoned in the county jail for thirty days and disfranchised for a period of two years. Beaty was visibly affected by the verdict. It being represented to the court that the defendant had a very sick child at home, he was allowed to visit his family upon a promise to return to town today and begin serving his sentence. The verdict seems to meet with general approval and it is hoped that it will be a profitable lesson to Beaty as well as to others.

A lad named Winget, who has been rather incorrigible and an object of charity for the past two years, was brought into court on a request that he be sent to the reform school, but Judge Bratton decided to hold the matter open in the hope that the boy can be properly cared for here.

THE SMITH CASE.

This case began this morning and in substance is this: The prosecution, Rhodes and Pomeroy for the state, had witnesses this forenoon to prove that Smith stole a harness from a man named Vogtman and sold it to a Mr. Crampton. The testimony was plain and direct. But when Smith, the defendant, went on the stand for the defense, he made it appear that his brother had left the harness at his barn. In substance, he said he and his brother, Jim, had been at the outs more or less serious, and about four years ago Jim went to Oklahoma. Last November 11, Jim and his wife came to Smith's in a covered wagon. He wanted me to buy a good, heavy harness he had. I said I did not need a harness, but said I could use a bridle and a pair of lines. A few days later he said he had the harness in my barn. I looked at it, and finally gave him my old lines and $3.50 for the good lines and bridle. He asked me to go to Crampton and sell the harness for I had told him Crampton wanted a set. He said get what you can for it. I passed Crampton's house and spoke to him about it. He finally bought it and paid $10 cash for the harness and old lines. That night I was shutting the bars across the railroad track and my brother Jim came along, and I gave him $1 0 Later, a few days, he came to me and said the sheriff was after him for some notes, and I must get money and pay for them. I refused. He then said if I did not he would tell that I had stolen that harness and would send me to jail.

Smith lives on the Wabash road between Ashley and Steubenville and looks like a well-to-do man. The road runs through his farm. All the parties live near there. He claims his brother is trying to get him into trouble for spite. Senator Gilbert of Angola and Attorney Wickwire of Ashley are defending him. His brother Jim has been arrested and Sheriff Snyder of Angola brought him here yesterday and he is in jail.

The Century.

MR. EDITOR:—Sir, there seems to be a difference of opinion in regard to the present century. Some claiming that this is the nineteenth, while others claim that it is the twentieth; as for me I must take sides with the disputants that claim that it is the 19. It appears plain to me that a year commences Jan. 1 and ends Dec. 31 at midnight. From the begining of the year 1 to the end of 99 was 99 years. So there was one more year required to make 100 years or to the begining of the 101st. This completed the first century, what is true in one century is the same in all others. So according to my view of the subject W. J. Bryan will recieve the majority of electoral votes in the the nineteenth century. I would like to hear from others through the Courier on the subject of the century.

H. A. WINSLOW.

OBITUARY.

Sarah Stahl was born in Indiana county, Penn., August 13, 1862; died January 10, 1900, age 38 years, 4 months and 27 days. She with her parents moved to Noble county, Ind., in 1864. Most of her life was spent in Noble and DeKalb counties, Ind She was united in marriage with Josiah Treesh, Dec. 25, 1884; to this union were born five children. One, Lulu, preceded her to the spirit world. Her husband, Elias, Bessie, Harry and little Ira remain to mourn their loss. Funeral from Richland Center church, conducted by Rev. A. E. Gaff.

Court News.

The jury in the harness stealing case listened to argument last evening and at 10:30 retired, having received the charge of Judge Bratton. They were out less than an hour, and agreed on a verdict of not guilty. This does not mean that nobody stole Vogtman's harness, but that the jury were not satisfied that John Smith stole it. It was in his barn some way, and he does not deny that, but claims his brother brought it there. The prosecution, though ably managed, failed to connect the stealing with the fact that John Smith afterwards had the harness. Most people who heard the evidence believe his brother Jim stole it. John Smith has to face another charge of stealing today, after having just got clear of one. This case is for stealing a log chain from a neighbor, Mr. Dayhoof, and will be tried before a justice. Wickwire and Gilbert will defend him. It looks as if they have a grudge against John Smith up about Steubenville. It also looks as if Steubenville has a good many undesirable people in its borders.

A good many funny things occurred in the examination of witnesses in this case. When George Gilbert took the stand, Senator Gilbert began questioning him, and in a bantering, good natured way, asked, "Are you a relative of any attorney in this case?" And the witness promptly rejoined, "I hope not."

When old man Swager was testifying he admitted he had hid Jim Smith away from the Steuben county sheriff. He said that once when the sheriff came, he showed him all through upstairs where Jim lived, but no Jim could be found, as Jim wasn't there. "But why didn't you show the sheriff around some time when Jim was there?" asked the attorney. And the prompt reply was, "Then, the sheriff wasn't there." And the crowd tittered. A number of the witnesses on both sides seemed very ready and gave testimony as if they had been practising at it for a month or two.

When the evidence was all in, the court adjourned for supper, and after supper the attorneys made their arguments. Mr. Pomeroy opened for the state. Then came Mr. Wickwire, followed by Mr. Gilbert for the defense, then Prosecutor Rhoads closed for the state The arguments were good and well given. The attorneys, though comparatively young men, did themselves credit by their efforts.

The case from Garrett was begun and finished yesterday. It was in regard to the purchase of a piano.

Jacob Rink, a conductor on the B. & O., had bought a Kimball piano, and gave the usual note in payment. The company guaranteed, so he said, good quality and good workmanship including hand-carved ornaments. Rink says the instrument proved unsatisfactory, and later on several other pianos were brought to the house to be tried in hope of selling them one. There were the Packard, the Bryant and the Wagman. Mrs. Rink finally bought a Kimball. Mr. Cehney, a piano man, and the agent, we believe of the Packard, had told them that the Kimball was not a satisfactory instrument, and not built strong enough to stand the strain of proper tuning. He and others examined the instrument and discovered, as is claimed in the testimony, that the carving was plaster or some such substance and that poor lumber was in the piano. So Rink refused to pay for it, and was sued before Justice Chew, and beat the company. Then it was brought into court. The evidence for the company was of course to the effect that the instrument was all right. The jury went out a little before six and soon brought in a verdict in favor of Rink. So, he will not have to pay for two pianos.

Ashelman-Stafford.

Wm. J. Ashelman and Clara Stafford were married last evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Stafford, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating. It was a very quiet wedding with but a few of the relatives and intimate friends present. These included the bride's sister and husband Mr. and Mrs. Malcom Green of Fort Wayne, Mrs. Richards and daughter Delia of this place, and the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ashelman, and Frank Eckhart who is a cousin. They go to housekeeping at their own home in Auburn. The groom is an employe in the Eckhart factory, and both are most worthy young people. We wish them all possible happiness.

An Old War Claim.

Mrs. E. S. Wells of Lake Forest has received a check for $4,716 as her share of a claim growing out of the war of 1812. Mrs. Wells was one of forty-five heirs of her grandfather, Shearjashub Bond, of Bristol, R. I., whose vessel, the Emma, was seized by the French. The United States Government collected damages from the French government.

Out in Kansas

lives a happy wife. She writes: "I have used Mother's Friend before two confinements. The last time I had twins, and was in labor only a few minutes. Suffered very little." The reason why does expectant mothers so much good is because it is an external liniment, to be applied upon the outside, where much of the strain comes. It helps because the pores of the skin readily absorb it, and it comes into direct contact with and is absorbed by the parts involved. Morning sickness is quickly banished, and nervousness is kept completely away. The sense of dread and foreboding is not experienced, even during labor itself. Confinement is short and almost without pain. Recovery is quick and sure. Best of all, Mother's Friend benefits the unborn just as much as the expectant mother, and when the little one comes it will be strong, lusty and healthy.

Mother's Friend

Notes and Comments.

The time may come when the battle of Santiago is remembered only as the begining of the Sampson-Schley controversy.

If Mr. Jones of Arkansas is really not to lead the Democratic campaign committee, why not try Mr. Hill of New York for the place? He "is a Democrat."

The plague is said to be spread by rats, which take it and run from house to house until they die. Get rid of your rats at once.

The British savagely denounced the Boers for using dumdum bullets. Yet now it is officially announced that the British will themselves use them.

In spite of all the exultation over American exports in 1899, it now seems that those of breadstuffs, provisions, cotton and mineral oil, have declined.

Whether Mr. Clark is found guilty of bribery or not, the fact remains that none of the candidates in Montana would have been even considered if they had not been millionaires.

The author of "The Man with the Hoe" says he knows a woman with 100 pairs of silk stockings. He should now write "The Woman with the Hose."

It won't be long before the ground hog prognosticators will be with us again.

In Vienna poker has been declared a game of chance. The authorities would change their minds if they stacked up against the right sort of players.

The people of St. Louis have mobbed their city council. Drinking Lake Superior water via Chicago, has quite intoxicated them.

The rich man and eye of a needle simile, is nothing compared to the poor man and the Montana legislature, as developed by the Senatorial investigation of the charges of bribery against Senator Clark.

The idea of putting an end to the trusts by removing duties on the articles manufactured by them, is undoubtedly gaining ground in both political parties. The Democrats are urging it, both in order to injure the trusts and for the sake of securing the freedom of trade involved. The Republicans are favoring it because they feel that not to do so will subject them to charges of undue friendliness for the trusts, and also because they think that the trusts have forfeited their rights to protection by their actions. There will probably be a warm debate on this subject before Congress adjourns.

Our Saturday Evenings.

CHAPTER XII.

Reminiscences are always in order though not always agreeable or profitable. The recent death of L. P. Milligan at Huntington recalls a reminiscence of war times that exactly fits the thought expressed above. We never knew Milligan personally, nor do we know whether the charges on which he was convicted of treason were well founded or not. If true, then he should have been punished. If not true, he should never have been called into court of any kind. It is likely, that in the excitement of war times, hasty action was taken, and that he should, as was afterwards agreed, have been tried by the courts of this state, all of which were running freely, and not by a court-martial.

It was charged at the time that he and the others tried with him, were members of a disloyal secret society called "Knights of the Golden Circle," which was said to have lodges in various parts of the state. But the immediate cause of his arrest was the part he took and the kind of speeches he made in the state and national campaign of 1864, and for which he was arrested and imprisoned.

He was charged with conspiracy, giving aid and comfort to rebels, inciting insurrection, disloyal practice and violation of the laws of war. He was tried before a court of colonel, from 11 volunteer regiments, presided over by Gen. Silas A. Colgrove, one of the colonels being Reub. Williams now publisher of the Indianian at Warsaw, and sentenced to be hanged, May 19, 1865. W. A. Bowles and Stephen Horsey were sentenced with him on the same charge. Horace Heffron, who turned state's evidence, and Andrew Humphries received short sentences.

President Lincoln was to commute the sentence, but he was assassinated before the papers were issued. A writ of habeas corpus was then procured, and the case was thrown into the United States supreme court.

It held that the military commission had no jurisdiction to try a citizen of Indiana. James A. Garfield was one of the attorneys who defended Milligan. The time of sentence was approaching fast, and there was no time to be lost. He wrote to his family to prepare for the worst, and selected his own pall-bearers. The scaffold was built by confederate prisoners at Indianapolis, and all funeral arrangements were made.

At this time, republicans and democrats began to take active interest in the case, and Gov. Morton, with other prominent men, favored a commutation to imprisonment for life. The day before the execution he was sentenced to the military prison at Columbus, O., for life. In April, 1866, the case came up in supreme court, and on point of jurisdiction, he was dismissed and returned to Huntington.

He was afterward indicted by the federal grand jury at Indianapolis, but the case was not pushed and was eventually dismissed.

Milligan then sued the commission of court-martial that had tried him, for damages. Gen. Harrison defended the commission but Milligan was given $5 damages. He then returned to Huntington and practiced law, more or less till his death.

Of the men tried with him, Dr. Bowles of Paoli, is still subject of much unfavorable comment by the people there, who knew him as man of contentious character, rather loose morals, and at one time, having had a good practice and considerable property. He owned about 400 acres of land that included the famous Indiana health resort of French Lick, and spent some money in improving the grounds and springs. He finally leased them to another man as contentious as himself, and after a year or two they fell out, and then there was trouble. The man finally stopped paying rent. After some litigation, the lessee agreed to pay the back dues, now several hundred dollars, and set a day when Bowles could come down from Paoli and get his money. In the meantime he hustled and gathered up all the silver money he could get in that section, and before the day came he had it in coin. He put the money into a sack, lugged it to "Old Plato," the biggest of the sulphur springs, and well remembered by every one who has been there to test its strong waters, and slyly, when no one was nigh, dropped the sack into the clear and sparkling pool, which is several feet deep. There the sack lay till the day when Bowles was to come, when it was got out in time to dry, and the Doctor received his rent in solid silver, but black as the purest African. The sulphur had done just as the fellow knew it would, discolored the silver pieces thoroughly and made the Doctor raging mad. But it was good money, and as far as then known, was legal tender, and the Doctor took it, and many an old Paoli and Orange county family can still show one or two of them for keepsakes. Later on, the Doctor was down in Old Mexico, and got mashed on a dark eyed Senorita, and she followed him home. After considerable trouble, he in some way got rid of his wife, and then married the Mexican girl. She was an adventuress of a decided stamp, and soon got his property from him or squandered it and returned to the land of the Greaser. Bowles gradually lost caste and influence, and as said above, his memory is not held very high by those who knew him.

Of Horsey, the third man convicted we know but little. These three were given the full sentence. Humphreys has never stood very high, but he got a light sentence as did also, Horace Heffron, both being tried on the same charge. Heffron will be remembered, as a few years ago, a member of the legislature a massive bundle of fat, cheek, and in our own opinion a most unprincipled politician. We have our own opinion of his course in the legislature. Probably Milligan was the most worthy of all those put on trial.

A Correction.

A letter has reached this place from 'Squire Gage over at Garrett, in which he says the report of his testimony at the Coffinberry trial was utterly and teetotally false. "Only three words were true," he says, "the rest are all lies." The report of what he says was very brief for it was among the last, and we had to condense. In doing this we got him mixed with another witness, at least as far as what Coffinberry said about the cost of the new house. Our report reads: "'Squire Gage sworn. Goffinberry told me his house cost him $3,500. Am a contractor and builder."

Now we have examined the notes of Court Reporter Wilennar, and find Gage did not say what Coffinberry thought the house cost. So this was an errror and the only error. For of the three sentences in the report, the first and third are correct, as the notes of the Reporter show. In other words, Mr. Gage is farther out of the way in his red hot letter than we were in the report, for he says only three words were right. There were fifteen words in the report, and we had eight of them correct. Or, to make a better showing, there were three sentences, and two of them were correct. Does he expect a newspaper man is going to use truth more than 67⅓ per cent pure? We trust he has too good sense for that. Hence this frank apology.

How to Treat Orchards.

About the month of March, after a good rain, those who have fruit trees should take a hoe and scrape off all the rough and loose bark. Begin at the top of the large limbs and scrape downward to the ground. After this is done, rake the bark into piles and burn. Then make a strong lye from ashes, put lime into it, same as in making whitewash. With this wash the trees to a glossy, smooth condition. Cherry trees cannot be scraped, but should be whitewashed. If you follow this advice you will have fruit and it will be less wormy. It will not be necessary to spray the trees. My advice is not to kill the sparrows as they do more good than harm. They stay with us all the time and destroy millions of insects and larvae. I have tried the above treatment for trees and can recommend it.—A. F. FLEMING, Gardener and Florist.

Danger Signals!

Do you take cold with every change in the weather? Does your throat feel raw? And do sharp pains dart through your chest?

Don't you know these are danger signals which point to pneumonia, bronchitis, or consumption itself?

If you are ailing and have lost flesh lately, they are certainly danger signals. The question for you to decide is, "Have I the vitality to throw off these diseases?"

Don't wait to try SCOTT'S EMULSION "as a last resort." There is no remedy equal to it for fortifying the system. Prevention is easy.

Scott's Emulsion

prevents consumption and hosts of other diseases which attack the weak and those with poor blood.

SCOTT'S EMULSION is the one standard remedy for inflamed throats and lungs, for colds, bronchitis and consumption. It is a food medicine of remarkable power. A food, because it nourishes the body; and a medicine, because it corrects diseased conditions.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings.

Trouble on Hand.

A special to the Times-Herald from Washington says: Both Great Britain and Germany have formally served notice that they will protest against fortification of the Nicaragua Canal if that waterway be constructed by the American Government. These notices have been filed during the last three days orally by Ambassadors Paunceforte and Von Holleben. They will be followed later, if necessary, by formal written protests. It is believed both France and Russia, and perhaps other maritime powers, will join in the protest if the United States persists in constructing the canal upon the basis provided in the bill reported from the House Committee on Inter-state and Foreign Commerce last Friday, and agreed to, with some amendments, by the Senate Committee on Inter-oceanic Canal.

Old War Claims To Be Paid.

Southern Senators express themselves as hopeful over the prospects of securing legislation during the present session of Congress looking to the refunding of money paid into the Treasury of the United States soon after the Civil War as the result of the sale of cotton captured by the Federal forces. There was originally about $80,000,000 of this money, but a portion of it was paid to the owners of the cotton soon after the close of the war. The remainder was left in the Treasury and has remained there ever since.

Dawson Is Swept by Flames.

The steamer Danube, at Victoria, from Skaguay, brings news that a large part of the business portion of Dawson was wiped out by fire. The loss will exceed $500,000. There are no names of the buildings or losses. The Skaguay operator says that great suffering would undoubtedly follow the fire, as the temperature at Dawson was 40 degrees below zero, with the wind blowing. The city is entirely without the regulation water supply.

Governor Closes Vile Places.

The dens of vice which infest Hurley, Wis., were closed by order of Gov. Schofield. The local authorities have allowed these places to flourish without molestation until affairs reached such a state that the better element of the town called on Gov. Schofield to enforce the laws. This is the first time in the history of the State that a Governor has taken such an unusual and decisive action to regulate the morality of a city.

Dried Fruits May Go.

United States Minister Leishman, at Berne, Switzerland, has cabled the State Department that the Swiss Government has revoked a former decision and gives general authorization for the importation of American dried fruits. It also authorizes the importation of fresh fruits, providing they are examined at Basle, and found to be exempt from scale or other parasites.

Pullmans Reduce Wages.

In a circular which has been posted on the walls of the Pullman sub-office at the Union Depot, Chicago, a reduction in the wages of sleeping car conductors is announced. The amount of the cut is said to be, in many cases, as much as 20 per cent. Whether the reduction is to be made among all employes of the company or is to be inforced only on some lines is a question.

Burned to Death.

Mrs. Mary Stephenson, aged 60 years, of Jolietville, Hamilton County, Ind., was burned to death. While she was carrying a lighted lamp across the room she stumbled and fell, her dress catching fire. Her body was burned to a crisp before assistance could reach her.

Paris Is Refloated.

London special: The American line steamer Paris, recently ashore off the Menacles, was successfully floated out of the dock at Milford Haven, where she has been undergoing temporary repairs, previous to being taken to Belfast for a thorough overhauling.

A Diplomatic Mission.

Montague White, until recently Consul General of the South African Republic, has been in New York for a week and is about to go to Washington. It is supposed he is on a diplomatic mission. He refuses to be interviewed.

Gen. Wheeler will return to the United States immediately, making a stop at Guam on his way hitherto.

Samoan Treaty Ratified.

The Senate has ratified the Samoan treaty without division. The ratification occurred in executive session after two hours of debate, which was participated in by a number of Senators. Messrs. Davis, Foraker and Spooner advocated, and Senators Bacon, Money and Tillman opposed ratification.

New Position for Capt. Sigsbee.

Orders have been issued formally detaching Capt. Sigsbee from the command of the Texas and assigning him to the head of the Naval Intelligence Bureau.

Mysterious Murder and Suicide.

M. Jacoby shot and instantly killed Hilton Nelson at the home of the latter at Spencer, Neb., and then killed himself. There is no known cause for the crime. The two men were friends and were preparing to go to town together when the tragedy occurred.

Frenzied Man Leaps to Death.

James House of Blue Mound, Ill., a patient at a St. Louis private sanitarium, jumped from a second-story window and died of his injuries a few hours later. Before making the leap the frenzied man assaulted and seriously injured his nurse, Albert Debrin.

DEMAND QUIET BUT STEADY.

This is Still the Leading Feature in Trade Lines—Shipments of the Week.

Bradstreet's takes this view of the trade situation: "Quietness as to demand but marked steadiness as to prices is still the leading feature in trade lines, a condition, it might be remarked, not uncommon at this stage of the year, which is a sort of middle ground between stock-taking and inventory time and the actual opening of the spring season. Aggressive strength in prices is confined to a few staples, such as pork products. Tallow, cottonseed oil and similar products are sympathetically strong. Raw and refined sugars have both been advanced this week. Quite a flurry in coffee occurred as a result of reports of an outbreak of the plague at Rio. Raw wool is dull but firm, and speculation is naturally light. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 4,248,926 bushels, against 2,509,082 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 6,314,576 bushels, against 4,019,036 bushels last week."

HEIR CLAIMS WILL IS HIDDEN.

Sensational Contest for a Dead Man's Millions On in Nebraska.

Much interest is being evinced at Falls City, Neb., in the suit brought to set aside the will of the late "Col." Stephen D. Miles, a pioneer Nebraskan and an old-time Government mail contractor. An estate valued at $3,000,000 is involved. Samuel Miles, one of the sons of the decedent, asks the court to set aside the judgment rendered when his father's will was probated, because he believes that he has evidence to prove that a later will was made, giving him a large share of the property which his brother, Joseph H. Miles, obtained under the former will. His petition implies that Joseph knows of the more recent will, which is alleged to have been drawn up in 1897 at the St. James Hotel in St. Louis, and has either destroyed or is suppressing it. Joseph Miles denies the charges and asks the court to let the probated will, which makes him principal legatee, stand.

SIBERIAN ROAD IS A BOTCH.

Heavier Rails Must Be Put Down to Give Speed and Safety.

Before the completion of the Siberian Railroad it has become necessary to reconstruct the work already done, and this will cost not less than $25,000,000. The information is supplied to the State Department at Washington by Commercial Agent Greener, at Vladivostock. His report, compiled from Russian sources, shows a curious condition of affairs on the road. In the haste of construction and the anxiety to get everything cheap the road was laid with a 12-pound rail instead of a 24-pound rail. The bridges were built of wood and crossings were made far apart. Consequently more than twenty miles an hour cannot be made on the level with safety. Only one passenger and two freight trains a day are run.

TRIES TO KILL JUDGE LOCHREN.

Disappointed Plaintiff at St. Paul Seeks Revenge, but Fails.

James Welch, plaintiff in a damage suit against the Northern Pacific Railway Company, attempted to assassinate Judge William Lochren of the United States Circuit Court in the judge's chambers at St. Paul, Minn. Court Messenger James Conway prevented the shooting. Conway's story of the affair is that Welch drew a revolver and placed it within a few inches of the judge's breast. At this point Conway leaped upon Welch. He caught the pistol and the lock fell upon his finger, cutting a gash. Judge Lochren stepped into the hall and called for help.

WILD CAREER ENDS IN MURDER.

Tennessee Soldier Shoots and Kills Andrew Chitwood at Almy.

At Almy, Tenn., Andrew Chitwood was shot and instantly killed by Elvin Phillips. The men had quarreled. Phillips was a member of the Fourth Tennessee volunteer infantry. While at Oneida a few days ago he shot a commercial traveler's valise to pieces and the same day shot a man named Chambers. Later he shot at Charles Keelon, held up the Paint Rock engine that carries the mail from the mines to Oneida and killed Chitwood.

Unable to Avenge His Kin.

Corporal Lindsay of the Northwest mounted police force went to Regina to join the second Canadian contingent now being enlisted for service in South Africa. His father and brother were both killed in the first Boer war, and he was anxious to avenge their deaths. Unfortunately he could not pass the doctor. Despondency came over him and he placed a pistol in his mouth and shot and killed himself.

Vast Quantity of Oil Burned.

A dozen big oil tank cars at the United States Oil Company's loading station, at Freemansburg, Pa., were destroyed by fire, together with oil racks, etc. The cars were all 6,600-gallon capacity and had just been loaded. The Jersey Central company's loss is $40,000 and the oil company's $10,000.

Suicide of A. K. Wheeler.

Austin K. Wheeler, treasurer of Lemon & Wheeler, the wholesale grocery company of Grand Rapids, Mich., committed suicide by shooting himself through the brain with a 32-caliber revolver. The act was committed in the basement of the company's store. Death was instantaneous.

Ban on Spruce Wood Exports.

A dispatch from Toronto says the order in council prohibiting the export of spruce wood cut from crown lands has been adopted by the Ontario Government. Consequently all wood cut after April 30 must be manufactured into pulp in Canada.

Gives $60,000 to Oberlin College.

Lewis H. Severance of New York has given $60,000 to Oberlin, Ohio, College for the new chemical laboratory. He has purchased the land on which the laboratory is now being built. Mr. Severance's gifts to the college the last year were over $63,000.

Denver Newspaper Men Are Shot.

Frederick G. Bonfils and H. H. Tammen, proprietors of the Evening Post, were shot in their office at Denver, Colo., by W. W. Anderson, a prominent local attorney. The shooting was the result of a quarrel over the conduct of a murder case.

Yields to the People's Demand.

The "combine" in the St. Louis house of delegates kept their promises to the people, and passed the three temporary lighting bills. Everyone of the majority voted aye under protest, not because he favored the measures.

Rodmen Are All Out.

Officials of the National Association of Rod Mill Workers claim that the rodmen are out at all of the several mills controlled by the American Steel and Wire Company in Cleveland.

Washington Floods Receding.

The floods in the Patlatch and Clearwater rivers are receding. The weather in eastern Washington is cooler and all danger from further floods is believed to be past.

Suffer for Many Days at Sea.

A story of shipwreck is received from Hong Kong by steamer China. The lost vessel is the British steamer St. Helena. On the voyage from Hong Kong to Singapore during heavy weather the St. Helena struck Bombay rock about 420 miles from Cape St. James. The crew remained on board eight days, when the captain, seeing the vessel was about to sink, put all the water and provisions he could collect into boats and the crew left the wreck. Fifteen days of terrible suffering from hunger, thirst and heat were experienced and then the boats arrived at Cape St. James.

SNATCHED FROM THE GRAVE.

Woman Supposed to Be Dead Saved from Burial in Strange Manner.

Mrs. Ellen Crosby has had a narrow escape from being buried alive in Crawford County, Ind. She had been pronounced dead and preparations for the burial had been made. While this was in progress her daughter, 19 years old, worn out by exhaustion, lay down to rest, but her eyes had scarcely closed before she sprang up, exclaiming "No, no." After reaching her mother's room she kept repeating, "No, no; I won't," and peremptorily insisted that her mother's body be returned to the bed. The undertaker complied with the daughter's request. Nearly eight hours passed, when Mrs. Crosby slowly opened her eyes and looked at her daughter, who had remained by her bedside, constantly watching for a return of life. After a few minutes' silence the mother said: "Mary, I told everyone in the room that I was not dead, but they could not hear me. They did not listen like you, my child."

DIES FOR DEGRADATION CLUB.

Girl from Toledo, Ohio, Expires in a Hovel to Keep Pledge.

A remarkable and almost incredible story is disclosed by a letter, found among the effects of a young woman who died in a hovel near Cummings, Ohio. The girl was Hattie Thetford, the daughter of a prosperous mechanic of Toledo, and her body was found in the shanty occupied by John Kales. Death had resulted from congestion of the lungs. The girl, it appeared upon investigation, had been taken there by a voodoo doctor at 2 o'clock one morning six weeks ago. Her parents did not know her whereabouts. The letter proclaimed Miss Thetford a member of a "degradation club," of which there were ten young women members. According to the written statement, "We cast lots to see who would be the first to carry out the pledges made. The unlucky one was to leave home, friends, everything, and become the most degraded individual possible. We sat about the table and dealt the cards. The queen of hearts was the fatal pastboard, and it came to me."

TEACHER WHIPS ENTIRE CLASS.

Nebraska Boys Attack Their Instructor and Are Badly Worsted.

The grammar school at Cortland, Neb., was the scene of a lively fight, which resulted in one boy, aged 16, being seriously injured and a number of others, including J. G. Ludlam, the teacher, badly bruised. The pupils and the teacher have been at outs for some time and the boys agreed that the first time the teacher attempted to punish any of them there would be a warm time. The trouble came when the teacher attempted to punish Fred Young. The other boys interfered and the teacher plied the rawhide and his fists vigorously to defend himself. When the row was over Fred Young was seriously injured by blows of the fists and cuts from the rawhide, the other boys were also considerably bruised and the teacher, though somewhat disfigured, was still in fighting trim.

Haddock Murder Is Recalled.

Memories of the murder at Sioux City of the Rev. George C. Haddock on Aug. 3, 1886, were revived by news from Oklahoma that Henry Peters, one of the men indicted for the crime, was not burned in the furnace of a Sioux City brewery, as had been supposed all these years, but is living in that territory.

Prices of Felt Hats Rise.

All the leading manufacturers of men's and women's wool felt hats in Danbury, Conn., Reading, Pa., and other hat centers, owing to the rapid rise in the price of wool, by agreement advanced the prices of wool hats 75 cents a dozen on cheap grades and on higher qualities in proportion.

Murder at a Texas Lawsuit.

At Bastrop, Texas, Arthur Burford, son of Sheriff Burford of Colorado County, was instantly killed and William Clements, a deputy, mortally wounded. The shooting, which took place at a murder trial, was caused by the breaking out of an old feud.

Federal Court Frees Reese.

Judge Thayer, in the United States Circuit Court at St. Louis, granted an application for a writ of habeas corpus and ordered the release of John P. Reese, Iowa member of the executive board of the United Mine Workers of America.

Burned by Lamp Explosion.

Mrs. Mary Theobold, aged 58, was burned to death and her daughter, Lucinda, aged 28, was so badly burned she cannot live, at Louisville, Ky., by the explosion of a lamp.

UNCLE SAM: "THEY'RE UP TO CONGRESS NOW."

—Williamsport, Pa., Grit.

UNIFORM MARRIAGE LAWS.

Amendment to the Constitution May Result from Roberts Case

One result of the Roberts case is the determination of certain Congressmen to press the passage of uniform marriage and divorce laws in the several States. Of course, a constitutional amendment is necessary and about a dozen Congressmen and several Senators have introduced resolutions proposing to submit the subject to the State Legislatures. In the House the judiciary committee has charge of the matter and its chairman, Ray of New York, is interesting himself personally to obtain a favorable report at this session.

"One of the first bills I introduced when I came to Congress some years ago," said Chairman Ray, "was one proposing an amendment to the constitution for uniform marriage and divorce laws. It is now possible for a man to have four or five lawful wives in as many States. That is approaching pretty closely to legalized polygamy. Each one would be his only lawful wife in the State in which he married her. The police of New York could not touch the man in Pennsylvania, etc., and he could run his marriage trust with impunity.

"The Roberts case has had the effect of not only attracting attention anew to the polygamous practices of the Mormons in Utah, but of directing notice to those anomalies of our marriage and divorce laws. I believe in striking while the iron is hot and I think the agitation over Roberts will result in a favorable report from this committee on one of the resolutions and in its adoption by the House.

"We would have had a favorable report on this subject two Congresses ago, but one of the Southern members demanded that the constitutional amendment include a prohibition of miscegenation, or mixed marriages between black and whites. His State had a law on this point, and he did not want a United States law that would permit such marriages in contravention of the State regulation."

THE COURT IS ROASTED.

Preacher Brougher on the Julia Morrison Verdict.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., in the First Baptist Church Sunday night, Rev. J. A. Brougher preached on "Murder," using the Julia Morrison case as the basis. The house was crowded and his remarks were frequently applauded. Dr. Brougher, referring to the Julia Morrison case, said: "That was just such a miscarriage of justice as encourages pistol carrying, mobs and lynching. Human life is held in too light esteem in this community. I might have forgiven the jury its verdict if the woman had shown any decency upon her acquittal and had gone into privacy, but instead she flaunts herself and her crime in the face of public decency. I hope when she delivers her lecture here it will be to empty benches. That is the only way to properly condemn such brazenness. The law should know no sex in crime. Until courts and juries act upon this principle such high-handed and bloody tragedies as the killing of Leiden will continue to darken the moral atmosphere of this community."

AGAINST ADMIRAL DEWEY.

Decision in the Claim for Prize Money at Manila.

The Attorney General has filed the answer of the United States on the suit instituted by Admiral Dewey in behalf of himself and officers in the District Supreme Court in connection with the prizes captured at Manila. The Attorney General asks that the case be referred to a commissioner. He avers that the cruisers Isla de Cuba and Isla de Luzon, and Don Juan de Austria were sunk instead of captured, as claimed. The Attorney General denies that the enemy's vessels, supported by any torpedoes, mines and land batteries were of superior force to the vessels of Dewey's squadron.

ILLINOIS MAKES BEST SHOWING.

Reports of the Growth of the United Mine Workers of America.

The third day's session of the United Mine Workers of America convened at Indianapolis, with John Mitchell, president, in the chair. There were fully 700 delegates present. Chairman P. J. Keonan of the credentials committee submitted his report. The showing of the various States was larger than expected. The Indiana districts reported many increases. Pratt City, Ala., has the largest local, with over 1,380 paid-up members. Streator, Ill., has a local with over 1,100 members. Illinois made the best showing. Secretary W. D. Ryan of the State organization is also treasurer of his organization, which now has $112,000 cash on hand. During 1899 he raised over $300,000, and more than $250,000 was raised by Illinois in 1898. Ryan's organization has 35,000 members. President Mitchell's report touched many subjects, including the refusal of the Indiana block operators to sign the Pittsburg agreement, the advance of mining rates, the eight-hour question, the Southwestern strike, and Federal injunctions.

At the last annual convention the secretary's report showed an average paid-up membership of approximately 33,000, the largest number being in the month of December, at which time there were 54,771 members, in 628 local unions. At the present time there are 931 local unions, with a total membership paid up of 91,010. During 1899 387 new locals were organized, the membership increasing more than in any other year in the history of the order. The finances are in fine shape, a balance of $40,000 being on hand.

RAILROAD BUILDING IN 1899.

A Record that Has Not Been Equaled Since '92.

Estimates made by the Railroad Gazette show that the mileage of new railroads built during the year 1899 aggregate 4,557 miles. This is more than double the average mileage for the four years from 1894 to 1898 inclusive, and has not been equalled since 1892. Last year there were 3,265 miles built in the United States. The State which stands highest is Iowa with a total of 553 miles. Next come Minnesota with 374 miles; Arkansas, 265; California, 209, and Michigan, 178. These five States include one-third of the total mileage of the year. Twenty-nine of the States and territories have added over fifty miles each to their lines, and seventeen have added over 100 miles each. Among the latter States are Pennsylvania, with 170 miles; Alabama, 161; Louisiana, 149; Florida and Mississippi each 148; South Carolina, 139; Georgia, 137; Oklahoma, 135; Tennessee, 118. The railroad which stands first is the Chicago and Northwestern with a total of 358 miles. Then follow the Illinois Central with 196 miles; the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf, 162; the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, 160; the Seaboard Air Line, 145; Minneapolis and St. Louis, 102, and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 98 miles. With comparatively few exceptions the larger additions of mileage have been made by the old roads.

CUBAN CENSUS

Is Completed and There Is a Population of 1,200,000.

C. H. Olmstead, the assistant director of the Cuban census, with four statisticians and supervisors who had been working for the last several months in Cuba, are now in New York. They brought with them twenty-four boxes of records, all of which were sent to Washington. Manuel Rasco, who was the supervisor of Havana province, did not accompany his colleagues to Washington. He said that 1,550 enumerators had been appointed, all of whom were Cubans.

The result of the work indicates that the Spanish census taken in 1887 will probably have to be reduced by about 400,000. Thus the present population of Cuba will be about 1,200,000. The cost to the Government of taking the census will be between $300,000 and $400,000.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION HALL, PHILADELPHIA.

The main Philadelphia exposition building, in which the Republican national convention of 1900 will be held, is built of structural steel and brick, with plaster facing and staff ornamentations. It will, at a comparatively small cost, be converted into a convention hall that will seat 18,000 persons. The arcades and connecting buildings are mostly of wood, with brick walls, so that the three connected buildings make one mammoth exhibition hall of 1,000 feet in length by 400 feet in width. The entire area of the main building is 167,200 square feet. It is divided into six sections, which can be readily converted into one vast auditorium, the length of which, instead of extending north and south, as at present, will, with the side wall taken out and the hall enlarged, extend east and west.

The Senate on Thursday listened to a debate on the Philippines between Mr. Lodge and Mr. Pettigrew, the former urging full publicity on all matters connected with the issue and the latter bitterly attacking the administration. Heard Mr. Stewart in opposition to the currency reform bill. Passed the bill conferring additional authority upon the director of the census. Passed the bill increasing to $2,500,000 the limit of cost of the new Indianapolis public building. Adjourned to Monday. The House was not in session.

The Senate held no session on Friday. In the House Mr. Sulzer (Dem., N. Y.) presented for immediate consideration a resolution for the appointment of a special committee of nine members to investigate the relations of the Secretary of the Treasury with certain New York national banks and the transactions relative to the sale of the New York custom house. Mr. Dalzell (Rep., Pa.) objected on the ground that the resolution should go through the box in the regular way. He then asked unanimous consent, but Mr. Hopkins (Rep., Ill.) objected. Adjourned until Monday.

The Senate spent most of the day Monday in debate on various Philippine resolutions. Opening speech made by Mr. Bacon. Mr. Pettigrew concluded his speech begun last week, vigorously attacking the administration. Mr. Wolcott replied, scoring Dakota Senator. Consideration of financial bill then resumed. Mr. Rawlins spoke in opposition to measure. In the House Mr. Cannon (Ill.), from committee on appropriations, reported urgent deficiency appropriation bill and gave notice he would call it up for consideration Tuesday. Resolution adopted calling upon Secretary of State for information relative to status of the agree- between Great Britain and United States which prevented United States from building, arming or maintaining more than one war vessel upon great lakes. Rest of day devoted to consideration of District of Columbia business.

The Senate on Tuesday received a petition from Mr. Cullom, signed by 3,200 colored persons in Illinois, asking Congressional action to protect negroes from lynching. By a vote of 41 to 20 laid on the table Mr. Pettigrew's amendment to Mr. Hoar's Philippine resolution calling for the instructions to the peace commission. Heard Mr. McLaurin in opposition to the financial bill and in advocacy of conferring authority upon State banks to issue circulating notes. The House devoted the day to debate on the item appropriating $150,000 for rural free mail delivery contained in the urgent deficiency bill, and listened to an attack on Secretary Gage by Mr. Richardson of Tennessee and his defense by Mr. Hopkins of Illinois.

The Senate agreed on Wednesday to take final vote on gold standard bill Feb. 15. Passed Mr. Hoar's resolution of inquiry regarding conduct of Philippine war as substitute for similar pending resolutions. Adopted resolution offered by Mr. Hale as to seizure of flour by British authorities, but only after spirited debate and after resolution had been materially amended. The House decided by vote of 174 to 138 that census bill reported by Mr. Hopkins (Ill.) was privileged. Mr. Barney (Wis.), from the committee on appropriations, reported pension appropriation bill. Passed urgency deficiency bill.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Beet Sugar Land in the State—Boy Shot and Killed by a Young Acquaintance—Determined Suicide in Indianapolis—Value of Broken Heart.

Chemist Henry A. Houston, who has charge of the tests of Indiana as a place for the growing of sugar beets, has made a report in which he says that the possibilities of the State as a sugar producer have been sufficiently tested. He finds that the best sugar beet lands in Indiana lie in the northwest section, extending from Newton County up through the Kankakee swamp lands to Elkhart. This section did not make the best showing last year, but during the ten years that experiments have been in progress it has shown much the best average. The Kankakee section is declared by Prof. Houston to be as good sugar beet land as can be found in the world, with the possible exception of a portion of California. The beets grown in this region contain an average of 15 per cent of sugar, while the famous German fields seldom produce 18 per cent in good seasons.

Boy Coolly Murders Another.

At Augusta Frank Purcell, aged 18, shot and killed Rufus Ross, aged 17. Ross and several of his friends were giving a stag party. About midnight Purcell came along and, calling Ross to the front gate, asked why he had not been invited. Ross made no reply and Purcell drew a pistol and shot him, killing him instantly. Purcell was drunk and tried to make his escape, but was overtaken a few miles north of Augusta by a mob. Sheriff Ridgeway and posse took the murderer from the mob and placed him in jail at Petersburg.

Cut Off His Hand at the Wrist.

John Schmable, 55 years old, was found dead at a house on the south side of Indianapolis. He had taken a common pocket knife and severed his hand from the arm at the wrist, bleeding to death. A deep gash in the forearm indicated that he had first attempted to open an artery at that point. The wound had bled profusely, but Schmable thought death too slow and then hacked off his hand.

Want $10,000 for Breach of Promise.

Miss Hattie Barco, a society woman of Covington, has brought suit for $10,000 against Stephen Foster of the same place for breach of promise. She says that Foster, after being her devoted lover for two years and winning her promise of marriage, "repudiated his contract and married another."

In Indianapolis John Price, colored, 77 years old, was literally cooked to death at his home by the heat resulting from increased gas pressure. Price was bedfast and had never been left alone until that night. He was a civil war veteran.

CUPID'S DECADENCE.

In ancient days, when all was young,
And Love and Hope were rife,
Dan Cupid fed on rustic fare,
And lived a country life.

He rose betimes at break of day,
And round the country harried;
Upstirring hearts that were unwed,
And shooting down the married.

But then, on wider mischief bent,
He hied him to the city;
And finding much to suit his taste,
He stayed there—more's the pity.

Men built him there a golden house,
Bedight with golden stars;
They feasted him on golden grain,
And wine in golden jars.

They draped his pretty nakedness
In richest cloth of gold,
And set him up in business,
Where Love was bought and sold.

And thus he led a city life,
Forgetting his nativity;
Since then he's gone from bad to worse,
From Cupid to cupidity.

ONLY A QUARTER.

PLEASE, sir, will you buy my chestnuts?"

"Chestnuts! No!" returned Ralph Moore, looking carelessly down on the upturned face, whose large brown eyes, shadowed by tangled curls of flaxen hair, were appealing so pitifully to his own. "What do I want of chestnuts?"

"But, please, sir, do buy 'em," pleaded the little one, reassured by the rough kindness of his tone. "Nobody seems to care for them, and——"

She fairly burst into tears, and Moore who had been on the point of brushing carelessly past her, stopped instinctively.

"Are you so very much in want of the money?"

"Indeed, sir, we are," sobbed the child; "mother sent me out and——"

"Nay, little one, don't cry," said Ralph, smoothing her tangled hair. "I don't want your chestnuts, but here's a quarter for you, if it will do you any good."

He did not stay to hear the delighted thanks the child poured out through a rainbow of smiles and tears, but strode on his way muttering between his teeth: "That cuts off my supply of cigars for the next twenty-four hours. I don't care, though, for the brown-eyed object really did cry as if she hadn't a friend in the world. Hang it! I wish I was rich enough to help every poor creature out of the slough of despond."

While Ralph Moore was indulging in these very natural reflections, the dark-robed little damsel whom he had comforted, was dashing down streets with rapid footsteps, utterly regardless of the basket of unsold nuts that still dangled upon her arm. Down an obscure alley she darted, and up a narrow wooden staircase to a room where a pale, neat-looking woman was sewing as busily as if the breath of life depended upon every stitch, and two little ones were playing in the sunshine that supplied the place of the absent fire. "Mary! back already? Surely you have not sold your chestnuts so soon!"

"Oh, mother, see!" ejaculated the breathless child. "A gentleman gave me a quarter! Only think, mother, a whole quarter!"

If Ralph Moore could only have seen the rapture which his small silver gift had brought into that poverty stricken home he would have grudged still less his privation of cigars.

* * * * * * *

Years came and went. The little chestnut girl passed entirely out of Ralph Moore's memory, but Mary Lee never forgot the stranger who had given her the silver quarter.

* * * * * * *

The crimson window curtains were closely drawn to shut out the storm and blast of the bleak December night. A fire was glowing cheerily in the grate, and the dinner table was in a glitter with cut glass, rare china and polished silver. Everything was waiting for the presence of Mr. Audley.

"What can it be that detains pa?" said Mrs. Audley, a fair, handsome matron of about 30, as she glanced at her tiny watch.

"There's a man with him in the study, come on business," said Robert Audley, a pretty boy of 12 years, who was reading by the fire.

"I'll call him again," said Mrs. Audley, stepping to the door. But as she opened it the gas light fell on the face of a humble-looking man in threadbare garments, who was leaving the house, while her husband stood in the doorway of his study, apparently relieved to be rid of his visitor.

"Charles," said Mrs. Audley, "who is that man and what does he want?"

"His name is Moore, I believe, love, and he came to see if I would give him the vacant position in the bank."

"And will you?" she eagerly asked.

"Don't know, Mary. I must think about it."

"Charles, give him the situation."

"Why, my dear?"

"Because I ask it of you as a favor, and you have said a hundred times you would never deny me anything."

"And I will keep my promise, Mary," said her lover husband with an affectionate kiss. "I will write the fellow a note this very evening."

An hour later when the children were tucked snugly in bed, Mrs. Audley told her husband why she was interested in the fate of a man whose face she had not forgotten in twenty years. "That's right, my little wife," said her husband when the simple tale was finished, "never forget one who has been kind to you in the days when you needed kindness most."

Ralph Moore was sitting that selfsame night in his poor lodgings, beside his wife's sick bed, when a liveried servant brought a note from the rich and prosperous banker, Charles Audley.

"Goodness, Bertha!" he exclaimed joyfully, as he read the words. "We shall not starve. Mr. Audley has promised me the position."

"You have dropped something from the note, Ralph," said Mrs. Moore, and pointed to a slip of paper on the floor. Moore stooped to pick it up. It was a $50 bill neatly folded in a piece of paper on which was written:

"In grateful remembrance of the silver quarter that a stranger bestowed on a little chestnut girl twenty years ago."

Ralph Moore had thrown his morsel of bread upon the waters of life, and after many days it had returned to him.—Philadelphia Item.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY QUESTION.

DIAGRAM ILLUSTRATING BOTH ARGUMENTS.

THE above diagram does not settle the question as to when the twentieth century began or begins, but it is given merely to show how both sides may be right. The whole question hinges on one point, whether the first year of time, A. D., was the year 0 or the year 1.

The 1901 advocates claim that, according to all common sense, reason and logic, the first year, from its first instant to its last, was the year 1. The 1900 people contend that time began at zero, not at 1, and that there was no year 1 until a complete unit, composed of 12 months, 52 weeks, or however the component parts may be designated, had been reached. They argue that time cannot begin at 1, any more than the figures on a thermometer, or a groceryman's scales, could begin at 1.

The advocates of 1900 insist that a difference between the use of cardinal and ordinal numbers must be observed. Six ounces of butter, say these reasoners, is 0 pounds and 6 ounces, and the first six months of time were year 0 and 6 months, not one year. The 1901 people do not regard the divisions between the years as governing the name of the year, but call the whole first year "year 1," the second year "year 2," etc., the 99th year being "year 99," and the 100th year "year 100."

The 1900 people, however, first designated the line marking the beginning of time "9," just as would be done on a thermometer or scale, the next division line "1," etc., by which process they arrive at 99 for the last division line before zero, or the point of beginning over again. These cardinal numerals, they contend, must govern the naming of the years, not the ordinal numerals used, by the 1901 people. The first year, they claim, is not the year 1, but the year 0, and whatever fraction may have passed; the second year the year 1 and a fraction, etc. The first century began with 0, they claim; the second with 100, and the 20th will begin with 1900. And there you are.

WAS IT AN ACCIDENT.

Dragon Fly Securely Held by the Tendril of a Living Vine.

A most unusual occurrence is illustrated here. Mr. P. G. Lechen, of Milwaukee, Wis., who sends the photograph to an exchange, vouches for the following statement. He says: "One of the prominent citizens of this town

THE CAPTIVE DRAGON FLY.

while walking in his garden one morning was attracted by the futile struggle of a huge dragon-fly endeavoring to free itself from the tight grip of one of the tendrils of a wild cucumber vine. Apparently the tendril had twined itself so securely around the fly's body that the poor insect became a prisoner. It struggled for two days, and finally died of exhaustion. The question suggests itself: Was it an accident, or did the tendril act as a trap, after the manner of certain species which are recognized as insect-catching plants?"

Commissions of Express Companies.

The express companies attend to purchases and sales, and to every variety of legal business, from searching a title to suing for a debt. They file models of inventions and get out patents, and have been known to stake out a properly described mining claim and attend to its development. The suburban lady, whose husband is disobliging or color blind, can safely entrust them with a piece of silk to match, and they will send an expert to match it for her and make the desired purchase. The actress who is forced by bad business to pawn her diamonds for money to get back to the Rialto can commission them, when prosperity has returned, to redeem her jewels, or pay the interest and have the pawn tickets renewed. In their C. O. D. departments they deliver goods for stores and collect for them, and they also attend to the collection of insurance benefits, payment of lodge dues and taxes. A young man can order an engagement ring through them, and the bride can order such parts of her trosseau as she cannot secure from local dealers. They will cheerfully attend to the engraving of card plates, with neatness and dispatch, will have clothes pressed and cleaned, and make themselves useful in almost every way the mind can conceive. These things are mentioned simply to give some idea of the surpassing things that express companies do. To describe their business in all its ramifications would be to describe practically every line of business in which one man commissions another to do anything for him.—Ainslee's.

Cutting.

The law court is the modern substitute for the tournament, and a pretty good substitute it proves when a battle is on between rival lawyers quick-witted and outspoken.

The late Col. John Atkinson was opposed in an important case by another able lawyer, James H. Pound, and they were fighting like giants for every point of advantage. Pound had won a majority of the jousts; the Colonel was nettled, and was lying low for a chance to deliver a swinging blow.

"It came," says the judge, "when I decided a point against Pound. It had been fiercely argued by both attorneys, and in deciding it as I did, I stated my reasons at length, giving authorities. I saw Pound shake his head at one of my conclusions; his lips moved, and I supposed he had made some comment, so when I concluded my decision, I asked:

"'What did you say, Mr. Pound?'

"Quick as a shot, and in his most cutting tones of intense sarcasm, the Colonel replied:

"'Mr. Pound did not speak, your honor. He merely shook his head. There is nothing in it.'"—Youth's Companion.

Anecdote of a Dog.

Many years ago my wife and I made up our minds to possess a dog, and after much debate and long search purchased a fox terrier in the dog market. We named him "Tip." Tip was a most intelligent animal; indeed at times his evident comprehension of conversation and discussion of events in the family circle was startling. My wife was not so assured as I was that "Tip" really understood speech with the intelligence of "humans," so I planned the following to convince her.

I arranged that one evening the dog should be on the hearth rug between us (a favorite position with Mr. Tip) and that I would begin talking about him to her. I did so, and found considerable fault, among the phrases I used being, "he is getting useless, and I shall have to sell him."

The effect was startling, and caused me great surprise as well as remorse. Tip stood up, the great tears came into his eyes, and with an indignant look at me, slowly went out of the room and house, and it took a long time for him to recover his old trust in me.—J. W. Monk.

Unintentional.

A London exquisite went into a West End restaurant, says an exchange, and was far from pleased with the manner in which his order was filled.

"Do you call that a veal cutlet?" he demanded of the waiter. "Why, such a cutlet as that is an insult to every self-respecting calf in the British empire."

The waiter hung his head for a moment, but recovered himself and said, in a tone of respectful apology:

"I really didn't intend to insult you, sir."

A woman can forgive her husband for not coming home to dinner on only one condition; that he ate a church dinner down town.

Time and patience will enable a person to conquer almost any obstacle.

GREAT VIOLINISTS OF THE PAST AND OF THE PRESENT DAY.

SAURET. YSAYE. PAGANINI. JOACHIM. OLE BULL. MAUD POWELL.

Paganini, the wizard of the bow, was born in Genoa, Italy, in 1784, and from earliest boyhood displayed such extraordinary capacity as a violinist that he was popularly supposed to be under Satan's influence. Ole Bull, born in Bergen, Norway, in 1810, is probably the greatest violinist who has ever played in the United States. Joseph Joachim, one of the musical giants of the century, was born in Hungary in 1831. Eugene Ysaye is the greatest musician Belgium has produced for years; he was born in 1858. Among modern violinists Emil Sauret is well known in America, he having visited the United States in 1872-73; he was born in France in 1852. One of the greatest woman violinists of the world is Maud Powell of Chicago. She was born in Aurora, Ill., in 1868. Her father is American and her mother German. In 1885 she made her debut in Berlin, at the Philharmonic concerts, when she played the Bruch concerto.

HUMOR OF THE WEEK

STORIES TOLD BY FUNNY MEN OF THE PRESS.

Odd, Curious and Laughable Phases of Human Nature Graphically Portrayed by Eminent Word Artists of Our Own Day—A Budget of Fun.

"I have but one rule that I follow absolutely in this life, and that is to make other people as happy as possible."

"Well," she replied, "you ought to be gratified, then, at what I heard a young lady say the other day."

"What was that?"

"She said that whenever she saw you dancing she had to laugh."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Personal Equation.

Teacher—If one servant girl could clean two rooms in two hours, how long would it take two servant girls to do it?

Little Girl—Four hours.

Teacher—Wrong. It would only take one hour.

Little Girl—Oh, I didn't know you were talking about servant girls that wasn't on speaking terms.—Collier's Weekly.

His Base of Supplies.

The Financial Question.

Maude—Did he tell you he loved you?

Clara—Yes

Maude—Then why did you refuse him?

Clara—I want a paying teller.

A Slight Misunderstanding.

"Young man," said the girl's father, "do you realize that in asking for my daughter's hand in marriage you are asking me to give up my only child?"

"Excuse me, sir," replied the young man, "but you are evidently laboring under a misapprehension. I propose to come and live with you after we are married, and you will then have two children instead of one. Now what more could you ask?"

What Surprised Him.

A countryman who had just registered at the Peabody this morning made a comical blunder, which, however, was a very remarkable one.

"Front!" exclaimed the clerk to one of the bellboys, "show the gentleman to Room No. —."

The old fellow started off with a puzzled look, but remarked to a bystander:

"It's a mighty funny thing, but no matter what hotel I stop at there's always a bellboy named Front."—Memphis Scimitar.

"Oh, you needn't be so stuck up. You're only a shade taller than I am."

Dire Vengeance.

She—I heard about the elopement. Has her mother forgiven them?

He—I think not. I understand she has gone to live with them.—Collier's Weekly.

Enjoying Poor Health.

The Chicken—How's your appetite these days, old man?

The Bulldog—Not very good. I feel just as satisfied after a few bites as if I'd had a meal. How's yours?

The Chicken—Poor, very poor! I just pick at things.—New York Press.

Not So Easy.

"What made you so long getting ready?"

"I had lost the combination and couldn't get my ear muffs on."—Chicago Record.

Merely a Good Listener.

Miss Swelltop—Sister is so disappointed. She can't go to the opera tonight.

Miss Blugore—Is she so ill as all that?

Miss Swelltop—Oh, no! it's just a nervous affection of the throat. She's not really ill.

Miss Blugore—Why can't she she go, then?

Miss Swelltop—Why, goodness gracious! She can't speak above a whisper.—Philadelphia Press.

Heartily Agreed with Him.

Pa—My son, we must never put off till to-morrow what we can do to-day.

Willie—Well, then, pa, let's finish up that mince pie.—Philadelphia Record.

Extremely So.

Dramatist—Don't you think my play is very realistic?

Critic—Very. The church scene in the third act was so natural that I went to sleep.

Couldn't Hear It.

Hostess—Did you hear Wagner's "Lohengrin" performed in Paris?

Returned Tourist—No. I was in London at the time, and the wind was blowing the wrong way.—New York Weekly.

A Practical Motive.

Aunt Gertrude—And what will you do when you are a man, Tommy?

Tommy—I'm going to grow a beard.

Aunt Gertrude—Why?

Tommy—Because then I won't have nearly so much face to wash.—Collier's Weekly.

A Secret No Longer.

Wytte—The great inventor is dead and his marvelous secret is lost.

Wycke—Not at all. I understand he committed it to his wife.

Wytte—Exactly.—Philadelphia Press.

Not a Speaking One.

Hoax—Henpeck's wife is an awful talker. Did you ever meet her?

Joax—Oh, yes; I have a listening acquaintance with her.—Philadelphia Record.

Two of a Kind.

Mrs. Jaggson—Intoxicated again?

Jaggson—So'm I, m' dear—hic—so'm I.

Good Reason to Be Superstitious.

"Superstitious!" he exclaimed. "Of course I am superstitious. I sat down to dinner as one of a party of thirteen once on the thirteenth of the month, and thirteen courses were served."

"And one of them died?"

"Yes, sir; one of them died."

"How soon after the dinner?"

"Thirteen years after. Oh, I tell you, when thirteen sits down to dinner it's a dead-sure thing that somebody is going to die some time."—New York World.

A Poor Witness.

"Pardon me," began the visitor, "but we are anxious to secure from you a testimonial. We understand that you were troubled with falling hair, and that one bottle of our 'Elixir' relieved you."

"Yes, young man," replied the victime, removing his wig, "it relieved me of the few that remained to me."—Philadelphia Press.

How Should He Take It?

She—Oh! how I wish you were young.

He—My dear, if I were I should have to go out to South Africa and fight, perhaps to be killed.

She—Oh! how do I wish you were young.—Pick Me Up.

An Unknown Tongue.

The Optimist—A pure woman's heart is like an open book.

The Old One—Yes. I've often wondered what the language is it is written in.—New York Press.

Another Husband in Trouble.

The wife of an employe of the Philadelphia postoffice recently got a set of four "store teeth," which she usually placed on the bureau in the bedroom before retiring for the night. One morning she arose early and went to prepare breakfast. When her husband arose he saw the teeth on the bureau. To accommodate his wife he put them in his trousers pocket, intending to give them to her when he went down stairs. Instead, he forgot all about them and carried them off. About three hours later his wife rushed into the postoffice and between sobs exclaimed: "I've swallowed my teeth. What shall I do? I know I'll die," and so on. The man fished the missing teeth from his pocket, when his wife's tears turned to indignation, and the setting out she gave her poorer half will long be remembered by the office clerks.

Just about the time you begin to think your cup of happiness is going to run over it springs a leak.

TREASURES IN BANKS.

SOMETIMES LIE UNCLAIMED FOR MANY YEARS.

Queer Finds in Boxes Left for Safe Keeping—How Interest, Under English Law, Accumulates on Unclaimed Deposits—Advertising for Owners.

As is well known, banks act as custodians of boxes deposited with them for safe keeping. They make no charge for doing so, their object being to undertake no responsibility and incur no risk, as the acceptance of payment would imply. Naturally it happens that boxes stowed away by the banks in this manner come to be lost sight of by their owners. Those who left them for safe keeping die without passing on the secret of their existence to their heirs. Who is to know that such possessions could be claimed? It has been suggested that these boxes should be occasionally overhauled and their contents made public.

An advertisement was issued in 1881 by order of the court of chancery, Ireland, with a view to discover the owners of the following among other valuables deposited in a Dublin bank: "(1) Box containing a number of silver articles, coins, medals and seals, and having on it a crest and the name 'E. S. Cooper;' (2) box containing a number of silver articles, of which several are crested with a coat of arms, supposed to be those of Viscount Netterville; (3) box containing thirty-nine articles of plate, some of them bearing a coronet; (4) box containing diamonds and articles of jewelry, lodged by Dr. Andrew Blake and George Jennings on Dec. 22, 1796." There were some curious inquiries and tales about the chests found in their vaults, which were eventually handed over to the court of chancery.

In the vaults of the Bank of Ireland are some chests of plate which were deposited with the bank before it moved into its present building—that is, before the year 1800—the owners of which are unknown. Some years ago the confidential staff of the Bank of England discovered in the vaults a chest which, on being moved, literally fell to pieces from age. It contained a magnificent and very valuable toilet service of solid silver. No clue to the owner's identity could be found either on the box or on any of the pieces of plate, which were simply engraved with a cipher and a coronet.

However, among the numerous other things found in the box were a gold casket of the period of Charles II. and a packet of old love letters written during the time of the restoration. These afforded some clue to the original depositor, and, the directors having caused search to be made in the bank's books, the representative of the old owner was discovered and the plate and love letters handed over accordingly. The sale of the plate brought in a sum which was most welcome to the poverty-stricken descendants of a once great family. So far as known, there are no unclaimed boxes in the keeping of the Scotch banks.

Unclaimed deposits occasionally crop up when from time to time calls are made on banks to pay them. Instances of this become public in sufficient number to indicate that there is something in the demand for publicity of these dormant balances. A few years ago a Glasgow man died, and among his possessions was an old desk. This fell to one of his heirs, and not so long since a woman connected with the family was struck with the similarity of this article to one she had herself, and she expressed a curiosity as to whether it had, like her desk, a secret drawer.

Examination was made, and, sure enough, a drawer was found, and in it two deposit receipts for sums aggregating something over $1,500. These deposits were dated away back between thirty and forty years, and one of them was on the City of Glasgow Bank.

They were, of course, duly presented, and both were paid with interest. In an old box with books belonging to a provincial library there was found a bank book which must have lain there for about thirty years. The amount deposited was only about $18, but so long had the money remained that the interest on that sum amounted to about $40.50, making a total of about $59—not a despicable sum in these degenerate days.—Chambers' Journal.

Children, with his own, and all others, he regarded with a tenderness intermixed with the awe that comes from an utter failure to comprehend. He felt keenly the responsibility of fatherhood, but also felt his hand stayed from timorousness because of the injustice of having caused their being. The death of his wife left him in a condition of helplessness until his sister assumed the place of mother to the three growing children. Of the youngest, Philip, he once said, "The dear child is as pertinacious as a fly in his inquiries. I had no idea a child could ask so many questions, and I find it easier to settle municipal affairs than to give an answer to such queries as, 'Papa, must I wear my rubbers?' or 'Papa, how many apples may I eat a day?'"

In speaking again of Philip, at the age of nine or ten, he says in a letter: "On Sunday morning I got the small boy dressed and set him on the strait and narrow path—nay, push him before me down its dreary way to church service."—Ainslee's.

"He's a Brick."

The phrase, "He's a brick," is derived from an expression of Aristotle, which, translated from Greek into English, signifies "a four-cornered man," a brick having four corners. By a man or an action being "square," we mean "honest." Aristotle's expression may be rather equivalent to an "all-round" man. An ambassador, once upon a time, expressed to the King of Sparta his wonder that none of the Spartan cities had walls of defense. The King took him to where his little army was drawn up for inspection, and, pointing to them, said: "These are the walls of Sparta—10,000 men, and every man a brick."—New York Home Journal.

AN X-RAY DELUSION.

Apparatus Apparently Photographs the Interior of the Body.

Gustave Michaud, D. Sc., describes in the Scientific American a most ingenious scientific toy which is productive of endless amusement, yielding results which are simply astonishing for spectators who have not been told the secret of its construction. It apparently reproduces instantaneously and neatly the interior of the human body, giving to every organ its natural color. The whole operation is performed under the eyes of the bewildered sitter, who watches the X-rays in what seems to be the act of drawing and painting before his eyes his vital organs.

The apparatus looks like the objective tube of a camera, with the plate on which the image is to be produced in full sight of everyone. The apparatus is placed opposite the person whose viscera are to be photographed, and to heighten the effect a lamp may be solemnly placed behind the sitter. The operator invites everyone to look at the white sheet of paper, and presses the rubber bulg of the shutter. A colored image appears instantaneously on the paper. The lungs are a bright red color, the heart is darker, the veins are blue, the stomach and intestines are of a greenish tint; other parts of the body paint themselves in black on the white paper. This sudden apparition generally startles the sitter; but a few remarks on the healthy looks of his lungs will place him at his ease. The photograph is taken out of the apparatus and passed among the spectators.

Two distinct parts of the apparatus co-operate in the production of that X-ray trick; namely, the sheet of paper and the objective tube.

Before the experiment, the sheet of paper is treated as follows: It is pinned over any anatomical drawing showing the position of the principal thoracic and abdominal organs. If the sheet of paper is not too thick, the drawing can be seen through it. The space occupied by the lungs is then painted with a diluted solution of sulfocyanide of potassium. A more concentrated solution of the same salt is used to fill the space outlined by the heart and principal arteries. A few big veins are painted with a solution of ferrocyanide of potassium. A more diluted solution of the same salt is used for the stomach and a few intestinal folds. The rest of the body is uniformly painted with a concentrated solution of tannin. The whole operation need not take more than five minutes. When the paper is dry, the drawing is absolutely invisible, for all the above named solutions are colorless. The sheet of paper is now ready for use in the apparatus.

The objective tube does not contain any lens, but merely a small atomizer filled with a solution of ferric chloride. When pressed the rubber bulb sends air, not as every spectator believes, into a pneumatic shutter, but into the atomizer. As a result a fine and invisible spray of the perchloride of iron solution reaches for a moment the sheet of paper. What follows is easily understood by every student of chemistry.

The reactions between ferric salts on one side, sulfocyanide of potassium, ferrocyanide of potassium, and tannin on the other side, are among the most sensitive of analytical tests, owing to the extraordinary intensity of the red, blue and black colors which originate in these reactions. Hence the instantaneous production of the colored picture.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY....JANUARY 25, 1900.

Kentucky Letter

DEAR MR. BARNS:—In the old days before the war, a great effort was made to abolish slavery in Kentucky. Henry Clay and most of the best people, slaveholders, were in favor of abolishing slavery, but the other side prevailed. The state constitution was more intensely pro-slavery, and the movement for ridding the south of that great evil failed. Then they began to persecute the anti-slavery people. John Burney and many others were compelled to flee for safety. But there were some men who knew not fear, they proposed to use and exercise the right of free speech. Among them was Gen. Cassius M. Clay, another was John G. Fee, a fearless and eloquent preacher of Bracken Co. Gen. Clay invited Bro. Fee to locate in the border line between the foot-hills of the Appalachian mountains, and the blue grass region of Kentucky, a place where safety might be secured.

The Church of Christ at Berea was founded in 1853, the school began in 1855. It became very popular in the south, even the slave holders were greatly pleased, and sent many children there to school.

After John Brown's raid in 1859, false reports were circulated and the school was forcibly broken up. Berea exerted a great influence in keeping Kentucky in the union. The battle of Richmond was fought a few miles north of Berea, with which some of our readers are very familiar. After the war was over the school was permanently taken up and has been advancing ever since. Last year during which an endowment of two hundred thousand was raised, this has been a boon to southern education.

Berea is one hundred and thirty-two miles south of Cincinnati, on the L. & N. railroad, K. C. division. It has a beautiful location as to climate and scenery. Any young man who is in earnest with but little expense; one hundred dollars will pay the whole expense, car fare excepted. I know young men who have earned over half of that during the school year. Should any desire to know about Berea or her school, address the secretary of Berea College, Berea, Ky. Yours truly,

JOSIAH C. TEETERS.

His Life Was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says; "I was taken with Typhoid Fever, that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave me great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure for all Throat and Lung Trouble. Regular size 50 cents and $1. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's Drug Store: every bottle guaranteed.

Nice Gathering.

A very good natured company gathering with Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Reynolds of Sedan last Thursday to witness the marriage of their daughter Edna to Mr. Arthur Bateman. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. E. Gaff, the bride's pastor. These young people start out in life with the best wishes of a large circle of friends. They will probably make their future home in Auburn.

Court Notes.

Monday's Daily.

Judge Bratton returned from Angola today on the morning train ready to resume work on the sixth week of the circuit court. The first case called for the attention of the jury was that of Joshua Harman vs. David Saunders, for replevin. This is the case in which Sheriff Hathaway replevined some horses and mules for Mr. Harman from Mr. Saunders, who was using the animals on the B. & O. grade work at Garrett. A man named Spangler claimed to own the animals and after Sheriff Hathaway had taken them and turned them over to Harman, Spangler sued the Sheriff, on his official bond. The two cases have been consolidated and the trial is now in progress.

Tuesday's Daily.

The case of the Milford Lumber company against Theodore Gary, for damages on contract, has been continued to the March term.

Aaron B. Hartman has been adjudged of unsound mind and incapable of handling his own estate. Royal O. Talbert was appointed guardian under bond of $1,000.

In the case of Harman vs. Saunders to recover the horses by replevin proceedings, C. M. Brown and F. D. West are attorneys for Harmon and Sharpless and Mountz for Saunders. Saunders on the stand yesterdy, said when he went to take up a note he owed to Harman, he paid it by renewal, that is, he gave a new note, bnt that he did not ask Harman to give him the old note and he now thinks Harman has both notes against him.

Wednesday's Daily.

The case in regard to replevin of the horses and mules is finished. A word or two of explanation would perhaps make clearer this rather interesting case. The teams were working on the grades near Garrett where the B. & O. is changing its track. A Mr. Harman of Toledo claimed the horses for the reason he had not been paid for them by the purchaser, Mr. Saunders. So, he got out a writ of replevin in the court here and the clerk gave it to Sheriff Hathaway, who went over and served it. He found Saunders west of Garrett, and got one of the horses, Saunders told him where the other horse and mules were at work. Saunders claimed he had a bill against the horses for feed. They were all taken by the sheriff. Later on, Saunders got out a writ of replevin to take them away from the sheriff. He claimed the property was his and not Harman's and that Harman had no right to replevin them, and so he brought action against the sheriff. As the case would also involve the right of Harman to the property and therefore his right to replevin them. The two cases were similar and were tried together. This gave the jury the very unusual chance of bringing in two verdicts at one time. They were sent out last evening, and wrestled with the double-headed case till about one o'clock in the night when they had agreed on the two verdicts They sealed them up, and at 9 a. m. came before Judge Bratton and the result was read. They found in both cases, for the sheriff, that is, that Harman owned the property and had a right to replevin them, and therefore the sheriff had a right to take them.

BUTLER.

Jacob Stout, living at the west end has had a long and serious attack of typhoid fever. Several members of his family have also been afflicted with the same disease.

Peter Helwig has so far recovered as to be able to again visit his farm and friends about town.

Henry Aldrich still appears to be gaining.

Rev. McCloe continues his revival effort at the U. B. church with increasing success.

Miss Sadie Hamilton of Detroit is visiting with her mother on west Depot street.

Henry Crooks, a former well known citizen of our place, died at the soldiers' home at Lafayette last week. His remains were brought to Butler and funeral services held at the Christian church last Saturday, conducted in part by Rev. Thomas and by the Grand Army of the Republic. The church was filled to the doors. Mr. Crooks was born in this county in 1844, and served througout the war in different regiments. He was trustee of this township for four years. He was never married. He was a man of good habits and of unquestioned integrity. He leaves one sister in this vicinity, Mrs. Alexander Hoffman.

James E. Rose of Auburn was in attendance at the funeral of Henry Crooks Saturday. We believe that Mr. Crooks was his nephew.

The quietness of last Sunday morning was broken by the ominous screaming of the fire whistle. The blaze was located in Daniel Beerer's house on the south side, but was extinguished before the fire company reached it.

Our civil authorities are occasionally arresting some one of our hundred visitors to our gambling hells, and it proves a little expensive when they close down on one of them. The son of one of the most industrious, hard-working and economical farmers of an adjoining township who labored for a life time that his son might have a good start in the world, is wasting his dead father's hard-earned dollars in Butler's saloons and gambling hells.

(At last we get it right. It was Mrs. Tom Rudd who was elected super intendent of the M. E. Sunday school, and not John Rudd or Tom Rudd.)

Club Notes.

Last Saturday the L. L. C. met with Mrs. Hortense Robbins and it proved to be one of its most enjoyable sessions. It might with propriety be called "Domestic Science Day." The first paper was entitled "Fads and Fancies of Diet," by Mrs. Nellie Hartman. This was listened to with pleased attention and fully discussed by the club. Mrs. Maude Robbins gave a very nicely compiled paper on "Cooking as an Art, a Science and a Profession." This was also ably discussed by the club. The next feature of the program was "The Chafing Dish Demonstration," Mrs. Hortense Robbins the hostess for the day and Mrs. Mollie Robbins being the actors in the little drama. The members being the audience were invited to the dining room where they were delighted spectators of the charming and graceful manner in which the possibilities of the chafing-dish were demonstrated. They watched with appreciative eyes, the evolution of some rolled crackers, a little butter and some plates of oysters all into a delicious dish of creamed oysters, and at the end of ten minutes by the clock, were treated to a generous taste of the contents of the much talked of chafing-dish. All went away singing its praises and judging by the conversation that followed the trade in chafing-dishes will soon experience a "boom." The club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Maud Robbins next Saturday.

TEN CENTS WORTH OF PREVENTION

If you are subject to colds, the very best thing you can do is to keep your system in as open and perfect condition as possible. If you do this you are much less liable to take cold. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is as pleasant to take as pure maple syrup and is the most effective stomach remedy to be had. Trial sizes, 10c (10 doses 10 cents); large sizes, 50c and $1. At H. B. McCord's.

Announcement.

There will be three free discourses given at the Mission next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings Jan. 29, 30 and 31 by J. D. Wright on the Divine Plan of the Ages, illustrated by a chart. These discourses will be deeply interesting to all bible students and searchers after truth. Among the subjects under consideration will be: Why God has permited Evil to rule on Earth for 6,000 Years? Why He has so long deferred the establishment of His Kingdom on Earth when righteousness shall rule and His Will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven? That this promised Kingdom of God, with Christ as King, is now close at hand and will, when fully established be as the prophet says, "The desire of all nations" (Hag. 2:7.) That we are now living in the time of the end of this present evil world, or age, in God's day of preparation and that very shortly the perfection of God's justice, wisdom, love and power will be clearly demonstrated to the whole world and The Divine character fully vindicated. All who are interested in these subjects, and all honest skeptics as well, are cordially invited to be present at these meetings. They will begin promply at 7:30 p. m. No collection. Everything free.

No Right To Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, skin eruptions and wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate the stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nreves, bright eyes, smooth velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming, woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at H. B. McCord's Drug Store.

EDITOR COURIER:—This pleasant winter morning as I sit by an open window and watch my little daughters playing on the green lawn, my mind wanders back to old DeKalb and I feel inspired to write to the good people of my old home through the COURIER. It is now twenty-seven years since I penned my first article, Richland Center items, for publication in the COURIER. Therefore I feel justly proud as being the COURIER'S oldest correspondent. These twenty-seven years have been eventful years to me, having lived in many lands and traveled about fifty thousand miles and seen many strange and wondrous things. Yet my sympathies are as they have always been with the good people of my childhood home.

I feel constrained to tell you of our recent chase after the elks of the Olympics as it closes a chapter of the hardest week of toil known to me. For weeks we had been planning for the trip, mapping out our course (in our minds,) and gathering together the necessary equipments for taking big game. We concluded that it would be better luck to start on Monday, wet or dry, cold or warm. Nothing should daunt us (Nelson and I) from entering into the mysterious land of the mountain rings. So according to program on Monday morning in the face of a driving southeast rainstorm we started across the jungle that covers every inch of the foot hills. The elk are to be found in the more open country further up in the mountain. It has been said that a bad beginning makes a good ending, so we tried to console ourselves when I fell from a slippery log and broke my gun and tore my blankets. We were only about one half mile into the jungle, but it would bring bad luck to turn back, so Nelson said, and we discarded the broken gun and pressed on. It might be interesting reading to a DeKalb county man to describe the country we traveled through, but to us it was awfully monotonous. It was thick evergreen brush piled high with all manner of fallen trees with sharp snags protruding ready to impale the unlucky traveler who should be fool enough to try to cross this almost impenetrable jungle during the winter season. The rain continued to come faster and every evergreen bough was laden with little drops of water. There was not a dry thing about our outfit except some matches I kept in a little tin box. At noon we sat on a wet log in the rain and ate our wet lunch which consisted of bread and well soaked corned beef, after which we resumed our travels to the southwest, until the gathering gloom warned us to prepare camp for the night. We selected a great hollow cedar where though our quarters would be small we would be dry. By the aid of a hatchet which I carried we cut some dry sticks from the inside of the cedar and after wasting about half of our matches we at last succeeded in building a small fire at the mouth of the aperture which served as our door to this nature's house in the wilderness. It was with great satisfaction that we watched the bright flames crackle and leap upward for we were cold and wet and much fatigued. After eating our lunch we gathered some green boughs and dried them by holding them by the fire and spread them in our house for a bed on which we spread our blankets. But our bedroom was too short to lie at full length, so we were obliged to curl up like cats and sleep spoon-fashion. But no king on his bed of down ever slept more sound. Morning opened bright and clear which gave us renewed courage as we toiled over the most dreadful road man ever traveled. Towards evening we reached a more open country but the ascent was now sharp and the increased elevation had perceptibly changed the climate, and patches of snow now made their appearance and increased as we ascended until by the time we were ready to make camp, we were wading through six inches of soft snow. This evening we made camp by piling long strips of bark against a big fallen tree. We passed a rather uncomfortable night, and in the morning pushed on. Traveling was now much easier except for the increased snow. At noon we saw elk signs, and later on in the day we came upon fresh tracks, so we halted to reconnoiter and make camp. We built no fires that night, but kept very quiet so as not to disturb our game as we knew they were in the near locality. Having only one gun our chances were not of the best, so what was our disgust when in the morning we found that we had lost all the cartridges except the twelve contained in the magazine of Nelson's rifle. This was the worst disaster of all. So making the worst of a bad job, we started on the fresh tracks with Nelson in the lead. We soon came to an open park-like vale where we saw at about three hundred yards five big horns browsing moss from the alder trees. We crawled on our hands and knees to a high knoll overlooking the valley from whence we could get much closer without being observed by the elks. We soon had the herd about one hundred yards below us and Nelson's rifle was soon emptied of its contents, and we descended to the place of the supposed slaughter, but to our great disappointment saw only drops of blood on the snow. No more ammunition, disheartened and discouraged we faced about and beat a retreat to our homes in the valley far to the east. On the ninth day out we reached home, sore, tired and hungry and for the present will be contented to let the elks alone in the wilderness which by rights is theirs. I send my love to all your many readers. Yours truly.—JOSEPH A. SHAFE.

ENGAGEMENT BROKEN OFF

A girl in Montgomery broke her engagement with one of the wealthiest young men in the county, because he had indigestion so bad he was a menace to her happiness and no good to himself. What a relief just one bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin would have been to that man, and what a boon it is today to many a household, where it keeps all the family in a state of health that warrants true love, confidence and happiness in the home. Try it yourself. At H. B. McCord's.

NOTICE.

To the voters of Union township:—No fee or charge of any kind will be made by us or either of us for our services in remonstrating against the licensing of saloons. No person need hesitate an instant about signing the power of attorney on that ground. We will consider ourselves paid very fully if we are able to advance the common welfare.

ALBERT ROBBINS,
JOHN W. BAXTER,
FRANK S. ROBY.

January 19, 1900.

Advance a Step.

If you have been in the habit of taking pills for your constipation and with poor results, just try a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you will be surprised at the results. Very pleasant to take. 10 cents, 50 cents and $1. Sold and recommended by H. B. McCord.

Consumption Threatened.

C. Unger, 212 Maple St., Champaign, Ill., writes: "I was troubled with a hacking cough for a year and I thought I had the consumption. I tried a great many remedies and was under the care of physicians for several months. I used one bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar and it cured me, and I have not been troubled since.

A PROMINENT LAWYER.

Of Greenville, Ill., Mr. C. E. Cook, writes- "I have been troubled with billiousness, sick headache, sour stomach, constipation, etc., for several years I sought long and tried many remedies, but was disappointed until I tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I can cheerfully recommend it to any suffering from above complaints." H. B. McCORD.

CEDAR.

Emma C. Lung is numbered with the invalids.

J. M. Smith is trying his hand at wood-cutting.

Geo. Weygandt was absent from work a few days the first of the week on account of sickness.

Geo. Lung was able to commence work again on Monday of this week.

It is reported on good authority that Butler township will have a candidate before the democratic county convention.

Elmer Strause will work for George Smith this coming summer.

—John E. Lung is loading a car of potatoes at LaOtto.

Ezra Hasg is convalescent at present writing.

Fred C. Davis of Lima, O., called on friends here the first of the week.

HAVE YOU A COLD?

—If so, then instead of taking so much quinine take a pleasant and mild stomach and bowel remedy which will cleanse the system, and you will be surprised how quickly the cold will leave you. We sell Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for just this purpose. Try it. 10c, 50c and $1. For sale by H. B. McCORD.

—S. H. Barton has a colt that is two past, and will not be three till next summer, that weighs 1,570 pounds and takes a three-inch collar. Both horses together weigh 3,200. That is a team that can haul a plow.

—"I strongly recommend Begg's Cherry Cough Syrup; it cured me of a throat and lung trouble of many years' standing."-Mrs. J. Bremen, Rifle, Colo. Cures coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, la grippe, pneumonia, whooping-cough, croup and consumption,

—They tell a good joke on Mr. Pooler He was giving testimony one evening in the Church of God revival meeting, and among other things, said "I thank the Lord for the blessings he has bestowed on me this day" and the joke was. it was the day his wife had left him.

—"I can highly recommend Begg's Hair Renewer as a pleasing restorative application for the hair and a sure cure for all scalp diseases." Mrs. J. Whertle, Omaha, Neb. A thoroughly reliable preparation; endorsed by thousands. It will not disappoint. For sale at H. B. McCord's.

—Cal. Husselman goes this week into Michigan where he puts in a solid week in farmers' institutes at Yale, Bad Ax and Owosso. Last week he was working in the institutes at Waterloo, Angola and Albion. He is kept busy now and his territory is increasing. Another case of the DeKalb boys pushing qualities.

—Sherman S. Dickinson went to Hesperia, Mich., Wednesday, where he will meet his sister and brother, Mr. and Mrs. Root, from Murray, Nebraska. They have not met for fifteen years. They will visit the other brothers in Grand Rapids and Newaygo, Mich., before returning, and also his father's brother and sister and other relatives and friends.

—An item in the Indianapolis News last week did the Elkhart folks a great injustice. It asserted that the Elkharts were compelling their employes to sign the liquor license remonstrance under the threat of being dismissed on refusal. There is not a word of truth in this, the Elkharts would not insult their men by such a threat and the men are not such as would submit to it. It is to the credit of both employer and employe that no such condition exists there.

El Paso, Ark., Jan. 10, 1899.

After having spent ten years suffering, the doctors finally confessed they were unable to cure me or do me any good. I moved to Texas in search of health, but found it not. One day, while suffering intensely, a lady brought me a bottle of Dr. J. H McLean's Strengtheniug Cordial and Blood Purifier and insisted that I take it. Without faith, I began to take the medicine, and to my glad surprise I found, before I had taken one-half of a 50c bottle, I began to improve. After taking four or five bottles I became well. —Lula Berry.

—The following marriage licenses were issued by Clerk Long since our last report: Arthur Bateman and Edna Reynolds; William M. Hamilton and Mary J. Funk; Charles DeBrular and Gertrude Ray; William J. Asheiman and Clara Edith Stafford; Richard H. Dirlam and Sarah Barr; Louis Bloom and Josephine Fewbower.

—Josebh Shade's last letter from Puget Sound will remind some of our hunters of their own experience in the pine forests of northern Michigan. Accompanying this letter came a tooth of the wildcat that Mrs. Shade and her uncle killed last summer an account of which was given in a letter we publish at the time. The tooth is a wicked looking little thing and in the mouth of a lively wildcat would not be a very desirable thing to encounter.

MISSISSIPPI'S WATER POWER

Falls of the Great River Turned Into Powerful Motors that Now Grind the Wheat of the Great Northwest and Cut Millions of Feet of Lumber Annually—Nature a Slave to Man.

CONSIDERABLY less than a decade ago the idea of harnessing the majestic flow of the "Father of Waters" as it is to-day would have been looked upon as preposterous. "Dam it, you can't," will be remembered by many as a saying of their childhood—applied to the Mississippi River. But the overpowering advancement of civilization has conquered all obstacles, insurmountable as they seemed, and now the mighty force of that grand river, formerly knowing no burden larger than an Indian canoe, has been turned my the hand of man into motive power for ponderous machinery. The whizzing flight of the arrow of the children of the forest has given way to the whirr and hum of busy wheels. To the poetical nature this may seem a sad denouement, but it is a vivid example of the "survival of the fittest;" and one should glory in progress. The water courses of the great Northwest were always the favorite highways of the aborigines. For many years the only craft to navigate these waters was the Indian canoe—hewn from a log, or fashioned in a primitive but serviceable manner from the bark of the birch. With the coming of the French traders larger boats were introduced, and the era of advancement began. True, the French could not conceive, at that time, the possibilities (that have since become realities) of the power of the Mississippi. But slowly and gradually, since they sailed their unwieldy batteaux upon its course, has the march of progress been going onward. A waterfall to the aborigines meant simply an obstruction in the river, around which they must make a portage at considerable loss of time—although that was a secondary consideration in their minds, as they were overburdened with time. However, the unloading and reloading of their canoes was a laborious process—and labor never was the "long suit" of the noble red man. Hence the poetical beauty as well as the commercial value of the falls were lost upon the benighted nature of the savage.

The men who ventured into this vast territory after the sway of the Indian had been terminated forever had little appreciation of the picturesque grandeur of the waterfalls, but had a habit of associating a certain or uncertain amount of dollars and cents with the possession of such a fall. The Mississippi, leading to all other streams, naturally enough excited their cupidity. In their fancy pictures of whirling wheels and turning saws continually passed. Over 200 years before Father Hennepin had discovered the falls, which with pious fervor he christened St. Anthony's. What if that worthy priest could return to earth for a visit to the famous rapids at the present day. Departed is the virgin beauty of the spot, but in its place stand industries employing an army of workmen, and their manners and customs would undoubtedly fill Father Hennepin with amazement. Other explorers in after years spoke of the beautiful spectacle presented by the falls, and the latent power which they possessed, but nothing in the way of developing the water force was accomplished until the arrival of the United States troops in 1819. In 1822 a small flour mill was built just below St. Anthony's falls upon the west bank of the river. Built of roughly hewn logs, with the crevices partly filled with mud, it would make a sorry showing against the stately structures of brick and stone now occupying its site. However, it answered the purposes of the hardy yeomanry of that date. The projectors of this enterprise then constructed a log flume, thus diverting from the noble river an iota of its massive strength. The power thus obtained was sufficient to run one set of burrs. Over twenty-five years rolled by before another attempt was made to harness the stream, but in the meantime the flour making industry, although established under Government auspices, had died a natural death because of the poor quality of the product. However, the poorness of the product was no fault of the millers.

The demand for sawed lumber with which to build Fort Snelling had meantime resulted in the erection of a sawmill—the first one to derive its power from the Mississippi. The building was near the site of the old flour mill. In 1848, one year before the territory of Minnesota was organized, work was commenced upon a dam and sawmill on the east side of the river, which were finished and in operation the following spring. Improvements of a substantial character were not commenced on the west side of the stream, however, until the year 1856, when the Minneapolis Mill Company was organized and erected the first mill built by citizens of that side of the stream. Now near the site of that little Government flour mill stand palatial stone structures where over 15,000,000 barrels of the finest flour in the world are manufactured yearly by the waters of St. Anthony's falls. The dam and establishments at St. Anthony's are the largest on the river. The great dam is an object worth crossing the continent to examine. Over 30,000 horse power are generated by the river at this point. Gone are the primitive sawmills from the east and west banks of the river, and in their places are mills of magnificent size that turn out in the neighborhood of 600,000,000 feet of lumber annually. The dams at this point on the river are marvels of engineering skill and improvements are being added yearly.

PILLSBURY DAM AT MINNEAPOLIS—10,000 HORSE POWER.

ST. ANTHONY'S FALLS, ON THE MISSISSIPPI, BY WHICH 30,000 HORSE POWER IS GENERATED FOR MILLING PURPOSES.

The explorations of Pike, Schoolcraft and others had been so thorough as to determine every rapid of a size likely to become profitable as a water power. The pioneers following close on the trail of the explorers saw golden opportunities to utilize the river to their advantage. Attempts to bridle the flow of the water were not to the liking of old Mississippi, however, and many of the first dams were carried away down the stream before they were scarcely completed. John Green, in 1848, discovered at a point where the river was broad, a series of falls rivaling in latent strength old St. Anthony's. Green named the discovery Little Falls. The locality suited him and he built a dam across part of the stream; cut down enough of the surrounding forest to build him a sawmill, and to furnish him material to work on. About this time settlers were pouring into that part of the territory thick and fast and Green's mill was rushed far beyond its capacity to supply the demand for sawed lumber. Just about the time when work was at its best a section of his dam gave way and necessitated a long shutdown for repairs. Green was not discouraged, however, and material being plenty and help at hand, he set to work and built a much stronger dam. He also improved his mill and other buildings. One year later the dam, sawmill, and a cabinet shop went down the river together. This would have disgusted many a man with the business. But the indomitable energy displayed by the enterprising Green triumphed over all difficulties and a much more substantial dam was constructed. New buildings were erected and Green at last reaped the reward of perseverance. Now a thriving city stands at the point also bearing the name—Little Falls. Great manufactories, gigantic sawmills, electric light plants and various other industrial concerns, cover the site of James Green's sawmill.

A 7,000-HORSE POWER DAM ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

LITTLE FALLS POWER DAM—10,000 HORSE POWER.

Caleb and W. H. Woodberry in 1853 went in search of water power and, according to the accepted custom, built a dam and a sawmill. One year later they erected a flour mill alongside their log cutter, but the results of their industry went up in smoke about a year later. Another and better flour mill was erected and in recent years under the ownership of W. D. Washburn & Co. was equipped with modern machinery, and has resulted in a modern structure, called the Lincoln mill, owned by the Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Milling Company of Minneapolis. Their dam has a capacity of 10,000 horse power.

Sixty-one miles up the river from Minneapolis, at the present location of St. Cloud, was another falls that promised powerful possibilities. One of those shrewd Mainites, who was looking for just such an opportunity, very soon, with the assistance of others, set about improving it. Many difficulties beset their path, and their handiwork was often destroyed by the logs coming down the turbulent river. In the face of severe trials these Yankees never flinched and the hives of industry that now mark this spot are the natural outcome of their energy and perseverance. The dam at St. Cloud is capable of generating 7,000 horse power.

Frank Steele, whose position at Fort Snelling enabled him to keep an eye on territory acquired by the United States, got hold of the falls of St. Croix and kept them by right of possession, and in company with Jeremiah Russell, Dr. Fitch and a number of other gentlemen secured a force of workmen, and with tools and building material, sailed to the St. Croix falls on the steamer Palmyra, dammed the stream and built a sawmill. Two towns, Taylor's Falls and St. Croix, were built alongside the stream, the former in Minnesota, the latter in Wisconsin, and material improvements were made upon the great logging stream as time went by.

Aside from the Mississippi, tributary rivers have been developed for power in much the same way. H. H. Graham in 1854 built a two-room farmhouse and a backwoods mill, with two run of stone at Hastings, Minn., on the Vermillion River, a tributary to the Mississippi. He built no sawmill as was the custom of other settlers, for the simple reason that the stream did not wind its sinuous course through timber lands. From that small start great establishments have arisen.

Although most of the enterprises described in this article have eventually been crowned with success, one must not think there were no failures. Many attempts to turn the great Mississippi into chanels of usefulness have been marked by great disaster. The work of years might be swept away in a single night. But the hardy settlers did not despair, nor did those who came after them, and to-day the falls of the majestic Mississippi are among the greatest sources of motive power in the world.

The Mississippi in years gone by was the great highway between North and South. Great steamboats plied their busy trade up and down the stream; logs by the million were, and still are, floated on its current, as well as on its tributaries. The constantly changing course of this peculiar river has long been a source of wonderment to the world, and it is principally for this reason that the railroads have usurped so much of the traffic that formerly went down the river. A station might be on the river one week and isolated from it the next, in spite of the efforts of man to keep it within bounds. Therefore it is eminently proper that the unruly river "in its old age" should be put to turning the wheels of industry now that the glory of its shipping days are over.

Things Forbidden in War.

It is perhaps not generally realized that the game of war is hedged around by as many restrictions as a boxing match under Queensbury rules. These regulations, which are under the sanction of all the civilized countries of the world, are designed to insure fair play for the combatants.

When it is intended to bombard a place, due notice should be given, so that all women and children may be removed to a place of safety, and every care must be taken to spare churches and hospitals, as well as all charitable and educational buildings.

All chaplains, doctors and nurses are protected in every possible way, and are not to be taken prisoners or in any way injured.

Any soldier robbing or mutilating an enemy is liable to be shot without trial, and death is the penalty for wounding or killing a disabled man.

The bodies of the enemy are to be carefully searched before burial, and any articles found on them which might lead to their identification are to be sent to the proper quarters.

Explosive bulets must not be used, and quarter must be given to the enemy whether he asks for it or not. In an attack on the enemy there must be no concealment of the distinctive signs of the regiments, and the use of poisons for polluting drinking water is strictly forbidden.—Boston Traveler.

Furnishes a Valuable Soot.

The flame of acetylene gas has been found to furnish a soot which is especially valuable in the color industry. When such gas is burned with a smoking flame the result is the production of three or four times as great a quantity of soot as is the case with mineral oils. Moreover, it is very light in weight and exhibits an absolutely black color without a tinge of brown and has none of the tarry admixtures or other substances that characteristically appear in lampblack. The substance is likewise noted for being very bulky and is found to be admirably adapted for India ink and the colors of fine inks for such lithographic work as requires a positive black. It is now being manufactured in France by a patented process, almost absolute purity of color and texture being obtained at a comparatively small cost.

Fooling the Public.

"I'm about bushed in the matter of curiosities," mused the owner of a small store. "It's a bad habit—this idea of drawing trade by making a museum of the window, but I can't stop now—business won't allow it."

A few hours later the soda water trade was rushing. The crowd outside the window gazed in until it was thirsty at the remarkable bird that hung in a bigcage. The card attached bore a handful of the alphabet hysterically put together and designed for a scientific name. After it were the words: "From Samoa."

A few days later the "curiosity" was feeding in the back yard with the rest of the bantam hens.—Detroit Free Press.

One of Those Dress Pockets.

She was quite a well-dressed woman waiting for the 10 o'clock train, and it was then 9:30.

"How long will it be until that 10 o'clock train goes?" she asked at the ticket window.

"Thirty minutes, madame," replied the clerk suavely.

"Will I have time to go out and buy something?"

"That will depend upon circumstances, madame."

"I just want to go across the street."

"Where is your money?"

This was a queer question to ask, and the lady rather resented it.

"In my pocket, of course," she answered somewhat testily.

"Then you have scarcely time, madame," said the clerk with gravity, and the lady flirted herself away from the window in a dudgeon.—Detroit Free Press.

Insanity Among Half-Breed Indians.

An incident of the civilization of the red man is that he is developing insanity, just as white folks do, and therefore the Government has bought 160 acres of land near Canton, S. D., whereon to build an asylum to accommodate all the insane Indians of the United States. Indian Commissioner Jones says, however, that there are no insane Indians of pure race. The inmates of the new asylum will be half-breeds.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

THE BOY ORACLE.

The boy oracle has opened his lips and told the American Senate what it ought to do with the Philippines. With the exuberance of youth and the self-confidence of precocity, young Mr. Beveridge of Indiana has appeared before lawmakers old enough to be his grandfather, and given what a few enthusiastic Republican newspapers call "expert" testimony. Beveridge became an expert by taking a summer vacation in he Philippines and looking as much of the ground over as the insurrectionary forces would permit. That is to say, he stayed for a few weeks in Manila and its suburbs. This is supposed to have inspired him with a profounder knowledge of constitutional law and limitations and a firmer grasp on the principles embodied in the Declaration of Independence than mere stay-at-homes like Hoar and Cockrell and Berry could ever acquire.

Beveridge is 37 years old and has been a member of the Senate thirty-five days. Had he followed precedent he would have kept his mouth shut and looked things over for at least one session. But boy oracles never follow precedent. George Frisbe Hoar is 74 years old, just twice the age of Beveridge, and from the latter's view point he knows about half as much. He has been in the Senate twenty-three years. The Indiana Senator's views are set forth at such great length that we cannot spare the space to print them, but we can tell what they do not represent by quoting from Mr. Hoar: "What I want the American people to do is to do in the Philippines exactly what we have done, are doing and expect to do in Cuba. We have liberated both from Spain, and we have had no thought—at least I have had no thought—of giving them back to Spain."—New York News.

National Debt and the Banks.

If the refunding scheme which the Senate Finance Committee has recommended for adoption becomes law, then the United States will be saddled with a debt of nearly a billion dollars, no part of which it will be able to call in for redemption until thirty years have passed. For thirty years the people are to be taxed to pay the interest on the bonds in order that the national bank system may be kept in existence for the same length of time!

This is part of the Republican plan of currency reform. The interest-bearing debt is to be perpetuated in order to give the banks something to do business on with profits coming in from both ends of an ingenious transaction which only the government's loan of its credit makes possible.

The obligations which the Senate Committee is in favor of refunding will all become due in less than nine years. The greater part of them will be payable July 1, 1907. It is proposed to extend them twenty-three years more, together with others that fall due in 1904 and 1908. Practically the government will not be able, if this plan goes through, to redeem any part of its debt for almost the lifetime of a generation unless it goes into the market and pays the holders of the bonds any price they may demand for them.

This refunding scheme ought to be fought earnestly by every Democrat in Congress. The Republicans should not be allowed to fasten this national bank incubus on the country for at least thirty more years without a protest so strong as to rivet the attention of the voters and hold it there until next election day.

Democratic policy has never sanctioned the plea that a national debt is a national blessing. The perpetuation of the present debt for the benefit of the bank trust is something to which the interests of the masses are particularly opposed. The interest on these bonds, which it is proposed to keep on paying for thirty years to come, can be saved very largely by stopping the issue of bank notes and putting those of the government in their place.

"No perpetuation of the national debt" is a good Democratic slogan, and "No perpetuation of the bank trust" is another. A third is: "Put the banks out of the government business of issuing money."

Would Be Lost Without Mark.

Mark Hanna will remain at the head of the Republican organization. This is President McKinley's earnest wish, and Hanna's acquiescence will be hailed with glad acclaim by the Republicans of Utah. McKinley would feel lost without Mark. There is no other trust magnate who understands "Our William" so well or knows so much about the peculiar methods required to boost him. It is just as well. Since there is to be a Republican party in the nation a typical Republican should lead it. Without Hanna the organization would resemble a man without a head. He is it.—Salt Lake Herald.

Impending Dangers.

At the instance of the sultan of Sulu the American flag has been raised on Sibutu island, and the United States has another new possession. So long as the sultan confines his attentions to islands everything is serene. But should he suddenly and in another fit of friendship take it into his head, as the shah of Persia did on the occasion of his first visit to England, to propose an exchange of some of his numerous spouses for those of American statesmen, who knows what complications might arise?—Chicago News.

Will Not Be Coerced.

A German-American, Henry Wolf, of Havana, writing to a friend, says about the German vote: "When the time comes to cast our ballot, we will serve notice that we Germans will not be coerced to sustain a principle contrary to our convictions. We came here to find a republic, and we will guard it with the ballot, that it may so remain and not become a country of imperialism and military despotism."

Protecting the Trusts.

We have societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, children, fish, bugs, etc., and now comes a new one, which may be called "Society for the Protection of Trusts." Mr. McKinley is the President of it and the chief executive, and if any trust gets hurt during his administration it will be in violation of the by-laws. Mr. McKinley and his aiders and abetters hate trusts, but they follow the pious dodge of doing good to those they hate, and heap coals of fire on their heads by taking them by the hand and loving them.

Trust Prices Go Up.

Competition among producers is the one bulwark of the consumer. Monopoly spells final pauperism for him. Competition means to the consumer lower price and better quality. Trusts, which poison competition and kill it out of the way, mean higher price and poorer quality. And to-day "prices" are "up." There isn't a commodity that hasn't clambered. Here is a list built on what is purchased for the home. The poor as well as the rich must have these things. Read; you may thus learn what, under trust rule, is taking place in your pocket:

Articles.	1898. Price.	1899. Price.
Brooms	$1.75	$2.85
One-gallon galvanized oil cans, dozen	1.35	1.85

Washboards, dozen	1.40	2.25
Spices, pound	.12	.18
Canned beef, dozen	1.40	2.45

No one may cavil at these figures. They were fixed and offered by salesmen who handle the articles. And the above is only a partial list of instances. The roll of those commodities, the price of which within a year has had arbitrary trust advancement, with no reason save the loot reason that moves a burglar or gives impulse to a footpad, would swell to thousands.—The Verdict.

Lincoln Was Right.

Mr. Bryan in his address before the anti-trust conference in Chicago, repeats Mr. Lincoln's warning against the approach of a monarchy:

"In 1859 Abraham Lincoln wrote a letter to the Republicans of Boston who were celebrating Jefferson's birthday, and in the course of the letter he said: 'The Republican party believes in the man and the dollar, but in case of conflict it believes in the man before the dollar.' In the early years of his administration he sent a message to Congress, and in that message he warned his countrymen against the approach of monarchy. And what was it that alarmed him? He said it was the attempt to put capital upon an equal footing with, if not above, labor in the structure of government, and in that attempt to put capital even upon an equal footing with labor in the structure of government he saw the approach of monarchy. Lincoln was right. Whenever you put capital upon an equal footing with labor or above labor in the structure of government you are on the road toward a government that rests not upon reason, but upon force."

Lesson of Lawton's Death.

Time and again we have been told that only a few Tagals oppose American authority in the Philippines and that they have been scattered into mere bands of marauders. But the killing of General Lawton, only a few miles from Manila, shows that Luzon is far from a condition of peace, while we now have to cope with another revolt in the island of Negros. Our troubles in the Philippines are far from an end if the fangled "world politics" delivered the blow that put the Monroe doctrine to sleep.—Toledo Commercial.

Hanna Found Out.

The recent intimation that Mark Hanna was upon the point of resigning his management of the government turns out to be the case of the man who published his own obituary before he was dead just to find out what people thought of him. Hanna found out, and it made him so mad that he refused to give up.

Has It Come to This?

Has it come to this, that a President of the United States may inaugurate a certain policy, the perfecting of which will compel the American people to reelect him to office to save the nation? If so, then consider Mr. McKinley as life President, without any further bother.

Must Stand and Deliver.

If the gold standard banking conspirators succeed in getting their measure through the Senate, all other classes of Americans must prepare to yield up their substance to this band of highwaymen who have captured the government.—Washington National Watchman.

A LARIAT SWING.

How Bill Saved a Woman and Her Child.

The drummer had just come back from Texas, and, of course, he had something to tell, but as yet he had given no sign, says the Detroit Free Press.

"Well," said the hotel clerk, insinuatingly, "what did you see in Texas?"

"If you hadn't asked me pretty soon," responded the drummer, "I should have told you anyhow."

"It must have been something big," smiled the clerk.

"It was something I had never seen before."

"Go on with it," urged the clerk.

"Well," went on the drummer, "about a week ago I was in one of the country towns and it seemed to be a cowboy holiday, for the town was full of them. They were raising Sambill, too, and I was pretty thoroughly tired of the whole gang. Just about when I was ready to hide myself in my room to get away from them, I heard a terrific shout in the street, and I stepped to the window to see what it was. It was a horse in a light wagon coming at breakneck speed down the street, with a woman and child in the wagon. At the end of the street was a ditch fifteen feet deep and it was plain that when the runaway got there a tragedy would occur. Everybody seemed to be powerless, and the few who tried to do anything only made matters worse. Then I heard a shout, and a cowboy came around the corner fifty yards behind the wagon. He was on a big, lungy kind of a horse, but he was making him go his best, and he was gaining on the runaway. But not much, and the interest seemed to change from the danger of the woman and child to which horse was faster. I thought the chasing would make the other horse run faster, and perhaps it did, but in a minute I saw the cowboy swing a rope or something in his hand, and as I was wondering what in the mischief he was going to do with that thing he gave it a sling and a twirl, and the next instant his own horse settled back on his haunches, and the runaway went over on his side, not a dozen feet from the ditch. I didn't understand it even then, and rushed out on the street, as everybody who had been watching the exciting chase from the windows was doing, and at the door I met a big fellow coming in. As he passed me I heard him say: 'Bill is h—l with the lariat. I bet $20 he'd throw him afore he got to the ditch.' That explained matters," continued the drummer, "and when Bill came back with the woman and child safe, but somewhat shaken up, I invited him in and broke a bottle in honor of himself and his lariat."

RECEIVED CHANGE IN NICKELS.

Novel Suit of Memphis Woman Against a Street Car Company.

The Supreme Court will be called upon at its next sitting at Jackson to look into the peculiar case of Mrs. Crutchfield vs. the Memphis Street Railway.

Mrs. Crutchfield sues the street railway company for $500 damages and the complainants maintain that they have such a cause as entitle them to a trial on the merits of the case.

It is related that on the days of transaction, Mrs. Crutchfield, who lives in Fort Pickering, having occasion to come uptown, found that she had no other money than a $20 bill. She tried to get this money changed before she boarded the street car. She went to the butcher with whom she deals in the neighborhood and offered to pay a bill there if the butcher could change the bill, but she could not get it changed. So she boarded the street car with the bill. It is related on behalf of the complainant that she explained to the conductor the circumstances accounting for the necessity for offering him so large a bill and asked him for a transfer at Beal street. They were not able to settle the trouble about the bill until they came to Madison street, when the conductor got off the car to get the bill changed. It is asserted that he went to some trouble to get the bill changed entirely to nickels. He got at the first bank, so it is asserted by the complainant, $10 in nickels and a $10 bill, and then went to another bank and got the $10 bill changed to nickels. He carried these small coins to the passenger and tendered them to her.

It is related that Mrs. Crutchfield asked for time in which to count the money, but the conductor demurred, and the other passengers protested against the delay, so that Mrs. Crutchfield said the car might go to the end of the line and she would count the money en route. It is related that after she had counted the money over once she concluded that she was $1.15 short, and upon making demand for the balance the conductor handed it over to her. She had not yet finished counting the money when the car reached the end of the Main street line and turned for the round trip. Then the conductor demanded a second fare from her, whereat she protested, and after some argument, when the conductor declared that she would have to pay another nickel or get off, she got off the car.

These being the averments of the lawsuit from the complainant's standpoint, it is intended to go to the Supreme Court to ascertain whether or not such circumstances do not constitute a cause for action.—Memphis Scimeter.

Broncho Bill's Denomination.

During the five years of his career as an actor Will had in one of his theatrical companies a Westerner named Broncho Bill. There were Indians in the troupe and a certain missionary had joined the aggregation to look after the morals of the Indians. Thinking that Broncho Bill would bear a little looking after also, the good man secured a seat by his side at the dinner table, and remarked pleasantly:

"This is Mr. Broncho Bill, is it not?"

"Yaas."

"Where were you born?"

"Near Kit Bullard's mill, on Big Pigeon."

"Religious parents, I suppose?"

"Yaas."

"What is your denomination?"

"My what?"

"Your denomination."

"Oh—ah—yaas. Smith & Wesson."—From "The Last of the Scouts."

Wabash Mexican Tour 1900.

On Feb. 14th, 1900, the Wabash Will run a personally conducted Special Tour to Old Mexico and return.

The Train will consist of elegant drawing room and compartment sleepers, observation and dining cars, built by the Pullman company especially for this service.

Arrangements are being made for a select party of fifty people and will positively not exceed that number. The tour will consume a period of thirty days, covering 7,000 miles. The dining car will be stocked with every delicacy and the drawing room and observation cars will afford the comforts of a model hotel. The whole tour costs about $10 a day.

Mexico can only be seen and appreciated by accompanying a party of this kind. Mr. R. G. Thompson, Special Passenger representative will manage this tour and is eminently fitted for the task owing to his numerous visits to Mexico.

A Minnesota Farmer Does Well in Canada.

Virden, Man., Nov. 18, 1899.

Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada:

Sir—Thinking that my experience in Manitoba might be both useful and interesting to my fellow countrymen in the United States who may be looking to Manitoba and the Northwest with the intention of settling there, I have much pleasure in stating that through information received from Mr. W. F. McCreary, Immigration Commissioner at Winnipeg, I was induced to visit Manitoba in February, 1898. When I called upon Mr. McCreary he spared no pains to give me all the information, etc., in his possession, the result of which was that I came here with a letter of introduction from him to the secretary of the Virden Board of Trade. That gentleman provided me with a competent land guide, and although there was considerable snow on the ground, I had no difficulty in selecting three homesteads for myself and sons. Having made the necessary homestead entries at the land office in Brandon, I returned to my home in Lyon County, Minnesota, and came back here in May following, accompanied by one of my boys, bringing with us two teams of horses, implements, etc. Our first work was to erect a temporary shanty and stable, after which we broke and leveled 75 acres and put up 30 tons of hay. I went back to Minnesota about the 20th of July, leaving my son here. I returned in October, bringing my family with me. I found that the land we had acquired was of good quality, being a strong clay loam with clay subsoil. Last spring I sowed 100 acres in wheat, 50 acres in oats and barley (75 acres of this grain was sowed on "goback" plowed last spring). My crop was threshed in October, the result being over 2,700 bushels of grain in all. Wheat averaged 15 bushels per acre and graded No. 1 hard, but that which was sown on land other than sod ("goback") went 24½ bushels per acre.

To say that I am well pleased with the result of my first year's farming operations in Manitoba does not adequately express my feelings, and I have no hesitation in advising those who are living in districts where land is high in price to come out here, if they are willing to do a fair amount of work. I am ten miles from Virden, which is a good market town, and nine miles from Hargrave, where there are two elevators. This summer I erected a dwelling house of native stone and bought a half-section of land adjoining our homestead, for which I paid a very moderate price. There are still some homesteads in this district, and land of fine quality can be purchased from the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. at $3.50 per acre on liberal terms. Good water is generally found at a depth of from 15 to 20 feet. I have 175 acres ready for crop next year.

The cost of living here is about the same as in Southern Minnesota. Some commodities are higher and others lower in price, but the average is about the same. I remain, your obedient servant,

(Signed) JACOB REICHERT.

MONSTER TURTLES IN MAINE.

Big Fellows that Are Able to Smash Paddle Wheels of Steamboats.

It has been some years since a sight of the Grapevine turtle has been reported in the Lake Sebec district in Maine. Thirty years have passed since John Lander of Dover saw this big reptile in the bog through which the Grapevine stream flows in its course into Sebec lake, and was impressed by its size. Fifteen years later Sam Guernsey and Henry Warren, fishing the same stream, saw what they took to be a partly submerged clapboard afloat in the still water but at the sound of their voices it moved off through the water, leaving a wave like that of a rowboat, and they saw that it was a giant turtle. Its most notable appearance in recent years was to Bernard Warren Dover, who, in fishing the Grapevine, came upon the turtle in the open bog away from the water, so that a full idea of the creature's bulk was obtained. Its shell was as large around as a washtub, and the head and legs were of proportionate size. At sight of the fisherman the turtle started for the water, and Warren, seeking to detain it, by seizing its tail, was taken in tow as summarily as if the turtle had been expressly chartered for the purpose. Finding the tapering tail inconvenient to hold, Warren jumped on the turtle's back, but the creature carried him easily without so much as slackening its gait. On coming to the alders, along the edge of the stream, Warren, finding his bareback position difficult to maintain, slipped off behind, and caught hold once more of the tail, but the turtle, quickening pace, jerked him from his feet, and the man let go his grip at the bank, not caring to follow the turtle into the two feet of water and twenty feet of soft ooze that lay beyond. The turtle went into the stream like a sawlog down a rollway, and Warren went back to his fishing, convinced that it was not his day for turtle-catching. As the Grapevine is now closed by law to fishermen, there have been no reports of the big turtle this year, but it is safe to say that it will be heard of when the stream is opened three years hence.

Fifteen years ago Captain Ansel Crockett, of Sebec, steering his side-wheel passenger steamer, the Rippling Wave, up the lake, encountered midway in the trip a swimming turtle so large that to avoid a collision he altered the course of his craft so as to pass it on the starboard side. The turtle, which was seen by all the passengers, was described as being as large round as a hogshead, and a paddle-wheel striking it would have been broken as surely as if it struck a rock. In the autumn of that year a Penobscot Indian caught a turtle at Sebec Lake, perhaps the same one, which measured thirty-nine inches from tip to tip, and the upper shell was described by one who saw it as being large enough to serve for the cradle of a child.

EDUCATING JAPANESE WOMEN.

The Outlook for the Future Said to Be Promising.

Under the auspices of the economic and reform section of the Society for Ethical Culture addresses upon "The Social Condition and Education of Women in Japan" were recently delivered before a large audience, says the Philadelphia Ledger. Inazo Nitrobe, Ph. D., professor of economics in the Imperial College at Sapporo, gave a historic resume of the condition of Japanese women, and said their present inferiority is due to the feudalism existing in his country for the last 700 years. Japan received its beginnings in literature from China and its Buddhism from India, and both of these forces also had an indirect influence in lowering the status of women.

Ohson H. Sakrui, registrar of the Meiji Girls' seminary at Tokyo, and Miss Anna C. Hartshorne, who spent three years in Japan, said that general interest in education is increasing, and it is only a matter of time before privately endowed schools for women will be a part of Japan's educational system. The Meiji seminary, which is the only private non-sectarian girls' school in Japan, was established in 1885, but lost all its buildings and apparatus by fire three years ago. Over 1,800 girls have received the benefits of its training, but owing to financial needs and the lack of a permanent fund only sixty are now in attendance.

The Japanese Government began to take an interest in co-education twenty years ago, when several young women were sent abroad for study, and at the present time there are ten Japanese girls studying in the United States. The outlook for the future was said to be a promising one, if the proper interest and encouragement are given from countries more advanced in culture and enlightenment.

Distinguished Cyclists.

The Czar of Russia was, as a boy, very fond of cycling. He has now grown tired of pedaling his own machine, and has had a record-breaking petroleum tricycle made for him in Paris. A wicker work car is being made which will be tacked on to the end of the machine for the Empress. Another distinguished cyclist—who still uses his own legs—is A. J. Balfour. He stated not very long back that in his opinion the cycle is the most civilizing invention of this generation.

The world is full of thin, sickly looking young people who try to convince their healthy looking ancestors that sleeping on feather beds isn't good for them.

Don't wait until sickness overtakes you. When that tired feeling, the first rheumatic pain, the first warnings of impure blood are manifest, take Hood's Sarsaparilla and you will rescue your health and probably save a serious sickness. Be sure to get Hood's, because Hood's Sarsaparilla Never Disappoints.

Mind Your Ears.

Men and women have much to do to keep straight. A hundred nerves and muscles are at work all through the waking hours, giving or receiving orders that the body, with its many joints and natural instability, shall preserve its equilibrium, shall not stagger or double up in a hopeless heap. These nerves and muscles are a highly organized signal service, the chief officers of which are in the semi-circular canals buried in the "stony" bone work that protects the inner ear. Were it not for these canals a human being would find it difficult, often impossible, to maintain a proper balance either while walking or standing still.

So long as these canals are in healthy working order their reports are trustworthy; but when any undue force has shocked them, or any agency, such as sickness, has interfered with their workings, their messages are incoherent, and the brain, like the engineer of a battle ship in action when the men above are blinded and bewildered, has nothing to do but let things go.

Chronic Nasal Catarrh poisons every breath that is drawn into the lungs. There is procurable from any druggist the remedy for its cure. A small quantity of Ely's Cream Balm placed into the nostrils spreads over an inflamed and angry surface, relieves immediately the painful inflammation, cleanses, heals and cures. Drying inhalants, fumes, smokes and snuffs simply develop dry catarrh; they dry up the secretions which adhere to the membrane and decompose, causing a far more serious trouble than the ordinary form of catarrh. Avoid all drying inhalants, use Ely's Cream Balm. It is reliable and will cure catarrh, cold in the head and hay fever easily and pleasantly. All druggists sell it at 50 cents or it will be mailed by Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N.Y.

A Land of Promise.

Rev. Joseph Parker, the eminent English preacher, confesses that in his youth the sound of the name Van Diemen's Land—now known as Tasmania—powerfully affected his imagination. It was to him, as it has been to many youngsters, an appallingly mysterious place, but in time it lost its evil suggestion, and he tells how this came about in his recent book, "A Preacher's Life."

At a Methodist meeting in the north of England, the people had been singing a hymn in which the line, "We are marching through Emmanuel's ground," occurs, and at the close of the hymn one good old man, whose emotion was in excess of his intelligence, fervently prayed.

"Grant that when this life is over every one of us may have a cottage in Van Diemen's Land."

The poor man somehow got it into his head, by some law of mental association which no one can fully explain, that Emmanuel's ground and Van Diemen's Land were practically one and the same.

PRECAUTIONS SOLDIERS TAKE.

English Troops Run as Few Risks as Possible During Battles.

Although the British soldiers are noted for their daring in battle, they do not expose themselves recklessly to the fire of an enemy unless such a course is absolutely necessary. After a battle the names of the killed and wounded are ascertained by means of the identification cards which all British soldiers carry sewn in the left-hand corner of their khaki tunics. On the card is written the soldier's name, rank, regimental number, together with the name and address of his next of kin. The latter is added so that the authorities may know where to forward the effects of any soldier who gets killed.

After an engagement the roll is called as soon as the regiments get back to their camp. Every man who does not answer is "picked off" as missing and search is made for him on the field. As the search parties come across the dead and wounded men they rip open the tunic at the left-hand corner and take out the identification card. The cards thus collected are carried back to camp and handed over to the clerks of the general in command, who therefrom compile the casualty lists.

After all the cards have been collected the roll is checked again and a note made of those men of whom no trace has been discovered. These are usually presumed to have been taken prisoners, but it does not always follow that the assumption is correct.

In the corner of his tunic opposite his identification card every soldier carries a small pad of bandages, etc., for dressing a wound. This "field dressing," as it is called, is added to "Tommy's" equipment in order that he may be his own surgeon until medical assistance arrives or may have the wherewithal on him to bind up the wounds of a chum.

It will surprise many to learn that one of the first things "Tommy" does when ordered to the front is to make his will, although every regiment contains a percentage of happy-go-lucky fellows who do not worry themselves about what will become of their property when they no longer require it.

Genius with a Cue

Philadelphia has a boy champion pool player. His name is Thomas Benners, and he is only 9 years old, but he is a match for the oldest and nerviest of players. He is too small to reach the table and has to carry a stool around the table with him to stand upon while he makes his shots.

The Craving for Stimulants

Has lately attracted a great deal of attention. The use of them seems to be increasing. This clearly shows an exhausted condition of the nerves and blood, which may be remedied only by strengthening the stomach. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will do this for you. It cures dyspepsia, constipation and nervousness.

Woman Suffrage in Oregon.

A woman suffrage amendment is to be submitted to the voters of Oregon in June next and an association of women has been organized to oppose it. These women say in their protest that only a small percentage of the women in the state desire the ballot, as is proved by their neglect to use it in school elections, and that, therefore, it should not be forced on the others, with its attendant privileges of sitting on juries and running for office.

The Prime Factor.

Of the success of any Railroad consists simply in catering fully and generously to the public demands. This is what has brought the Nickel Plate to the front in railway matters despite formidable competition. As a through route between the West and East it is the favorite with the traveling public. Fine trains, unexcelled service and low rates; a peerless trio of advantages.

WOMEN OF THE UNITED STATES

Regard Peruna as Their Shield Against Catarrh, Coughs, Colds, Grip and Catarrhal Diseases.

MRS. BELVA A. LOCKWOOD, LATE CANDIDATE FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

Mrs. Belva Lockwood, the eminent barrister, of Washington, D. C., is the only woman who has ever been a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. She is the best known woman in America. As the pioneer of her sex in the legal profession she has gathered fame and fortune. In a letter to The Peruna Medicine Company, she says:

"I have used your Peruna both for myself and my mother, Mrs. Hannah J. Bennett, now in her 88th year, and I find it an invaluable remedy for cold, catarrh, hay fever and kindred diseases; also a good tonic for feeble and old people, or those run down, and with nerves unstrung." Yours truly, Belva A. Lockwood.

Catarrh may attack any organ of the body. Women are especially liable to catarrh of the pelvic organs. There are one hundred cases of catarrh of the pelvic organs to one of catarrh of the head. Most people think, because they have no catarrh of the head, they have no catarrh at all. This is a great mistake, and is the cause of many cases of sickness and death. Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

Wednesday's Daily.

—D. C. Marvin of Jackson was a caller today.

—Three Noble county citizens paid fines and costs one day last week for failure to send their children to school.

—John Shugers believes in sending the home news to his children; so Mrs. Leedy at Fort Wayne will receive the COURIER till 1901.

—John W. Nusbaum of Shipshewanna is here with his brother, Dr. Nusbaum. He expects to stay here a short time to take treatment for rheumatism, with which he is having trouble.

—It is officially stated that the body of Gen. Lawton will not lie in state at Fort Wayne, on account of Mrs Lawton's health the southern route to Washington will be taken to avoid storms.

—The Wolverine beet sugar factory at Benton Harbor manufactured 1,509,537 pounds of sugar this season and paid out $40,000 for sugar beets. There were over 10,000 tons of beet sugar made the past season in Michigan.

Thursday's Daily.

—I N. Cox of Ashley is in town visiting Frank Stamets and family.

—John W. DeWitt of St. Joe has been granted an increase of pension.

—Turkeys have gone way up in price as at least one DeKalb county citizen can testify.

—Indiana has a cat farm, located at New Harmony, Posey county. Only Angoras are raised and they sell readily at $25 and $30..

—Joseph L. Riley of Indianapolis seems to be the leading candidate for secretary of the democratic state central committee.

—The town council at Windfall was converted at a revival the other night, and promptly ordered all business houses to close on Sundays.

Gen. Wheeler is coming home from Manila to resume his seat in congress, He has not been given active work in fighting the Filipinos and he don't like to lie idle in camp.

—A new lumber company has been organized and incorporated at Princeton by the Nickey's, with a capital stock of $30,000. They will engage extensively in the lumber business in the south.

—A number of improvements have been made in the commissioners' room at the court, house among them being a fine new table and linoleum floor covering. New chairs will probably be added later.

There is a regular epidemic of small pox in Clay county. It is in a mild form and was claimed to be chicken pox, and so allowed to scatter. Over 200 cases have been reported in the country. Now, they are trying to stop it.

—A large number of the employes of the Wagner palace car company will be out of work after January 31 as a result of the company's consolidation with the Pullman concern. The order affects all classes from conductors down to car cleaners.

Senator Blackburn has been again elected from Kentucky. In fact has been elected twice this week. The first election was objected to for want of some formality and next day, the two Houses met again and gave him substantially the same vote.

—MARRIED:—At the M. E. Parsonage yesterday at 3 P. M. by J. D. Brosy, William M. Hamilton of Milford, Indiana and Mary Funk of Moores Indiana. Rev. Guild being away from home, Mrs. Guild sent for Mr. Brosy to perform the ceremony. This couple will make their home in Milford.

—The Knights of Pythias who attended the district meeting at Garrett yesterday report a most enjoyable time. There was a good attendance, an interesting program, and the Garrett Knights gave every visitor a royal welcome. We have not been furnished with a full report of the meeting.

—Hon. Parks M. Martin of Martinsville was yesterday re-elected chairman of the democratic state central committee, by acclamation. Mr. Martin has filled the place during the past four years and at no time has had serious opposition for re-election. He will appoint the secretary.

—Everett Johnson, adopted son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fisher of Kendallville, was kidnapped by two tramps Tuesday evening, placed in a G. R. & I. box car and taken to Ft. Wayne. Here the boy managed to escape and make his way to Adams station, east of Fort Wayne, where he told his story to the operator. The latter took care of the boy and he was sent home yesterday.

—The old generation was harder than the present one. For example we met our old time friend, Byron Hadsell, on Monday afternoon. The roads were pretty soft, but he had headed east and was looking at his watch which showed about 3.30. He said he was going home, which means a mile or two beyond St. Joe, and more than that, he was going on foot. And off he started at a brisk pace, that would have discouraged many a younger man. He said there was a lecture at St. Joe that evening and he could not afford to miss it. No doubt he was present and enjoyed it.

—Henry Crooks, whose death is noted elsewhere, was well known all over this county. He served several terms as trustee of Wilmington township and was an able officer. In 1890 he was a candidate for county auditor against H. N. Coffinberry, and though running forty ahead of his ticket, was defeated by a majority of 327. Soon after the State Soldiers' Home was in operation at Lafayette, he was given charge of one of the departments there and we had the pleasure of meeting him there a year or two ago. We have not learned whether he died there or at Butler. He was a single man.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom made much money. Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the only remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup.," It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle, many years by all druggists in the world. Sample bottles at O. P. RAPER's, Corunna.

WEIGHT & CUTLER.

A BIG DAMAGE SUIT FILED.

Case Grows out of Recent Fatal Accident.—Other Court Matters.

A complaint has been filed by the State of Indiana on relation of Ida Morris and her three children, against James N. Ritter, the Garrett saloon keeper, and his bondsmen, J. William Wagner and James L. Griffin. It will be remembered that William Morris was accidentally killed some weeks ago while on his way home from Garrett. It is alleged in the complaint that the accident was caused by reason of his being intoxicated, and that the liquor was purchased at Ritter's saloon. Damages are asked in the sum of $10,000, and the case will probably not be tried until the March term. John W. Baxter is attorney for the plaintiffs, while Roby & Harper are for the defense.

Four new divorce cases have been filed, and in each the wife is the complainant. They are: Mary V. North vs. James C. North, Florence E. Hollinger vs. William Hollinger; Alice B. Hallam vs. Henry M. Hallam, Jennie C. Drew vs. George H. Drew. In the last named case Judge Bratton today issued an order restraining the defendant from selling or disposing of any of his property, pending the trial which will be held at the March term.

The petit jury resumed their labors this morning, the first case called being that of Rosa Headley against the estate of John Thiel of Butler, in which the plaintiff asks judgment for $556, for services rendered as housekeeper for the deceased. A number of Butler people were in attendance at the trial. Roby and Dunten are attorneys for the plaintiff and Hoffman & Link for the estate.

An Opinion.

Attorney General Taylor, in an opinion given out today, holds that the county reform law repeals the act allowing justices of the peace ten cents per mile while traveling to and from the county seat to make settlements with the county treasurer. Considerable controversy has arisen over the matter, and the attorney general has received many letters concerning it.

As far as the above decision applies to the justices of DeKalb county, we believe few of them would get rich on the mileage they receive while going to and from Auburn to report and turn over their fines. If rumor is half way right very few of our justices report fines. Surely the most of them have fines to report and it is their duty to do so. If this item does any man injustice we shall be glad to publish his name and the amount of fines he has reported, at any time. No doubt we have some who have done this properly.

Golden Day.

Wednesday, Jan. 24, was a golden day for weather and a golden day for Mr. and Mrs. Aaron D. Moore, at Moores Station as it was the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. They were married that date in 1850 at Stark Co., Ohio. As far as known the only person still living who was present at the original marriage was Rev. W. L. Meese and he was present at the reunion the other day. Among the others present were Mr. Moore's four sons, George, John, Almon and Hiram and the daughter Mrs. Wilson Forest and her husband, and the unmarried sister Miss Ella, Isaac Meese and wife of St. Joe, and a nephew of Mr. Forest and the latters wife whose name we did not get, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Pomeroy. They had a good dinner and a good time. Mrs. Moore's maiden name was Rebecca Caldwell.

A Warm Ride.

James Sheffer, the stock buyer, had an exciting experience a few nights ago over on the Nickel Plate road. Mr. Seeffer was shipping some stock over that road and in company with several other stock men was riding in the caboose. While the train was running at a high rate of speed it was discovered that the caboose was on fire and the flames spread so rapidly those who occupied the car were driven out on the step. It began to look as though they would have to take chances in jumping or be burned to death, as the conductor's signals to stop the train were not seen by the engineer. The rear brakeman finally managed to set the air brakes, but when the train stopped the burning car was almost totally destroyed. Mr. Sheffer says it was a very exciting ride while it lasted.

Must be Something.

There must be gas or something out in the John Pyle neighborhood. Last Sunday Frank Wingard and his wife both heard a distinct and strong report and felt the shock plainly. The windows rattled and both wondered what it could be. George Hoodelmier, heard the same thing and so did Mr. and Mrs Cosper, all at the same hour. As there is no report of any earthquake shock, they can only refer it to some action of the gas that has long been believed to be in that part of the country.

TEMPERANCE RALLY.

Chaplain Medbury lectured at the Methodist church last night. A splendid audience greeted the gentleman from Angola, and listened with interested attention. Among other statements made are the following from business and professional men of Angola, which are undeniptable:

ANGOLA, IND., Jan. 25, 1900.
ELDER C. S. MEDBURY,
Angola, Indiana.

DEAR SIR:—We understand that you are to address a mass meeting of the people of our neighboring town of Auburn tonight in the interest of the anti-saloon movement now in progress there, and we desire to express to you and through you to the good people of Auburn the hope that your effort and theirs to rid the town of these schools of vice may be eminently successful.

The closing of these saloons in our town and throughout the entire county has proven so satisfactory and beneficial that a very large majority of our people would not countenance for a moment any proposition for reopening of the saloons in our midst.—Respectfully yours,

Henry Snyder, county sheriff.

Elder Medbury gave the exact figures as to the number of pounds of liquor shipped into Angola during the months of November and December, 1897, before the saloon closed, and the corresponding months in 1899, after the saloons were closed. In the months named of 1897 37,000 pounds, in round numbers; and in the months named of 1899 6,000 pounds, making a difference of more than 30,000 pounds, in favor of no saloons.

CONCORD.

Farmers are kept busy cutting wood this nice winter weather.

Mrs. Lewis Howey is on the sick list.

Rev. Johnson is holding meeting at Concord.

Mrs. Lizzie Morr had a sewing bee last Thursday.

Miss Iva Morr is better.

Maud Layman is working for Mrs. Hays, who had a stroke of paralysis.

Perry Stafford has occupied the property owned by Mr. Bormen.

Lewis Johnson has moved on the place of Mr. Long.

Mr. Pence made business trip to Auburn Saturday.

Tom George, son of Jim George, is badly afflicted with rheumatism, and is unable to walk.

Jim Ervin took a tie pass to Jt. Joe last Friday.

Mr. J. Going is having bad luck; one of his horses falling dead in the harness.

Roberts Knocked Out.

Roberts of Utah has been refused admittance as a congressman. A new election will have to be ordered to fill his place. The vote to exclude him was non partisan and stood 268 against him and 50 for him. Among those who voted to exclude him was our own Hon. James M. Robinson. His vote does credit to his judgment and his integrity for though Roberts was a democrat it was proved that he was a wilful law breaker. Utah can surely find men who are safe from penitentiary dangers and she should send them to congress.

Obituary.

John Martin was born in York Co., Pa., Nov. 16, 1822, died in Waterloo, Ind., Jan. 20, 1900. Aged 77 years, 2 months, 4 days.

He was the youngest of a family of six children, two boys and four girls, all of whom have passed away, except one sister, Mrs. Eliza Neval, who resides in Louisiana.

When he was nine years of age, his family moved to Stark Co., O., where he resided until 1840, when he and his brother came to Smithfield Twp., and located a farm, and began arduous life of a pioneer, clearing away the forest and bringing his farm into a high state of cultivation. In the month of May in 1815 he was married to Miss Almira Cole who still survives him. They having lived together for over 54 years. To them were born two daughters, the oldest died at the age of four years Mrs. Pheba Hanman the surviving daughter, remaining near and surporting her dying father and sustaining the aged mother with a daughters love and sympathy.

John Martin enlisted in Co. M, 2nd Ind. Cav., October 15, 1861, and was discharged from the service January 20, 1863, by reason of disability, returning to his farm, which he continued to attend until several years since.

Funeral services were conducted by his chaplain, W. O. Butler, assisted by Rev. C. E. Morman, and his remains were tenderly borne from his home to the U. B. church by his comrades of the Post, where the sermon was delivered, and from there to the Waterloo cemetery where their ritual services were held.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sample bottles at O. P Barber's, Corners.

Court News.

But little business was transacted last Thursday. The following cases have been disposed of in addition those heretofore mentioned.

The International Building and Loan Association vs. Daniel and Mary Kagey on mortgage; submitted to the court, and judgment for plaintiff for $548.90. Foreclosure ordered.

The W. W. Kimball Co. has filed a motion for a new trial in the case against Jacob Rink of Garrett, decided in favor of Rink a few days ago.

In the case of Kyrus Oberlin against Daniel Oberlin and others, on mortgage, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff. The property was ordered sold and the proceeds, after all costs are paid, divided between the plaintiff and J. A. Campbell, one of the defendants.

The case of William A. Edwards vs. Elmira Edwards, for divorce, has been dismissed.

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

Daniel had a remarkable opening in politics. He knew that; and he knew too how he compared in ability with the other boys who had received appointments in the public service, and he saw clearly enough that "the prince of the eunuchs" regarded him with "favor and tender love." Any slippery old Israelitish politician would have said: "Dan, my boy, give me your hand! You're a lucky boy. Eh, Dan! If you don't 'get there' now, it will be your own fault!" And he didn't "get there" that time and it was his own fault, for he had "purposed in his own heart that he would not defile himself" to get anywhere.

"Ah, but," the politician would have said, "look my boy, it is the king's meat that is offered you. Don't be a fanatic! Your principles are fixed and well known. A little roast pork and champagne won't hurt you, and think what it may mean to Israel—not to Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel, but to Israel. Do you see? What you and Nebuchadnezzar need is to get together. Think of your influence! Eat it, my boy. Eat it! And then you can raise your window toward Jerusalem and 'sing hymns with great feeling.'"

But Daniel was steadfast, he staid by his principles. How did it end? It took longer, but "he got there just the same," for "It pleased Darius to set over the kingdom an hundred and twenty princes, and over these, three presidents, of whom Daniel was first * * * because an excelent spirit was in him."

So, in the long run, Daniel, the clean man, was president. Nebuchadnezzar had taken the grass cure for his character and gone "over the range"—Mrs. G. Wooley.

County officers' Pay.

Indianapolis Press.

The state fee and salary commission Monday afternoon decided to recommend that the salaries of clerks, auditors recorders, treasurers and sheriffs be calculated on no other basis than the population and taxable valuation of the counties, provided all officers but the treasurer be allowed ten per cent of fees collected, and the treasurer be allowed one-tenth of one per cent of all taxes collected. This latter may be so amended as to give the treasurer ten cents of the penalties collected on delinquent tazes.

The commision will also recommend that all salaries be paid at the end of each quarter and all fees, including per centages due for collection, be paid into the county fund, and all per diem and extra amounts now allowed be cut off. It will be also recommended that the clerk's fund, auditor's fund and recorder's fund, treasurer's fund and sheriff's fund be abolished, and all salaries and per-centages be paid directly out of the county fund.

HERE is a medical lecture in a nutshell. The Kidneys drain water and impurities from the blood. The Liver makes bile and helps to drive off other waste. If these organs work badly the body becomes a cesspool and disease sets in. You must get them into healthy action or die.

Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver & Kidney Balm

is an old and unsurpassed remedy for Backache, Debility, Sleeplessness, Lost Appetite, Foul Tongue, Palpitations and all other symptoms of disease in those organs. It cures as well as prevents every serious trouble in Kidney, Liver or Bladder. At druggists, $1.00 per bottle.

Our Saturday Evenings.

CHAPTER XIII.

The year 1870 closed on this day of the week, Saturday, and the new year, January 1, 1871 began on Sunday. The first issue of the COURIER therefore, was to represent the first day of a whole week, the first week of the year. It is therefore proper, though we have been unavoidably delayed in it, to give a few notes as to that week's issue. Vol. I, Number 1, of the COURIER bears date January 5, 1871. The paper of that date lies before us. It is an 8-column folio, that is, it has on its four pages 32 columns, each column being 23 inches long, making a total length of column 1,036 inches. The present Weekly COURIER is 7-column quarto, that is it has 8 pages, each page having 7 columns or 56 columns in all, and as each column is now 22 inches long it has a total column length of 1,232 inches. The price of subscription then was $2, the present price being $1.50. So much by way of introduction. The first issue contains the valedictory of the retiring editor, J. A. Bates, who had published it as the "Air Line" in Waterloo, and this is followed by the "Bow" of T. C. Mays, who continued to publish it till July 1878.

We note a few things of interest. The first issue contains the delinquent tax list. It contained over 770 descriptions, and as the price allowed by law was at that date 45 cents, as against 20 cents a description as at present, it will be seen that the printer was not so utterly left out in the cold. That list would amount to $346, though we believe Mr. Mays cut his bill down a little. In 1899 the delinquent tax list publication cost about $43.

In the ads and notices we find one for teachers signed W. H. McIntosh as examiner, and the law permitted an applicant who knew he could not pass in one or two of the branches (which he would not be called on to teach generally,) to be excused from an examination in such branch, but it kept him down to a short license.

There are legal notices by J. B. Lanning, clerk; Jerry Plum, sheriff, (by J. B. Hoover, deputy;) G. W. Wells, surveyor; Wm. McIntyre, auditor.

There are professional cards of J. W. Rickel; Moody & Peterson; Pinchin & Madden; Hartman & Morlan; Best & McClellan and McBride & Morlan, attorneys. Wm. Bricker, Wm. Bevier, Sol. Stough and A. B. Darby, were doctors. The first month's issues had only small business ads. The were O. T. Clark, dry goods; Fitch & Butt, grocers, and J. B. Taylor, Fanning Mills all of Waterloo. J. L. Davis, hardware; J. W. Sheffer, wagons etc., of Auburn; G. W. Young, drygoods, at Butler. There were the usual number of patent medicine and book notices, and a good many foreign advertisements. Among the last named, it looks queer to see a "non-explosive lamp," for using kerosene oil, great pains being taken to show that the article was made of metal, so as to remove the danger of explosion.

Later on there is a notice of "non-explosive burning fluid" said to be much better than the dangerous coal oil. It was on sale at the "Light House, corner of Fifth and Main streets of Auburn, by Charles W. Welchlin," who also sold lamps, etc.

After the first month, come in such names as S. W. Ralston, S. Lauferty, J. Abright, Chas. Klotz. C. S. Hare, boot and shoes; Smith & Hare, groceries and crokery; T. B. Totten, grocer; F. E. Davenport, druggist.

By this time Fort Wayne showed up with a big ad for the Fruit House, and smaller ones for B. Trentman, crockery Root & Company, O. D. Hurd whose line was doors, blinds, sash, etc.

Considerable pains was taken in the "make up" of the papers. At first there was not a break in the reading matter over the whole first page, but later on a column of professional cards was allowed.

Hon. L. D. Britton then representative in the legislature, was given a good word in the March 9 issue for the good record he had made.

A "grand concert," in Milwaukee was advertised. This was a soft name for a sort of lottery that sold "100,000 tickets at $2 each" and in that way would distribute $80,000 all in "Greenbacks."

Of the business men, in Auburn at that time, only Mr. Davenport and Mr. Davis remain. They are moreover, in the same rooms they then occupied and in the same line of goods. All the Fort Wayne houses have ceased business or gone into other hands.

Auburn was then a little "dead ripe" town, but was starting into new life under the impetus given it by the Jackson road which sent its first engine through as far south as the present Auburn Junction bridge in October of the fall before. The Eel River road was a long line of bushes, in what was a grade dug several years before, and the B. & O. did not come till several years later.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties—A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

Shook the Earth.

A fearful explosion of dynamite occurred in the yards of the Jersey Cental Railroad at Ashley, Pa., killing three men and injuring a score or more. The accident was caused by the loss of the control of a heavy freight train, consisting of twenty-four cars, while descending the steep grade down the mountain. The shock exploded a car containing thirty boxes of dynamite, and all the cars in the train were wrecked. Everything that stood near was knocked to pieces. Ten locomotives were wrecked. The stacks of the round house and a large portion of the roof were blown away. An immense tank containing thousands of gallons of water was torn to pieces. Nearly every window in the town was broken. The inhabitants were greatly alarmed by the noise of the explosion, as well as by the shaking of their houses.

A French Fracas.

Paris special: The trial of the twelve Assumptionist fathers before the correctional tribunal resulted in their sentence to sixteen francs fine each, and the court decreed the dissolution of the order.

M. Jean Charles Bernard, [illegible] for the second [illegible] deputy, member for the district of Bordeaux, violently denounced the statements made by the Public Prosecutor at the trial of the Assumptionists fathers, and attacked the Minister of Justice, M. Monis, calling him a scoundrel and a canaille. The Chamber pronounced itself in favor of expulsion of M. Bernard from the house, but the Deputy refused to withdraw. The proceedings were temporarily suspended, and a detachment of soldiers were marched in, whereupon M. Bernard left the Chamber, protesting against his expulsion.

British Take Spion Kop.

London special: The War Office has just issued the following dispatch from Spearman's camp:

"Gen. Warren's troops occupied Spion Kop, surprising the small garrison, who fled. It has been held by us all day, though we were heavily attached, especially by a very annoying shell fire.

"I fear our casualties are considerable and I have to inform you, with regret, that Gen. Woodgate was dangerously wounded.

"Gen. Warren is of the opinion that he has rendered the enemy's position untenable. The men are splendid."

The Chinese Emperor Ousted.

Pekin special: The imperial edict issued Thursday says that, owing to the Emperor's poor health, he is unable to conduct the business of the State, and appoints Pu Chun, son of Prince Tuano, his heir.

The Emperor, apparently, has been compelled by the Dowager Empress to abdicate about the Chinese new year, though it is understood that this will meet with considerable opposition in certain court circles. The Dowager, however, intends to carry out the program which she has planned for years.

Cut in Price of Glass.

Another cut of 2½ per cent. in the price of window glass has been ordered by the trust, coming close upon the former cut of 33⅓ per cent. The fight of the trust against the independent factories is now taken to be to the death. Tableware manufacturers have ordered an advance in the price of fruit jars.

Roberts Is Ousted.

The case of Brigham H. Roberts, the Mormon Representative-elect from Utah, which has occupied so much of the attention of the House since the assembling of Congress, was decided Thursday by the adoption of a resolution to exclude him by a vote of 278 to 50.

Costly Repairs on Olympia.

Half a million dollars is the estimated cost of repairing the Olympia, according to the reports of the Board of Naval Construction. The work will be done at the Boston Navy Yard and will occupy about a year.

Death of a Duchess.

A dispatch from Dresden says: The Dowager Duchess of Schlesswig-Holstein, mother of the Empress Augusta Victoria, who had been suffering from pleurisy, is dead.

Carter Must Go to Prison.

The United States Circuit Court upheld the lower court in the Oberlin Carter habeas corpus proceedings, and Capt. Carter must serve his sentence.

One Million Marks.

Berlin special: It is said that the claims against England for the detention of German steamers will aggregate one million marks.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.
Feb. 1—"A Temperance Town."
Feb. 3—"Midnight in Chinatown."

To Aid the Boers.

It is learned that former United States Consul Macrum, at Pretoria, has become a naturalized citizen of the Transvaal Republic. This explains his inability to represent the British interests and his bearing of alleged letters from Kruger to President McKinley.

Town Was Deserted.

Manila special: The Americans have occupied Santa Cruz, on Laguna de Bay, Laguna Province. It was reported many insurgents were concentrated there, but the town was deserted.

Attorneys Fight in Court.

Ex-Congressman J. Frank Hanly and George P. Haywood, opposing attorneys in the Hinesley case on trial in the Circuit Court at Lafayette, Ind., came to blows, and it required the combined efforts of bailiffs, jurymen, witnesses and attorneys to separate the angry men.

Will Buy Military Reservation.

A syndicate of Boston capitalists are endeavoring to purchase the entire Fort Berryesson military reservation, comprising 45,000 acres, in North Dakota, for a cattle ranch. The land has been appraised and the aggregate value under the appraisal is about $75,000.

GENERAL TRADE HOLDS FIRM.

Mild Weather Fails to Affect the Demand for Spring Goods.

Bradstreet's says: "General trade and prices as a whole maintain the even balance which has been the leading feature for some time past and in which it will require the advent of distinctly new features to effect any basic changes. General demand is large for this season of the year, but speculation is quiet to the extreme of dullness in some lines, and especially in those branches of speculation which go radically to affect financial affairs. Close examination of leading lines of industry fails to show marked unfavorable features. It is true that retail trade in seasonable goods has been and is being affected by phenomenally mild winter weather, but wherever spring trade, particularly in dry goods, has been developed it has been in such volume and accompanied with such a readiness of acceptance of advanced prices as to point to undiminished confidence on the part of the trade world as to the outlook for spring business. The iron and steel industry, justly regarded as a trustworthy index of general trade, is still actively employed on old orders. Other metals are rather stronger, copper and tin being weak. Cereals are dull in nearly all directions. Coffee is active. Cotton goods are meeting with good demand on spring account. Fine wools are at about the highest point reached in twenty years. Lumber is strong. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 3,061,926 bushels, against 4,248,926 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 3,199,312 bushels, against 3,314,576 bushels last week."

ENTOMBED MAN KEEPS A DIARY.

Record of His Experiences Found Beside a Dead Mine Boss

The body of William Galloway, fire boss at the Kaska William mine of the Dodson Coal Company, Pottsville, Pa., who was entombed Dec. 13, has been recovered. The search for Galloway alive was persistently continued until after the lapse of days it was concluded that he must have died. His entombment was due to a fall of coal while he was inspecting the mine workings. While he lived Galloway kept a diary on sheet iron with a piece of chalk, and subsisted on the oil in the lamp until it was exhausted. Galloway wrote on a plank on the side of the chute on which the fall occurred the following words: "I am in the chute No. 11½." This was a clew to his whereabouts and the rescuers worked more diligently than ever, and before the bo[illegible] was found these words were discovered written on sheet iron on a brattice door. They were addressed to his wife: "I think I am gone. Good-by, Janie. Be good boys, Guy and Willie. I don't think you will see your father any more. I think this is Wednesday."

EDLINGER'S MURDER AVENGED.

Three Men Will Spend Their Lives in Prison for the Crime.

At Fort Scott, Kan., Amos Phillips was found guilty of the murder of Leopold Edlinger, a Bates County farmer, whose mutilated body was found in Mill creek last November. Phillips, with George and Ed Meeks, brothers, murdered Edlinger for his team and money, the trio having followed the victim for two weeks seeking a favorable time to kill him. The Meekses were found guilty. All three will be sent to the penitentiary for life. Phillips confessed that he and the Meeks brothers had a rendezvous in Bates County and that they made a business of stealing cattle and horses.

All Rolling Stock Burned.

At Muncie, Ind., fire, probably of incendiary origin, destroyed the entire plant of the Union Traction Company, together with the Snyder cooperage works and a dwelling house. The estimated loss on the traction company's plant is between $90,000 and $100,000, fully covered by insurance. Every motor car save one used in the city street car service was consumed.

Block Cotton Mill Combine.

The sixty-four cotton mills of Fall River, Mass., occupy the unique position of having successfully withstood the effort of the money power to combine them into a gigantic trust, while all the other manufacturing industries of any considerable pretension have been forced into the combinations and lost their individuality.

Rob a Bank of $4,000.

The Commercial Bank of the town of Silver Lake, Ind., was wrecked by masked men, who blew up the vault and safe with nitroglycerin. The cracksmen carried away about $4,000 in paper money. They were compelled to leave several sacks of silver, owing to a battle begun by citizens. These sacks contained $15,000.

Society Woman Kills Herself.

Mrs. Willie Shropshire committed suicide at her home in Lexington, Ky. When her husband came home he found her on the floor with a bullet hole in her head. She was wealthy, but her husband failed some months ago.

Safe Blown with Nitroglycerin.

The Bank of Ellettsville, Ind., was robbed between 1 and 2 o'clock on a recent morning. It is reported that $1,500 was taken. The robbers pried open the windows with crowbars and used nitroglycerin on the safe.

Mrs. Tevis Gets $7,000,000.

Mrs. Susan G. Tevis received nearly all of the estate of her late husband, Lloyd Tevis, by a decree of distribution from Judge Coffey at San Francisco. The property distributed to her is valued at about $7,000,000.

Rats Carry the Plague.

At Adelaide, Australia, the bacillus of the bubonic plague has been found on dead rats in a place where a plague patient was isolated. The Australian colonies have declared Adelaide an infected port.

Will Refuse Liquor Sent C. O. D.

Orders issued by the Great Northern Express Company will do much to prevent evasion of the North Dakota prohibition law. Agents have been instructed to refuse to accept in future all C. O. D. shipments of liquor.

Suicide of Once Wealthy Man.

At Fort Worth, Texas, Edwin E. Chase killed himself with a pistol, the ball passing through his head. He was formerly a wealthy resident of that city, and at one time he was worth more than $250,000.

Fatal Injury to Prof. Hazen.

Henry A. Hazen, professor of meteorology and one of the chief forecasters of weather conditions at the weather bureau in Washington, D. C., was probably fatally injured by being thrown from his bicycle.

Street Car Strike in Troy.

All the street cars in Troy, N. Y., were tied up as a result of the strike of 365 motormen and conductors of the United Traction Company. The men demand 20 cents an hour and a ten-hour day.

Artist Sontag is Dead.

William L. Sontag, the artist, died at his home in New York, aged 78 years. He was born near Pittsburg.

Two Lynched at Fort Scott.

At Fort Scott, Kan., a mob of 400 men lynched George and Ed Mack, alias Smith, two Kansas City criminals, who were convicted of the murder of Leopold Edlinger, a young farmer of Bates County, Missouri. The same mob was prevented from hanging Amos Phillips, an old Bates County farmer, who is convicted of the same crime, by a determined stand taken by the Sheriff and his deputies, assisted by conservative citizens.

GREAT DAMAGE BY FLOODS.

Loss of Life and Property in Japan During December.

Official reports just completed give details of terrible inundations which destroyed property valued at over 6,000,000 yen in Hokkaido province, northern Japan, in December. Thirty-five towns in the district of Ishikari were devastated. Since September no fewer than 17,288 houses have been submerged or washed away in Hokkaido alone, while the total damage is placed at 13,000,000 yen. Complete returns show that about 100 fishing schooners and other craft were destroyed or sunk during the severe storm which swept over the Japanese coast Dec. 23 to 25. The total number of lives lost is placed at 189.

FLAMES SWEEP CATTLE RANGES.

Fire in Teton County, Montana, Causes an Immense Property Loss.

A report reached Great Falls, Mont., of a destructive fire in Teton County that destroyed ten square miles of range and burned four ranches. The loss is estimated at many thousand dollars. The fire started at Richardson's ranch by a spark from the chimney falling in the wood pile. A strong wind was blowing and the fire swept on to the Halliday ranch, two miles away, burning all the buildings but the residence. A mile further Knowles' ranch was left a blackened ruin. Clark Brothers' two ranches were partially burned, when the wind died down and the fire turned to the mountain, where it was put out. No lives were lost.

FOE TO SECRET ORDERS EGGED.

Rough Treatment of Ohio Man Who Promised an Exposure.

Rev. G. L. Mason of the Christian Catholic Church advertised that he would reveal secrets of the Masons, Modern Woodmen and the Knights of Pythias at Bluffton, Ohio. The representative citizens of Bluffton are members of orders, and when the reverend gentleman started his denunciation of the secret societies the electric wires running into the hall were cut and Mason egged off the stage.

Prefers the American Trade.

Jamaica has emphatically rejected Joseph Chamberlain's English direct fruit trade scheme to divert the bulk of the colony's trade from America to England, and which calls for a subsidy of £40,000 annually, Jamaica paying one-half. The consensus of public opinion, replying to the governor's plebiscite circular, indicates a preference to depend on American trade.

Klondike Ship Is Wrecked.

The steamer Cottage City brings news that the steamer Townsend went on the rocks near Battery Point, going north, but got off and proceeded to Skaguay. On the return trip she was driven on the rocks near Haynes Mission and smashed to pieces by the waves. The crew was saved and walked two miles to Haynes Mission.

Dying Man Confesses a Crime.

A report has reached Redwood Falls, Minn., from relatives of the deceased that old man Slover recently died in California and that he made a deathbed confession that he had killed Moses Lufkins in Gales township some twelve years ago, instead of William Rose, who was afterward executed for the crime.

Army Order on Shape of Hats.

No more may the private soldier knock dents in his campaign hat or pin up a flap of the brim on one side. The regulation just issued by the War Department reads: "The wearing of these hats in any other than their original shape is prohibited." The original shape of the campaign hat is on the Alpine order.

Non-Unionist Kills a Striker.

Julius Wenzel, a non-union ironworker, was attacked by strikers, who used brass knuckles, in Chicago, and defended himself by stabbing one of his assailants. His victim, E. A. O'Connor, a striker, was mortally wounded, and died on the sidewalk.

Steamer Sunk in Collision.

The Glasgow steamer Ardandhu, from New London, Conn., for Halifax, N. S., was sunk in collision with the Metropolitan liner Herman Winter, from Boston for New York, off Robinson's Hole, Vineyard sound, Mass., and two of the Ardandhu's crew were lost.

Circus Interests to Unite.

Two unsatisfactory clauses in the partnership agreement are all that stand in the way of a combination of the greatest circus interests in the United States. Those interested in the proposed combination are the Sells brothers, James A. Bailey and W. W. Cole.

Seven Killed by an Earthquake.

Seven persons were killed at Colima, Mexico, by an earthquake. The destruction of property was considerable.

Richard D. Blackmore Dead.

Richard D. Blackmore, the novelist, died at Teddington, England. He was born at Longworth, Berkshire, in 1825.

TO BUILD A MODERN ZION.

Great Religious City Near Chicago Where All Will Be Pure.

A great religious city, where the commerce of the world will center and where there will be no wickedness, will, if the present plans of the promoters are carried out, soon be built up in the suburbs of Chicago. The leaders of the peculiar sect who are to be founders of the new Zion are so firm in their belief that destruction is soon to overtake Chicago because of the wickedness of its inhabitants that they have bought, or have an option on, 6,000 acres of land near Waukegan, a suburb of Chicago, on the lake shore, and here the future city, where all is to be pure and good, is to rise.

John Alexander Dowie and his wife

JOHN ALEXANDER DOWIE.

are the leading promoters. Ground is to be broken for a temple early in May, with most impressive ceremonies. The ill are to be healed, Dowie declares, and the world is to receive its first revelation of what a modern Zion is to be. Later, building of two factories, the industrial beginnings of the city, is to begin. One is to be for the making of shoes, and the other is to be a lace factory. Next on the program will be the laying of the corner stone for the Temple of Zion, and then there are to be portents in the heavens, which may be read by all men except those enclosed in the Chicago streets. Later Dowie is to make a triumphal tour to the Holy Land. On the lake front will be situated 320 acres of the tract, and there Dowie promises the commerce of the world is to be centered.

Dowie, who calls himself general overseer of the Christian Catholic Church, was born in Scotland about sixty-six years ago. He was educated for the ministry in the Edinburgh Seminary. He appeared in Australia about eighteen years ago and started a grocery store. He was elected to the Common Council of Melbourne and then opened a tabernacle. Becoming violent in his language against the Council he was given thirty days to leave, and came to San Francisco, where he opened a church. Going to Chicago the year before the World's Fair, he started a tent service on what later became the Midway Plaisance.

He is now the lessee of a church with a seating capacity of 3,300, and also of a hall where he has a printing establishment, with a perfecting press, three duplex presses and many job presses, 116 stands and a chapel of sixty union printers. The building is also the home of the Zion Bank, a wealthy institution, and the Zion City Land and Investment Association.

FIGURES ON CROPS OF 1899.

Official Estimates of Acreage, Production and Value.

The statistician of the Department of Agriculture has made public his final estimates of the acreage, production and value of the crops of 1899. The values are based on the average farm prices on Dec. 1, in accordance with the practice of the department.

The wheat acreage was 44,502,516, the production 537,203,846 bushels, and the value $319,545,259, the average yield per acre being 12.3 bushels and the average farm price per bushel on Dec. 1, 58.4 cents.

The corn acreage was 82,102,589, the production 2,078,143,033, and the value $629,210,110, the average yield per acre being 25.3 bushels and the average farm price per bushel on Dec. 1, 30.3 cents.

The acreage in oats was 26,341,390, the production 796,177,713 bushels, and the value $198,167,975, the average yield per acre being 30.2 bushels and the average farm price per bushel on Dec. 1, 29.0 cents.

The barley crop is estimated at 73,381,568 bushels, the rye crop at 28,961,741 bushels, the buckwheat crop 11,094,473 bushels, the potato crop at 228,769,232 bushels, and the hay crop at 56,655,756 tons.

ROBERTS IN DEFENSE.

Mormon Makes a Strong Plea for Justice Before the House.

Debate on the Roberts case reports began in the national House Tuesday, Chairman Tayler argued for the majority resolution, which provides for excluding the Utah member. Mr. Littlefield of Maine argued for the minority resolution to permit Roberts to be sworn in and then expel him. Mr. Roberts closed the debate for the day, without exhausting the period allotted to him. He quoted from the findings of the committee, and asked, "Without a violation of the constitution of our country can you deny me the right to appear at the bar of the House, from which I have been improperly turned away, and prevent me from being sworn?"

The House, he continued, was subject to a great temptation at this time to respond to the popular will, without regard to the limitations imposed by the constitution. Other great and proud nations, as much so as the United States, had for violations of this kind gone into decay and naught but ruins marked the places they once occupied. "And so I would warn you of the danger of the departing from the constitution to respond to the clamor of misled people." What was proposed in the House now, Roberts said, was that because in the sanctity of the church men have taken a plurality of wives, one of whom has been elected a Representative in Congress, and the sanctity of the home is threatened, a more lawless act than polygamy shall be done to rebuke the man so elected. Mr. Roberts said, as he had said on the second day of the session, that he did not stand as the advocate or defender of polygamy.

It had been conceded by Luther, to whom more than any other man the people of to-day owe whatever of religious and civil liberty they possess, that polygamy was not prohibited by the scriptures, and that it was a crime merely because it was prohibited by law. The people who believed and practiced polygamy, he said, did so as a part of their religion; they believed came to them from God. In that view [illegible] submitted to the [illegible] laws against it, hoping for a favorable judgment by the court, and when [illegible] that failed, for a reversal. But the reversal did not come. Thirteen hundred Mormons in Utah suffered punishment by the courts, including the Representative from that State. "They did not have suffered," he went on, "if they had but said the word."

Roberts pleaded that the men who had suffered must not be judged too harshly. Since the famous manifesto against plural marriages, he asserted, they had ceased in Utah, despite all that had been said and charged to the contrary. The abandonment of the institution of polygamy had meant death to some of its advocates, and the heartaches which had attended the proceeding had caused many others to hope that the same solution of the problem might come to them.

The laws against plural marriages did not obtain in the States surrounding Utah, so that many plural wives had been sent into them, the husbands remaining in Utah and there observing the law against plural marriages. Roberts said it was a mistake to hold that he was the representative of the Mormon church, chosen over the protest of the gentile citizens. He had been elected after a thorough canvass, in which the people knew all about him, by a plurality of 5,665. The right of a constituency to the free choice of its representative ought not be denied or abridged by the action of the House. The Mormon people of Utah, he asserted, were not disloyal, but they were loyal to the institutions of their country, and neither deserved nor merited the rebuke that was sought to be put on them.

In conclusion Roberts said he could neither be excluded nor expelled without dangerous action—action that threatened to overthrow the foundation of Government. "And I intend, gentlemen," he continued, his voice rising to its highest pitch, and his whole manner intense and dramatic to the last degree, striding up and down the aisle, "to cling so closely to the pillars of liberty that you shall not drag me away unless you pull the pillars down with me."

The House resumed the debate on the Roberts case at 11 o'clock Wednesday. The galleries were again well filled, most of the occupants, as on Tuesday, being women. Mr. Powers (Vt.) was the first speaker. He argued in behalf of exclusion of Mr. Roberts. The contention of the minority for expulsion, he said, ran up against the very precedents which were cited in its support. "We are not separating wife from husband," said Mr. Powers, commenting on Mr. Roberts' speech. "Polygamy has never been legal in Utah, either before or after her admission into the Union. Polygamy was illegal under the common law of England. The moment he took wife No. 2 the marriage was void. Mr. Roberts knew the law. He cannot now plead the 'baby act' against the law and stern justice."

Mr. Snodgrass of Tennessee followed Mr. Powers, supporting the views of the minority in favor of seating and then expelling Mr. Roberts. Mr. Landis (Ind.) argued that Utah had violated her compact with the United States. Mr. Landis went over the record of the apostles of the Mormon Church to show that most of them were guilty of continued polygamous practices. Some of his statements were sensational.

The Senate on Thursday listened to a speech by Mr. Wellington against permanent retention of the Philippines; also to a continuation by Mr. Teller of his attack on the financial bill. Received a resolution from Mr. Ross declaring in favor of creating a separate government department to take charge of all outlying dependencies. The House passed Senate bill extending power of director of the census after rejecting amendment opposed by labor unions authorizing director to contract for extra printing with private contractors.

On Friday the Senate listened to an impassioned speech by Mr. Hale, in which he said he believed nine-tenths of the American people were in sympathy with the Boers in their war with Great Britain. Passed Mr. Allen's resolution inquiring of the President whether any representative of the Transvaal Government had applied for recognition, and whether it had been granted or denied. Listened to a speech by Mr. Morgan in opposition to the financial bill. The pension appropriation bill, carrying $145,245,[illegible] passed by the House. The commissioner was defended by a score of members from both sides of the house. A rider was put upon the bill by unanimous consent empowering the commissioner in his discretion to withhold the fees of attorneys of record in pension cases where he was satisfied that the attorneys had not prepared the cases under their personal supervision. A bill was passed to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri river at St. Charles, Mo.

The Senate held no session on Saturday. The House spent an hour in disposing of bills favorably reported, among those passed being the measures to build the League Island and Mare Island dry docks of stone instead of timber. Reports on the Roberts case were also received. An hour was given to pronouncing eulogies on the late Representative Danford of Ohio. A resolution was adopted calling for information in the possession of the War Department relative to the power canal around St. Mary's Rapids, Lake Superior.

In the Senate on Monday little business beyond routine was transacted. Mr. Pritchard (N. C.) delivered a long and carefully prepared address upon the race question in the South, his remarks being addressed particularly against the proposed amendment to the constitution of North Carolina, which, it is alleged, he said, would disfranchise a large class of voters, both white and black. He was followed by Mr. Turner (Wash.) in a speech on the Philippine question, in which he arraigned the administration's policy as set [illegible] in the President's message and in [illegible] speech of Mr. Beveridge (Ind.). Received a resolution by Mr. Pratt of New York authorizing the President to invite Great Britain to join in an international commission to examine into the diversion of boundary waters between the United States and Canada. Adopted amended Rawlins resolution for an investigation into polygamy in the United States or any of its possessions. Received a resolution from Mr. Allen calling upon Secretary Gage for a statement regarding his verbal or written communication with officials of the National City Bank of New York about the sale of the New York custom house. The House was in session only forty minutes, and nothing of public importance was done except to refer to the Speaker for settlement a dispute between the appropriations and military affairs committees over jurisdiction of the estimates for the appropriations for the manufacture of small arms at the Rock Island and Springfield arsenals.

On Tuesday the Senate adopted Mr. Kyle's resolution directing commissioner of labor to investigate the effect upon labor, production and wages of international copyright act. Mr. Pettigrew offered resolution calling upon President to send to Senate report of Gen. J. C. Bate relating to treaty with Sultan of Sulu. Objection was made and resolution went over. Mr. Caffery presented three resolutions calling upon President for correspondence with Great Britain concerning the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, correspondence with Colombian Government as to Panama canal, and correspondence with New Panama Canal Company of France. Adopted. Resolution offered by Mr. Allen calling upon Secretary of Treasury for correspondence and substance of all verbal communications which he has had with officials of National City Bank of New York concerning transfer of old custom house to the National City Bank was adopted. Mr. Turner concluded his speech on Philippine question, and then Mr. Rose addressed Senate on same question.

On Wednesday the Senate passed Pettigrew resolution calling for information from the President regarding the treaty with the Sultan of Sulu, after Mr. Pettigrew had attacked the administration for entering into an agreement which, he said, authorized slavery. Received from the appropriations committee the urgent deficiency bill. Received from Mr. Pettigrew a resolution declaring United States could not recognize right of any nation to seize food products as contraband of war and that such seizure would be regarded by this nation as unfriendly. Sent back to conference the census administrative bill. The House listened to speeches on the Roberts case by Messrs. ADVANCE OF BULLER.

BOERS HAVE STUBBORNLY CONTESTED THE GROUND.

British Lose Heavily in a Sixty-Hours' Battle with the Strongly Intrenched Burghers—Anxiety in England Has Been at an Extreme Tension.

Keen anxiety prevailed throughout England on Wednesday for news of Gen. Warren's night attack on Spion kop, which Gen. Buller in a dispatch late Tuesday night said was meditated. All night long the war office in London was brilliantly lit up and many officials were on hand awaiting news of the daring step that Buller had ordered. Early morning brought groups of people to the war office, and as the day advanced they came in crowds. Not a line, however, came from Buller. Noon went [illegible] and still nothing came, and anxiety on all sides increased.

Gen. Buller's dispatch announcing that Warren was to make a night attack with the bayonet, one of the most hazardous moves of modern warfare, was taken to indicate that his flanking movement which Warren undertook, had signally failed. Buller apparently had been forced to return to the tactics which have thus far proved unsuccessful—that is a frontal attack on a fortified enemy. The only change was that the attack was to be made at night. Methuen tried this at Magersfontein, but the Boers were awake and it resulted in fearful losses in the Highland brigade, which had been sent to do the work. Remembering this, it can easily be seen with what fear and anxiety the English people awaited the result of Buller's movements.

According to official dispatches received from the Boer laager near Colenso 30,000 British made a simultaneous attack Saturday on several positions on the Tugela river, with the object of forcing the relief of Ladysmith. A terrific battle ensued, and fighting continued for sixty hours. A frightful bombardment by forty British cannon opened the engagement. Then came grand infantry attacks by the force under Gens. Buller and Warren, who were three times repulsed, with great losses. The Boers admit that the casualties resulting from the bombardment were heavy and the terrible effects of the lyddite are several times mentioned, Commandant Viljoen and two burghers being knocked senseless by the effects of one shell. Gen. Botha receives the credit of having checked Warren's advance, and President Steyn is said to have been under fire in the foremost ranks of the Free Staters. Gen. White's headquarters at Ladysmith, according to the statement telegraphed from the Boer camp, were demolished by shell fire.

GENERAL BULLER.

Most of the way to Ladysmith is up hill, and every kopje and ridge on the extended line of attack has been occupied by the burghers. Driven from one position, they have fallen back on another already fortified with breastworks and trenches. The campaign has hitherto been chiefly a contest of spade and pick against bayonet, with the odds in favor of the former. Since Gen. Buller ordered a simultaneous advance of his entire forces the various divisions have been moving along a front of twenty-six miles. To the extreme left, Lord Dundonald's cavalry has been working its way slowly round Spion kop with the evident intention of turning the Boers' position. The ground occupied by the burghers has lent itself naturally to defense, and this advantage has been greatly increased by numerous trenches and covered ways, with formidable stretches of barbed wire in front. The British had no other way of taking these works but by frontal attack.

The first sign of discord among the English people as to the carrying on of the war was announced Wednesday. John Bryn-Roberts, leader of the Welsh liberals in the House of Commons, gave notice that he would speak in Parliament in favor of a cessation of hostilities in South Africa at the first session of Parliament.

A dispatch from Pretoria announces heavy fighting at Colesberg on Sunday, but brings no details. A severe artillery duel, it is reported, was fought on the Modder river on Monday. No figures of the losses on either side are given. Col. Plumer, who continues his advance to the relief of Mafeking from the north, has had no recent adventures worth noting. The British have formed a new camp at Potfontein, twenty miles east of Rensburg. It is held by the First cavalry brigade, which has an outpost five miles to the north. This gives the British a front of thirty miles in extent from Potfontein east to Modersfarm west.

THE INVASION OF CANADA.

The Ridiculous Proposal of Rattle-Brained Men.

The invasion of Canada, which has been started in the offices of the sensational and untruthful daily newspapers in New York and Chicago, seems to amuse the people of Canada quite as much as it does our own. The proposition is so ridiculous that it only evokes a smile. No sane person takes it seriously.

Not a single reason can be advanced, says a newspaper writer, why such a foolhardy proceeding should be undertaken. One of the excuses is that the Dominion has sent 1,000 men to South Africa and is measurably weakened thereby. As our neighbor can call into the field 400,000 men to fight against an invader it can be seen how little the draft for South Africa has affected her strength. And the other excuses are just as flimsy. The assistance of the French-Canadians is part of the foolish talk; likewise the defection of the Irish. The former would fight to a man against an incursion from our frontier. As for the million of Irish blood living there they are loyal to the well-being of the Dominion and can be relied upon to stand in her defense no matter from what quarter the attack might come.

The incendiary daily newspapers which are crying on a few misguided and blatant followers to invade Canada are doing so to increase their circulation. It is small business to be in, but nothing is too small for some big city publishers where the mighty dollar can be seen.

BECAUSE SHE LOVED HIM.

She sat and waited by the edge,
The western sky shone clear and yellow,
White mists were rising from the sedge,
The birds drank at the water's edge—
She sat and watched for him—dear fellow!

The fields were dim, the sky grew gray,
The stars, like timid flowers, were budding;
She watched along the lonely way,
While up the smooth sands of the bay
The limpid, silvery tide came flooding.

She watched—but when she saw, at last,
His tall form hurrying from the distance,
She rose, nor look behind her cast,
And walked the other way as fast
As if he wasn't in existence!

MAN PROPOSES

"MOLLY, do you mean it — is it final?" asked Jack Marshall, with an angry look at the serious face opposite him.

"Yes, Jack, I do. Hereafter you and I will be friends and that is all. You will go on with your studies and eventually make the rich marriage your mother intends for you. You and I must walk a different path in life from the one we had planned, but we will be friends, Jack, and I shall look forward to your success with as much pride and interest as you can desire. Now, Jack, for the sake of our school days, if nothing more, let us be friends."

The sweet voice for which Molly Maitland was so much envied ceased, and there was silence in the little room. Outside the rain fell in torrents and the wind blew so hard that the boughs of the trees beat against the windows. Inside the little parlor was bright with the light of the lamp and the sparkle of the fire in the open grate. And in this cheery little room, with the sound of the storm and the occasional crackling of the wood fire breaking the silence, sat Jack Marshall and Molly Maitland deciding the question of their future life.

Jack had just graduated from Harvard and was about to go abroad to continue his medical studies for two years. How he wanted to take Molly with him, both he and Molly knew, but she conscientiously refused to go and make Mrs. Marshall miserable. The haughty woman had called upon Mrs. Maitland and Molly, and finding the latter alone had told her that it would break her heart and spoil her whole life plans if Jack did not marry his rich cousin, Eleanor North, adding: "Of course, it would be a great match for you, but when Jack is once in Europe he will see his mistake, and it will be far better to break off now than to be tied for life to a man who does not really love you. You must remember that I am an older woman than you are and have seen more of the world, so I ask you to promise me." Molly felt as if the earth was slipping away from her, but she gave that promise and fulfilled it, like the brave little woman that she was.

"Molly, Molly, is that all you have to say to me? What can you mean?" he cried as he grasped her hands in his. "Just what I have said, Jack," answers the soft voice.

"I'll go to the devil then," is the unexpected reply.

"Jack, don't talk so cowardly. Can't you see that it is for your own good? And your mother will be so miserable if you do not marry Eleanor. Her whole life is centered in you. Go, now, and let this subject drop between us, for, Jack," the words came slowly, almost sobbingly now, "I shall never marry you."

"One look—one kiss," and, muttering those words again, he is gone into the storm, and Molly—well, we will leave our heroic if mistaken in her idea of duty girl of 20 to herself.

Ten years have passed and great changes have entered the lives of our friends. Mrs. Maitland and Mrs. Marshall have both died. Within three months of each other the two mothers are laid away. Jack had not been heard from up to the time of his mother's death, and Molly had taken up nursing as her vocation, and was matron of the emergency hospital at B—.

For the first year after leaving home Jack Marshall had lived a pretty wild life, but on Christmas morning, Molly's birthday, he had bowed the curly head and promised himself and a higher power to live a life worthy of Molly Maitland, even though she would never be his.

From that time on success attended all his undertakings, and he had made a name for himself in the medical world. After settling up his estate (for the immense property was left entirely to him), he entered upon his duties as city physician of B—.

One day in June he started out to visit the emergency hospital and consult with the directors and matrons with regard to extensive improvements which were about to be made. Sitting there in the cozy little reception hall, he wondered, as he had oft wondered before, what had become of Molly Maitland.

"So sorry to have kept you waiting, Dr. Marshall," said a sweet voice in well-remembered tones that made him start, "but my attention was called to a new case, and——"

"Good heavens, Molly!" exclaimed the dignified doctor; "have I found you? Are you matron here?"

Well, little Irish Maggie, who was sweeping down the stairs, told the head chambermaid that "the matron just said 'Jack' like as if she was going to drop, and then he ketched her in his arms, and," with wide-eyed astonishment, "he kissed her and kissed her, and she let him!"

The doctor often says as he looks lovingly at his wife: "Perhaps, Molly, it is just as well that I went to the devil and back again to win my angel. I was too impetuous for you then, dearest."

And Molly laughingly answers: "Are you sure you have gotten all over the impetuosity, Jack?"—Boston Post.

IN AN APRICOT ORCHARD.

How the Fruit Is Gathered, Dried and Prepared for Market.

As soon as an orchard of apricots comes into bearing, advertisements are inserted in the newspapers of adjoining towns for women and girls. Thousands of women leave their domestic duties taking with them their families, to engage actively in the sheds of the ranchers, cutting the fruit for drying, after the men have collected it from the trees.

Sometimes five hundred people will be engaged upon a large orchard. Rules and regulations are laid down for their conduct; the women and girls sleep in the tents provided at a low rental by the management, and either cook for themselves, or board with what would be termed in railroad circles a "boarding-boss;" the men, not so many, occupy tents in some other and distant part of the orchard. The sole requisite being the ability to pick and cut fruit, an aggregation of humanity representing all classes of society, from the impecunious English family with cultivated manners and aristocratic connections, to the nondescript, who travels from town to town in search of employment, is collected together in industrious activity for the revenue to be derived.

Each woman has a small tray in front of her, and, after cutting the fruit with a knife, she lays it open on the tray. Each tray is furnished with a raised end; when five are filled they are piled up, and the operator shouts "Tray!" whereupon an attendant approaches, punches a ticket with which she has been previously furnished, and takes the five trays to the sulphur house.

The women are paid ten cents a box, each box containing sixty pounds of fruit. All fruit has to be placed in the sulphur house for several hours, for the purpose of bleaching it, or causing it to retain its natural color, as well as to destroy all insect life that may remain, otherwise the sun would cause it to turn black. The trays are then carried out and placed upon the ground under the steady rays of the glorious California sun. Should clouds be hanging over, the trays are placed one above the other until that great purifier and drier of the universe, old Sol, makes his appearance.

The fruit requires from three to seven days to dry. At the end of this time men go out into the orchard with what are called "sweat-boxes," and scrape from the trays all the fruit into these boxes, in which it is left until fully dried. Finally it is hauled to the storehouses and piled up in heaps, perhaps ten feet high, awaiting the eye of the critical buyer.—Pearson's Magazine.

A Boer Girl's Wedding.

"A wedding is always an event of almost national importance and is really a most picturesque ceremony," writes the author of "Oom Paul's People," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "The friends and relatives may arrive a day or two ahead of time, according to the distance to be traveled, and the Boer homestead becomes a most animated scene. Scores of ox teams are scattered about the surrounding plain; negro servants are bustling around; guns are fired promiscuously whenever more guests arrive; dancing, feasting and coffee drinking are carried on in the cottage and everywhere around it; impromptu shooting matches and horse races are decided and joy is unconfined. After the ceremony, and after all the guests have kissed the bride and bridegroom, the wedding feast is eaten, and then the guests spend the night in dancing and playing games. It would be a breach of etiquette for any of the guests to depart before the dawn, and, indeed, the fiddler's music and the sound made by the dancing feet are often heard until noon of the following day. The wedding tour consists of a journey to the cottage and farm which the husband has secured from his father and which adjoins the old homestead.

Not for Money Hunters.

Cuba is an expensive place to live in; but the climate is ideal, and one cannot imagine a more delightful objective point for rich people who are running about the world for amusement. The hotels, of course, leave much to be desired, but they are greatly improved over what they were just after the war, and later on will be equal to our best hotels in this country. Apropos of the lack of comfort to be had in Havana, some of my friends who visited there last spring complained bitterly of the primitive style in which they were forced to live. There were no locks on the doors of their rooms, the mirrors were broken, marks of bullets disfigured the walls, and the table was not pleasant to a palate unaccustomed to Cuban cooking. Imagine their surprise, therefore, to receive a bill when they were about to leave calling for five dollars a day for each person in the party and containing charges for many extras. For that sum one could live at a first-class hotel in New York.

The Behemoth Was Not Fresh.

The waiter in a San Francisco grillroom will admit to nothing that he does not keep in stock. If it be a request for a slice off the moon he will say, "Yes, sir," and go to fetch it, returning with the information that unfortunately he is "just out." Robert Louis Stevenson one day was explaining this trait to a friend at dinner, and to illustrate it called the waiter. "A double order of broiled behemoth," he said. "Yes, sir," replied the waiter; "will you have it rare or well done?" "Well done," said Stevenson. Pretty soon the waiter returned. "I am very sorry, but we are just out," he reported. "What! no more behemoth?" asked the novelist, in feigned astonishment. The waiter lowered his voice. "We have some more, sir," he whispered confidently, "but the truth is, I would not bring it to you, as it is not quite fresh."—Kansas City Independent.

LIFE-SAVING HUMAN CHAIN.

Three Young Women Narrowly Escape Death by Drowning.

It takes a lot of pluck and a good amount of common sense to rescue three young women from death by drowning, but pluck and common sense were not wanting during a recent accident on Long Island. It was a matter of seconds only, at least so far as Miss Minnie Hiddink was concerned, and the others were nearer death than they are ever likely to be again and escape.

Patchogue mill pond, one of the largest on Long Island, was crowded with skaters. They had been warned to keep away from the east shore, where ice cutters had been at work. Agnes and Minnie Grundy and Minnie Hiddink neglected the warning. So long as they skated singly the ice was strong enough to bear their weight, but when they glided along three abreast, their arms interlocked, it gave way under them and they were plunged into the water.

Will Stillman realized conditions. He ordered the skaters to keep back, and almost in the same breath called for volunteers to form a human life line. Men and boys threw off their coats, threw themselves flat on the ice and grasped each other's heels. Stillman found he could not reach the young women and the ice was sinking under his weight. He called to George Homan, who is light and strong. The latter pulled himself along the chain until he was at the end.

THOSE BEHIND WHERE THE ICE WAS STRONG TUGGED WITH ALL THEIR MIGHT.

Agnes Grundy can swim, and fear had not paralyzed her mind. She not only kept afloat herself, but grasped her sister's hair and kept her above the water. She told Minnie Hiddink to hold on to the ice. But the wits had been frightened out of Miss Hiddink. She was unconscious before Homan could reach her. Twice she had gone down.

"Take out Minnie first," said Agnes Grundy. "We are all right for a little time."

Homan grasped Miss Hiddink's dress just as she was disappearing. Stillman called to Agnes Grundy to take hold of Miss Hiddink's dress.

"Haul away on the line," he shouted.

Then those behind, where the ice was strong, tugged with all their might. The human chain started backward. The strain on Homan was terrific, but he never let go, nor did anyone else.

When the ice grew firmer Agnes Grundy held on to it, still supporting her sister, while the line was drawn back with Miss Hiddink in Homan's arms. She was wrapped in blankets brought from a near-by house, and then the human line was pushed forward again for Minnie Grundy and then for Agnes.

BOUGHT AT PUBLIC EXPENSE.

Queer Things Senators Buy When Uncle Sam Foots the Bills.

It cost the country $1,374,011.96 to run the United States Senate for the year ending last July. This included, of course, the salaries of the Senators, the salaries of the clerks, messengers, private secretaries, Capitol police on the Senate side, mileage and other expenses, including the contingent fund. Secretary Cox of the Senate recently made his annual report, showing how this money was expended. Some interesting items appear. Each Senator is allowed a certain amount for stationery and newspapers. If he desires he may draw the allowance in cash. The Secretary's report shows that there has been a great falling off in reading among the Senators, for a large number preferred to take the cash. Ex-Senator Cannon of Utah stands first in this respect. He took $84.25 in cash from his allowance. Senator Hoar comes next, having received $70.32 in cash.

It costs $25,000 to report the Senate proceedings and over $8,000 went for the purchase of furniture, while $2,000 more was paid to repair it, and over $1,500 to clean it. It cost $5,000 to keep the Senate horses and wagons, and $10,397.90 for newspapers and stationery. During the year the Vice President's room was refitted in the most handsome style, the rug on the floor costing over $450, while the hall clock cost $600. The lace curtains cost $300 and the antique desk $325. The sofas and chairs cost $280. The most expensive thing in the room, however, is a silver inkstand, which cost $1,000, and the desk pad on which it stands cost $7. During the blizzard of February, 1898, it cost $25 to clean the snow off the Senate roof, and over $200 to carriages to send the Senators home during the storm.

Fuel cost $14,935.47 and ice averaged about $225 per month. The Senators seemed very fond of lemons, for during one week in June $176 was paid for thirty-two boxes of this fruit. Another item of interest is $137.64 for 2,510 pounds of sugar, while 116 cases of lithia water cost $725.28. It is explained that during the hot months the Senators drink lemonade instead of water. The report contains page after page of items for telegrams sent by Senators. The Senators seemed to be very fond of drugs, for thousands of quinine pills were bought at various times. Soda mint tablets, bromo-seltzer, cough drops, one drachm of attar of roses and one quart of castor oil are also noted. Formerly there was a big item for snuff, and a snuff box was kept in the Senate for the use of the older Senators. This year snuff seems to have been little used, for only one purchase on this account appears. Gross after gross of penknives and dozen after dozen of scissors and scrapbooks were also purchased for the use of the Senators.

MOTHER GOOSE—HER RHYMES.

Grave of the Author of Nursery Ditties Has Long Been Neglected.

A correspondent informs me that the tomb of John Newbery, in Waltham St. Lawrence churchyard, is likely to suffer the fate that overtakes all such monuments unless properly and regularly cared for.

I have not seen it since I visited the quaint and quiet little village in the summer of 1895, when I was collecting materials for a life of "the philanthropic publisher of St. Paul's Churchyard," immortalized by Goldsmith in his "Vicar of Wakefield," by Dr. Johnson in "The Idler," by Washington Irving in "Bracebridge Hall" and by many other writers who have recognized the influence of the first publisher who wrote, edited, compiled and published books for "all those little masters and misses who are good or who intend to be good."

We have traveled a long way since Newbery and Goldsmith co-operated on that famous list of books of which "Goody Two Shoes" and "Tommy Trip" may be taken as the best examples, but if it were only for the fact that Newbery was the first to give the "Rhymes and Jingles of Mother Goose" to the world in collected form his memory should ever be kept green by English-speaking children wherever they may be found.

Newbery's original collection of Mother Goose melodies has, moreover, an added interest, for there is every reason to believe that Goldsmith had a hand in the editing, annotating and arranging of the first edition.

Neither in London, at the scene of his labors, "over against the north door of St. Paul's cathedral," nor at the corner of St. Paul's churchyard, nor at Canonbury house, Islington, where he and Goldsmith lived and worked together, nor at his birthplace, Waltham St. Lawrence, is there anything of prominence to keep his name in remembrance.

A claim to have been the originator of the Mother Goose collection was made about thirty years ago on behalf of Mrs. Goose, or Vergoose, the mother-in-law of Thomas Fleet, a printer who flourished in Boston, U. S. A., during the eighteenth century. The absurdity of this contention was amply demonstrated by W. H. Whitmore, the present city registrar of Boston, in his preface to a facsimile of Newbery's edition, which he published in 1892; but ancient superstition and modern myths alike die hard, and there are thousands in America to-day who cling to the idea that Mother Goose was an American lady instead of a nom de plume borrowed by Newberry from Charles Perrault's "Contes de ma Mere l'Oye."—London Chronicle.

AFRICA IN THE NEXT CENTURY.

Dark Continent Is Undergoing a Wonderful Transformation.

The twentieth century Africa promises startling contrasts when compared with the Africa of the nineteenth century. With an area four times as great as that of the United States, a population of 150,000,000, a soil and climate capable of infinite variety of production, a rapidly expanding commerce, and the greatest known supplies of ivory, gold and diamonds, its development under the modern methods which are now being applied to it is practically assured. The home of the oldest civilization, it is the last of the continents to yield to the touch of the newest civilization. But yesterday enveloped in darkness of mystery without and ignorance within, it is to-day illuminated by the searchlight of modern methods, and as its importance and attractions are being recognized, with this recognition must come development.

With 2,000,000 Europeans scattered over its vast area, acquainting themselves with its natural conditions and requirements, with the steamer, the railroad, the telegraph and the telephone carrying light and knowledge and civilization to its darkest corner, Africa cannot long remain unknown or unknowing.

It was only after the explorers—Livingstone, Speke, Stanley and others—had discovered, through persistent and heroic efforts, that there existed vast navigable water ways above the falls near the mouths of the great streams which flow from the interior that European nations awoke to the physical and commercial possibilities of Africa, and then, in a twinkling, the dark continent was seized upon and divided up and became, as by magic, a vast European "hinterland." Between 1884 and 1898 an area two and a half times the size of the United States, and containing a population of 100,000,000, was parceled out by an agreement of the European powers. At present scarcely a foot of African territory remains unclaimed.—Forum.

GRIZZLY BEARS RUN SWIFTLY.

Can Cover the Ground About as Fast as Any Other Animal.

"Some people think that a grizzly can't run," said A. J. Daggs of Phoenix, Ari. "I want to state right now that, while the bear is a clumsy beast, he can cover as much ground as the average saddle horse, and a man should be sure that he has a good mount before he tries to get out of the way of one which is angry. My brother was out in the mountains of the territory, among the sheep ranches, one day, when he saw, about 250 yards ahead of him, a big, awkward silver tip. My brother had a rifle, but he was not certain that he would kill the bear if he shot, and he did not know how a race would turn out. He was mounted on one of the best horses in the country, for a man needed one in those days. He knew that the bear would not fight unless wounded or cornered and he thought he would like to see how he would run against his horse.

"He was pretty certain that the bear would run from him if he could once get him started in the oposite direction, and so he he gave a regular cowboy yell. The bear looked up and started shuffling off toward the mountain, about a mile and a half away. My brother spurred his horse and lit out after the grizzly, at the same time keeping up the piercing 'Yeep-yeep' of the cowboy. The bear soon got into the running, and the way he got over that ground was a caution. My brother saw that the brute was getting away from him and he urged his horse to the uttermost, but he did not gain ten yards in the whole mile and a half. That bear lumbered along with leaps equal to a grayhound and his pursuer did not have the chance to cut him out from his retreat.

"I went over the course the next day to verify the story, for it sounded fishy to me. I found that the bear had made jumps from fifteen to twenty feet in length and that the ground had been cut up by his claws so that it looked as if a harrow had been run over it. I would advise no man to try a footrace with a grizzly."—Washington Post.

Mark Twain on the Boer.

Mark Twain has met the Boer, and this is what he says of him:

"He is deeply religious; profoundly ignorant; dull, obstinate, bigoted; uncleanly in his habits; hospitable, honest in his dealings with the whites, a hard master to his black servant; lazy, a good shot, good horseman, addicted to the chase; a lover of political independence; a good husband and father; not fond of herding together in towns, but liking the seclusion and remoteness and solitude and empty vastness and silence of the veldt; a man of mighty appetite, and not delicate about what he appeases it with; well satisfied with pork, and Indian corn and biltong, requiring only that the quantity shall not be stinted; willing to ride a long journey to take a hand in a rude all-night dance interspersed with vigorous feeding and boisterous jollity, but ready to ride twice as far for a prayer meeting.

Desperation.

"Judge, your honor," said the prisoner, "before I enter my plea I'd like to ask a few questions."

"You have the court's permission."

"If I go to trial, will I have to sit here and listen while the lawyers ask hypothetical questions of the jurors?"

"Certainly."

"And then hear all the handwriting experts?"

"Of course."

"And follow the reasoning of the chemistry and insanity experts?"

"Very probably."

"Well, judge, your honor, I'm ready to enter my plea."

"What is it?"

"Guilty."—Washington Star.

Ireland's New Capital.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin, Daniel Tallon, is a pleasant speaker both at a banquet and on the rostrum. At Boston, where he was hospitably entertained by Mayor Quincy, some one asked: "Dublin is the metropolis as well as the capital of old Erin?"

"It used to be, but at present New York has that honor."—Philadelphia Post.

THEY LIKE THE COLD.

ANIMALS THAT HAIL WINTER WITH JOY.

Frost and Snow Have No Terrors for Many of the Furred and Also Some of the Feathered Denizens of the Woods and Cultivated Fields.

When the grip of Jack Frost tightens on the land, and turns the soppy garden beds and clayey plow lands to iron, tender hearts are sorry for the song birds whose delicate beaks cannot pierce the frozen soil. And many imagine that all wild creatures feel the bitter cold and suffer alike.

But this is a mistake. For many of the furred, and some even of the feathered, tribes the frost and snow have no terrors. The hawks grow fat in snow time. The kestral finds the snow a capital background against which to view the small fry he feeds on, while the sparrow hawk soars over the clumps of underbrush watching for the sparrows as they slip in and out of shelter. All the weasel tribe rejoice.

To none more than to the domestic pussy does the cold bring joy. It is her game season. Wild birds of many sorts, in the summer shy inhabitants of the woodlands, swarm into suburban gardens, and prove easier prey than the sparrow.

Dogs revel in the clear, bright days of frost. Even short-coated fox terriers never seem to feel the cold, but scamper madly over the stiff grass. And St. Bernards lose their summer sleepiness and roll delightedly in the powdery snow.

The short, dark winter days of Canada's great Northwest hold no terrors for at least one creature. This is the wolverine, an ugly, bear-like beast, hated and feared by all the trappers. Unseen himself, he follows the hunters and watches them as they set their traps, which they do in a long line extending sometimes as much as thirty miles through the dense evergreen forest. These he visits before the gray winter dawn has broken and takes away the bait, himself far too cunning to risk capture. Or, if the trap already holds a captive, mink or ermine, this, too, he tears away and devours at a safe distance. Many are the stories told of this, the greediest, most powerful and suspicious creature of its size known.

In the far north of the same vast solitudes the musk ox lives and flourishes all the year around. Fifty below zero does not matter to this quaint animal, with his immensely thick, furry coat. His sharp hoofs are suited to perfection for scraping away the deep snow and laying bare the thick lichen and moss below it. Nothing but warmth worries the little musk ox. Mere freezing point is to him a Turkish bath.

Another victim to warmth is the llama, yet it lives in latitudes which maps mark as tropical. It seeks a nice cold place high on the windy tablelands of the Andes, and there proves itself of great value to the natives. Water and food do not seem to worry the llama, which carries its burden easily where even mules pant with distress in the thin atmosphere of the giant mountains. The camel of the mountains, as the llama is called, small as he is, will carry a load of 100 pounds.

Dozens of different creatures happily doze the winter away—bats and bears, dormice and many others. One of the least known, and yet most interesting of these, is the hamster. This little brute is the most savage and unsociable creature known. Each in a separate hole far underground, the hamster alternately sleeps on a couch of dry grass, or wakes to stuff himself almost to bursting with the great store of corn and beans he has laid up in his winter larder. Winter is for him the season to rest and grow fat.

NEURALGIA.

Something About This Troublesome Disease.

Pain in a nerve may be due to many causes, such as inflammation of the nerve itself or of the parts around it, pressure by a tumor or swelling somewhere along the course of the nerve, disease at the point of origin of the nerve in the brain or spinal cord, and the like.

When no cause can be discovered for the pain it is called neuralgia; but the term is becoming more and more restricted in its aplication as medical science advances and new means of detecting disease in formerly inaccessible parts of the body are devised.

The pain is intermittent in character; that is to say, attacks of pain alternate with pain-free periods. The duration of the attacks, as well as of the intervals between them, varies from a few hours to days or even weeks.

Children do not, as a rule, suffer from neuralgia in any part of the body; they may have hearaches, it is true, but those are usually due to eye-strain or to some distinct nervous trouble.

The pain of neuralgia is usually very acute and cutting, and is constantly varying in intensity, now dying down for a time, so as to be scarcely noticeable, and again becoming almost unendurable, stabbing the poor sufferer with ferocious malignity.

The character of the pain serves to distinguish neuralgia from so-called muscular rheumatism, the pain of which is a steady dull ache rather than a sharp, boring and paroxysmal agony.

There is a curious form of neuralgia which is called "reminiscent." It occurs in persons, usually of a nervous type, who have suffered from nerve-pain due to inflammation, the pressure of a tumor, or some other removable cause, and in whom the pain persists after the cause has been removed. The nerve seems to have acquired a habit of hurting, which continues independently of the original cause.

The treatment of neuralgia is often most difficult and unsatisfactory, for if the cause cannot be determined the physician must work at random. The first step must be to relieve the pain during an attack, which is often possible only by means of powerful anodynes.

A neuralgic sufferer is usually below par physically, and, therefore, tonics, nourishing food and a change of air, when possible, almost always do good.—Youth's Companion.

TUNNEL UNDER IRISH CHANNEL.

Projectors of the Enterprise Are Ready to Begin Work.

The promoters of the project for connecting Ireland and Great Britain by a submarine tunnel say they have interested capitalists who will subscribe all the funds needed to dig the tunnel. They do not ask the Government to contribute a penny for the enterprise until the tunnel is completed and trains are running between the two islands. They ask, however, that after the completion of the work the Government guarantee the payment of 3 per cent. interest on the capital invested. A large number of members of Parliament are taking great interest in the enterprise, and last month they attended a meeting called for the purpose of hearing the views of leading mining engineers on the feasibility of the scheme.

The route has not actually been selected and the comparative advantages of three routes have been discussed. The most northern of these routes, marked A on this map, is considerably the shortest, but so long a detour would be required to carry the trains up the peninsula on the Scottish side and then down the coast that the route has met with small favor. The route marked B, between Magee Island in County Antrim and Port Patrick on the Scottish coast, is pronounced by the engineers to be thoroughly practicable. The length of the tunnel across this part of the north channel would be thirty-three and one-half miles, and the cost is estimated at $10,000,000. The tunnel would be by far the longest yet excavated, but engineers say that with the present improvements in methods and machinery for tunnel digging the project is perfectly feasible. They mention that when the digging of the St. Gothard tunnel was begun in 1872 the work advanced only 7.48 feet a day. Eight years later the work was advancing at the rate of 29.52 feet a day, and in 1883 the digging of the Arlberg tunnel was carried forward at the rate of over thirty-six feet a day.

The advocates of this route maintain that the tunnel will establish the shortest possible communication between Ireland on the one hand, and the whole of Scotland and North England on the other. The agricultural products of Ireland would be within easy reach of the many industrial cities of Scotland and North England, and practically all the passenger trade between North Ireland and these parts of Great Britain would pass through the tunnel. It is easy to see from the map that the tunnel would bring North Ireland nearer to Scotland, England and the continent than any other route. It is also asserted that if the tunnel is built and regular communication by rail thus established between England and Ireland some of the transatlantic steamship companies will undoubtedly make one of the west coast ports of Ireland the point of departure for its American service. By this means the duration of the voyage between America and Great Britain may be abridged by a day to a day and a half.

Most of the engineers favor this route, but a minority maintain that it would be preferable to dig the the tunnel between Ireland and England under St. George's Channel, along the line marked C on the map. They say that it is more important to connect the southern regions of Ireland and England by tunnel, that more people would be accommodated, and that the all-rail route between the Irish west coast and London would be much shorter and more attractive to the transatlantic passenger trade. On the whole, however, this route has not so many advocates as route B, which, there is little doubt, will be indicated in the legislation soon to be proposed in Parliament.

No Further Comments.

Commodore Vanderbilt was not so aristocratic in his tastes as some of his relations. On one occasion he was sitting on the crowded piazza of a fashionable hotel when a lady approached. The commodore rose and talked affably with her, while his wife and daughter raged. "Father," said the daughter, "don't you remember that vulgar woman as the one who used to sell poultry to us?" "Certainly, my dear," responded the old man heartily, "and I remember your mother when she sold root beer while I peddled oysters up in Jersey." The ladies made no further comments.—San Francisco Wave.

A Beggars' Trust.

According to the New York police most of the successful beggars in that city belong to a trust. The beggars' trust is said to own a large house in Brooklyn, which provides every description of beggars' supplies, including bogus wooden arms, legs, humpbacks, pitiful placards for alleged blind men and cripples, etc. The beggars pay the trust a certain percentage of their earnings, and the trust regulates the hours of their labor, selects the districts, furnishes a list of charitably disposed people and looks after members when ill.

His Instructions.

A cut rate ticket broker of Memphis tells an amusing incident which occurred at his office this morning.

"An old negro came into my place," said the scalper, "and said his wife was over in Arkansas and wanted to come home. She had written him once or twice, but as he had not the money to pay her way back he had not been able to send for her. 'She writ me ag'in today, boss,' explained the old engro, 'and she tole me if I didn't want her jess to say so. So I wants to git a scrapper's ticker fur her.'"—Memphis Scimitar.

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY....FEBRUARY 1, 1900.

Indiana Congressmen.

Representative Robinson, of Indiana, is a warm friend of rural free delivery. In the recent debate on the Urgency Deficiency Bill, he championed its cause, saying, in part: "Time will not permit me to elaborate its great benefit to the people served. It brings the farmer and his family, who for years have borne the principal burden of taxation, closer in touch with cities and city advantages, giving them newspapers early, and postal facilities to awaken and encourage them on, not to speak of the time saved for useful pursuits that heretofore has been spent in going distances after mail. This system encourages the building of good roads, always a proof of progress." Mr. Robinson also takes issue with the Commissioner of Pensions, in refusing pensions to children of soldiers who failed to apply for same while under 16 years of age, although entitled to do so.

Among public building bills introduced in the House is one for Richmond, Indiana, proposed by Representative Watson. It appropriated $150,000 for purchasing a site and erecting a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United states postoffice and other government offices.

Representative Zenor, of the same state, wishes congress to appropriate $60,000 for the purchase of a site of not less than 200 acres, situated within ten miles of the falls of the Ohio river and contiguous to the cities of New Albany, Jeffersonville, and Louisville, for the establishment of a training school for army recruits.

Senator Quay's Case.

The term in the Senate of Matt Quay of Pennsylvania expired the 4th of last March. The legislature got into a quarrel over the matter and failed to agree. When the session closed no man had beeen elected. So the governor appointed Mr. Quay and now he is trying to get his place in the senate on these terms. The constitution says "Each House shall judge the qualifications of its own members.". And in exercising this right the senate has always held, that where the legislature had the opportunity to elect a senator and for any reason failed to do so, and their legal session closed without a senator being elected, the governor could not make an appointment. And this his Quay's case exactly. It has been only a year or two since the same thing occurred in Oregon and the man appointed by the governor was refused his seat. But now Mr. Quay hopes to break this rule by the personal friendship of members. He has been in the past, so friendly and obliging that while many republicans and democrats think they ought to stick by the old rule, there are many in both parties who would like to have him in the senate again. For this reason he may get his place and break the rule, for it appears certain that many democratic senators are going to vote for him. Still it would be a bad precedent to establish. It is to be hoped that deadlocks like these will warn the people to prepare to elect senators by a popular vote. Then these struggles in the legislature and in the senate could not occur.

Patents to Indianians.

H. C. Clay, Columbus, compound engine; S. W. Collins, Indianapolis, rubber tire machine; W. H. Edwards, Hillsborough, thill-coupling; P. Hack, Michigan City, heating device for sleighs, etc; C. D. C. Huestis, Fort Wayne, bonus indicating machine; C. N. Hunter, Versailles, reversible ball-coupling.

A Grand Revival

Cook Bros'. grand revival of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" is a production which has everywhere proven a sensation unparalleled in the history of the drama. The sobs and tears of sympathy from auditors of all sexes and ages, who come to witness this truthful picture, are evidences of its wonderful dramatic power. Over 100,000 persons, heads of families, members of churches all interested in the great principles of temperance, have borne testimony to the life-like delineators of folly, misery, madness and crime, caused by the brutal, disgusting and demoralizing vice of drunkenness.

Club Notes.

The L. L. C. met with Mrs. Maude Robbins Saturday with a good attendance. The program was carried out as planned with the exception of the Parliamentary Drill by Mrs. Holmes. In Mrs. Holmes absence Mrs. Emanuel gave an interesting paper on "Trusts and Combinations of Capital." Mrs. Barns gave a few Glimpses in Other Countries." The club was then given a treat by Mrs. Robbins in the form of vocal music singing two very charming selections, this took Mrs. Mabel Hodge's place on the program. This was followed by a discussion," How to Simplify Housekeeping," led by Mrs. Mary F. Rose. The discussion following her excellent paper was full and free of practical suggestions. The club was pleased to receive a pleasant letter from Mrs. Lottie Cochran of Tucson, Arizona After Current Events the club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Schaab next Saturday as the guests of Mrs Schaab and and Mrs. Mollie Rose and remain to tea, an invation very heartily excepted.

ST. JOE.

L. S. Saylor of Ashley has been visiting with old friends for the past few days. He returned to Ashley Monday,

Mrs. Wm. Ridenbaugh, daughter of George Hamm, visited under the parental roof for several days.

Mrs. Clyde Woodcox who has been quite sick for ten days is now much better.

□ Mrs. Hattie Hart nee Dills, returned to her home in Hicksville last Thursday after a week's visit with her parents, J. W. Dills and wife.

Clyde Woodcox has returned to Garrett to take up his work again as conductor on local freight.

The Big Four store in its last issue advertises all kinds of yarn for sale. Well we guess that is no joke.

We hear it reported that one of our stores report the theft of one pair of shoes No. 5½ and one pair of cheap suspenders taken one night last week.

L. S. Saylor has sold his farm 26½ acres, to a Mr. Lochamer, the same man who now owns the B. A, Woodcox property.

Our latest reports (Sunday,) from our old friend Jacob Dermott is to the effect that he is still growing weaker and the friends fear for the worst.

It is said that the B. & O. people are surveying a new line of road from Mark Center to connect with the main line again at or near the Newville and Concord township lines. They do this in order to escape the heavy grade going west from Hicksville. Surveys have been made and it is said that work will commence at an early date.

Owing to the cold weather and the lack of proper fuel, the two upper rooms at the school house were too cold for school on Monday. Green elm wood is not the kind of wood for good fires, especially p elm.

The new handle factory is nearing completion as is going to be a big advantage to our little city and the surrounding country. Quite a large amount of timber is in the yards and more is coming every day. The managers expect to employ about thirty men in the mill and on the yard beside the men who will do the cutting and hauling of material. And then when the overall and shirt factory gets in operation, St. Joe will surely be on the boom. Well we say whoop her up. And then we hear that possibly there will be a bowling alley and who knows but what we might get a sidewalk to the depot.

SEDAN.

M. DeLong and family were the guests of W. H. Crane and wife last Sunday.

Hon. Aaron B. Jones of South Bend and Mr M. Lockhart of Waterloo were at Sedan last Saturday in the interest of the Grange. We understand they failed to effect an organization, but will meet on the evening of February 10.

Mr. Martin Casselman and wife visited their son, Will, at Kendallville last week.

The pretracted effort that is being held at this place for the salvation of sinners is meeting with grand success. Souls are being saved by the score and sinners are flocking home asking, "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" The church is being revived and built up and a spirit of good will seems to pervade the entire community. The meetings will continue this week at least.

Arthur Bateman and wife will go to housekeeping in Auburn this week. We are sorry to see them leave as they are among the best of our young people. We are glad that we can recommend them to the people of Auburn.

We have a great deal of complaint in this part of the county on account of the bridge across the tamarack swamp south of this place, or rather on account of the bridge that is not across the swamp, It seems that the commissioners have made a rather bad job of this bridge which has been detrimental not only to the people in this part of the county, but in Auburn also, as a good deal of trade has gone to Garrett that would have gone to Auburn had this bridge been passable. Not long ago one of these same commissioners made the remark that it took a man of brains to be a commissioner now We believe this and would like to see it tried.

Treasurer's Office Closed.

Owing to the death and burial of his child, Treasurer Hines will close his office Thursday, February 1. Public please take notice.

Court News.

Tuesday's Daily.

In the circuit court yesterday, in the case of Azam Foltz and Lavina R. Shoup vs William Foltz et. al. partition the commissioner filed his report of sale of real estate. The court ordered a division of the proceeds, and the case was continued for final report.

A change of venue was granted in the case of Inez Turner vs. Francis M. Hines and Jared Spooner, for damage on contract, and the case will be taken to the Steuben circuit court.

The divorce case of Julia Bice vs. Henry Bice was continued until the March term.

Quite a complicated case, or rather two cases, came up for trial before Judge Bratton yesterday. The first case was that of Cordill vs. Welsheimer et. al., to set aside deed and quiet title, and the second the Aetna Life Insurance Co. vs. Welsheimer et. al., to foreclose mortgage. The two cases which were brought here from Whitley county on change of venue, were consolidated, and since the matter was taken up yesterday afternoon there has been a flood of motions, demurrers, objections, and those other quibbles that are so frequent in such cases. About a dozen attorneys are interested in the case.

Since the above was put in type the case has been settled. Defendant Welsheimer gets the use of the farm for one year and $200, while Amanda L. Brown, a party defendant, gets a deed to the land and pays all costs.

A case was filed in court last week by Daniel M. Link and wife against Auditor Seiler and Treasurer Hines to restrain them from selling at tax sale the property now owned by the plaintiffs, which taxes were due from the former owner, E. P. Rehner. After hearing the evidence Judge Bratton rendered judgment for the plaintiffs.

To Cure La Grippe in 24 Hours.

No remedy equals Warner's White Wine of Tar Syrup for this terrible and fatal disease. If taken thoroughly and in time, it will cure a case in 24 hours, and for the cough that follows La Grippe it never fails to give relief. Price, 25c and 50c.

Hits the Newspapers.

Speaking of the recent marked advance in paper and its effects upon the publishers of newspapers, the South Bend Daily Times says:—"A few months ago the Times bought a car load of print paper, 34,624 pounds in weight, for which it paid $638.10 spot cash. To duplicate this at present prices the net cost will be $1,070.20, an increase of $431.54. There is no way of "making this up," the difference in prices come wholly out of the Times exchequer. Merchants are differently situated; they can raise the price, a newspaper can't—not very well. At present prices a newspaper like the Times ought to sell for three cents a single copy. That would in a measure compensate for the increased price of paper.

A Fine Production.

The production of Ten Nights in a Bar Room will be presented at Henry's opera house Friday, Feb. 2. It is on a scale of magnificence never before witnessed in this city. It has been many years since our people have been treated to a representation of this beautiful drama, in which actors worthy the name were employed and the resources of the scenic artist and mechanic are taxed to their utmost to make the setting of the piece equal to that used in the great spectacular plays. Cook Bros.' Company gives a most powerful and intelligent interpretation of this touching masterpiece of dramatic fiction. This is the first time that every scene has has been produced in this great play.

Soc Et Tu Um.

Half a dozen of our sporty young men are wiser today, but poorer than yesterday. This undesirable condition was caused by their arrest for gambling, to which they plead guilty and were fined, which with the regulation frills raised the expense to over $14 each. If this lesson is not enough and they "do it some more" we shall publish their names. And that would make them blush like the red, red rose.

The Century Question.

Sir Chinchen Loleugiuh writes from the Chinese Legation to the Morning Post a most lucid and admirable letter on the century question. He says: We may see an exact analogy to this if we look at the map of the world. There the equator is marked 0, while the degrees of latitude north and south of it are numbered 1 to 90 consecutively. But 0 is not a degree or even a minute, or even a second of arc; it is nothing but a line, i. e., length without breadth, separating northern latitude from southern latitude. Similarly in the Reaumur and Centigrade thermometers 0 is not a degree of heat or cold; it is only the line marking the freezing point and the division between frost and thaw on the plus and minus expressions of temperature. To put the case even more simply, the twentieth century naturally begins where the nineteenth century ends. This brings us up to the further question. When did the nineteenth century begin? And finally by working back we arrive at the query did the first century A. D. commence immediately on the conclusion of the first century B. C.? If so, there obviously never was a year 0, and if so the first, nineteenth and twentieth centuries all began or begin on the years 1, 1801 and 1901 A. D., respectively.

Goebel Shot.

Yesterday forenoon the Kentucky election trouble culminated in the shooting of Goebel, the democratic contestant for governor. He and two friends were walking across the yard of the state house, and had nearly reached the steps when a shot was fired by an unseen man in the third story of a building opposite. Several men rushed to the building, but were halted on the steps by armed strangers who seemed to fill the hall. So the man escaped. Goebel was shot through the lungs, and will probably die. In the excitement, the committee to whom was given the decision on the election hurried up and decided in favor of Goebel. Should he die, they will try to seat the candidate for lieutenant-governor. But the republicans say they will carry it into the supreme court. There is great excitement and more trouble is feared.

What May Happen.

The following is an ingenious and original composition read at the high school rhetorical exercises last Friday afternoon by Miss Aileen Garwood:

THE LATEST SCIENTIFIC INVENTION.

Tom awoke with a start on the morning of December 12, 2050, and heard bells ringing, cannons booming and people shouting. "Well," said he, "What can be the matter, they must have found out that we won in the airship race with England yesterday." Just then his clock (he had one of the latest kind,) said "Tom get up, it is 7:30." Tom had gone to Rome and back the day before, to try his new airship and so he was rather tired. He dressed quickly and hastened down stairs, and he was rather surprised to find no one there and what was more, that while it had been 7:30 when he awoke, it was only 7 now. "Well," he thought, "What can be the matter, the clock must have stopped," and he got up on a chair to look but found that it was going all right. Then he thought that maybe the noise he had heard on awaking might have something to do with it, so he adjusted his "wing," just received from the Mercury Mfg. Co., and flew down town. There was a large crowd about the city hall and a man who was speaking from the steps seemed to be creating a great deal of excitement.

"Yes," he was saying as Tom came up, "I will repeat my statement. This glorious wonder is true. Professor Achimedes Snooks with the help of the town board has just succeeded in making the earth revolve in an opposite direction.

Just think. My heavens! you will grow young instead of old."

Here a great shout arose from the crowd and all seemed to be happy, except, perhaps a few boys and girls.

"Oh dear" thought Tom, "how funny. Well, I haven't any time to think it over now for it is nearly time for school."

As he was hurrying on he met one of his friends and told him to wait and he would go to school with him. "School," said he, "You are a little off I guess. Don't you know its pretty near supper time."

"Supper time," said Tom, "Why I just got up."

"Well, don't you know that everything goes backwards now; we get up at night and go to bed in the morning."

"Well I suppose I will soon get used to it," said Tom, "but to change the subject, what do you want for Christmas?"

"Aren't you thinking about Christmas pretty far ahead Tom," said Fred.

"I don't know. why? It is only about two weeks off"

"Why," said Fred, "you must remember that things are going backwards, and Christmas wont be until a year ago. Well, come over and play ball before supper."

So Tom started for home and got there just as his people were beginning to eat. First they had the desert, then meat and potatoes, and finally the father said the blessing and the meal was over. He then went out doors to play foot ball with the other boys but it was rather hard work for they played the game from finish to start. But the game was not as rough as it was formally for instead of falling down they fell up, and of course it did not hurt. Before dinner he started to school and after the closing exercises the teacher called on him to recite on the next day's lesson.

"Why Miss Jones I don't know that, I havn't studied it" said Tom.

"Oh well," said the teacher, "you will study it after you recite."

After the opening exercises Tom went home, ate his breakfast and went to bed. He liked it very much next morning, when his parents and elder brother had to get up before light while he staid in bed until the last.

The evening paper lay on the table and Tom was surprised to see that it told what would happen upon the next day. He then heard his father talking to a friend and saying, "I suppose you will soon enter college; first you will take your diploma and if you are a poor enough student you will enter the high school in four years."

Tom met Fred on his way to school and they naturally began to discuss the recent invention.

"What do you think of it," said Tom.

"Oh its all right now, but I think it will get rather disagreeable. You see we are fifteen now, next year we'll be fourteen and so on, pretty soon we'll have to wear dresses and curls and play with blocks and all that sort of thing and at last we will be little babies in long dresses and then—well I don't know what will become of us."

Both boys groaned at this dismal prospect.

"But," continued Fred, "you ought to hear my grandfather talk. You see, he is so old that he will have a long time to live yet, and he talks about the usefulness of this new invention and tells us not to do anything that will bring his childish curls in sorrow to the grave."

So both boys decided that while the new invention was undeniably grand for the old people, that it was very inconvenient, to say the least, for the young. But as we know, the combined forces of gravity, cohesion, equilibrium and electricity proved too great for the motors of Mr. Snooks and in about a year, with a great jerk, the earth began revolving from west to east once more and now old men men tell their grandchildren of the time when clock-hands went from right to left, when people fell up instead of down and grew younger every day.

COPYRIGHT, 1899, BY PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION CO.

BUFFALO, N. Y., January 29, 1900.

The northern part of the exhibition ground is occupied by a square about 500 feet from east to west and 350 feet from north to south. The buildings bounding three sides of this square and the arrangement of the square itself have been given to Messrs. Babb, Cook and Willard of New York, and the style adopted—a very free version of Spanish architecture—has suggested the name of the Plaza, which has been given it. The central portion of this square is occupied by a terrace only very slightly raised above the surface of the square, and surrounding a sunken garden, in the middle of which is a bandstand. The terrace as well as the garden itself will afford a large space for listeners who attend the concerts which it is proposed to give.

Outside, and at the north of the Plaza, is the railway and trolley station, from which it is supposed the greater number of visitors will enter the exhibition grounds. The railway station itself is masked by a colonnade flanked at either end by two colossal arches, one for those entering the Exposition and the other for those leaving it. This colonnade bounds the Plaza on the north. It is surrounded by a trellis, which it is proposed to cover with vines of various sorts. The west side of the Plaza is bounded by a building, which is to serve as a large restaurant. The public pass through the lower arches of the building, which are open, in order to reach that portion of the Exposition which corresponds with the Midway Plaisance at Chicago. The restaurant building itself is two stories high, and is abont 350 feet long.

On the east side of the Plaza is a building closely resembling the restaurant, which serves principally as the entrance to the Stadium or athletic field. The total length of the Stadium, including the building which forms the entrance, is about 870 feet, and the breadth about 500 feet.

Call for Township.

The Democratic People's Party and Silver Republican voters in the several townships of DeKalb county, Indiana, and all who expect to act during the ensuing campaign, in opposition to the policy of the present administration, are requested to meet at the usual places in their respective townships, on Saturday, the 10th day of February, 1900, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and select in each precinct, a member of the democratic county committee of DeKalb county, to act during the campaign of 1900, and the members of such committee, so selected, are requested to meet in the town of Auburn, on Wednesday, the 14th day of February, 1900, at one o'clock p. m., to elect a chairman, vice chairman, secretary and treasurer of such committee.

We suggest that it is highly important that a thorough organization be promptly effected in each precinct, and that no man ought to accept the position of precinct committeeman, who has not the time to devote to this work of such vital importance in the pending campaign, and that the committeeman, upon his acceptance of such a position, should feel that he stands pledged to fully and heartily co-operate with the county committee in all of its efforts to secure a perfect organization and so far as DeKalb county is concerned, a correct solution of the great questions which are now engaging the attention of the American voters.

The Aged Minister.

If this work be in a city church it is a grave question whether any minister can now discharge it with efficiency who is much above 50 years of age. The multitude of details in a city parish, the excitement of the life, the severe demand upon the mind and the heavy burden of responsibility call for a man in the prime of life, with an alert intellect and an unfailing body. —Ian Maclaren, in Ladies' Home Journal.

News Item

The Chicago & Northwestern Railway, in connection with the D. S. S. & A. R'y, will put in a new schedule to "The Copper Country" of Northern Michigan next Sunday, January, 21, whereby the service between Chicago and Calumet and Marquette, Mich., will be greatly improved.

The through drawing-room sleeping car to Calumet, which has been leaving Chicago at 10:30 p. m., arriving Calumet 1 o'clock the next afternoon, will leave Chicago at 8:00 p. m., daily, arriving Calumet 11:50 the next forenoon, with dining car, serving breakfast "a la carte."

Marquette will be reached at 8:00 o'clock, instead of 10:40 a. m. The south-bound schedule will be correspondingly shortened. It will be noted that this arrangement affords the earliest arrival in "The Copper Country" and Marquette via any line.

—At the Lutheran church yesterday there were present at Sunday School over 200 and the collection was $32.37. Last evening there were eight who came forward and fifteen accessions to the church. The total collections for the day were $47 15. At the C. E. evening meeting there were present thirty six active members. Services again tonight at 7:30. All invited —Goshen Democrat:—When Rev. Father Simon Yenn first came to Goshen to take charge of St John's Catholic church, the first wedding he officiated at was that of Miss Margie Bebler and E. P. Fitzgerald of Garrett. Strangely enough Rev. Yenn has now received notice of his transfer to Arcola and the last funeral sermon he preached in Goshen was that of Mrs. Fitzgerald.

Tuesday's Daily.

—The present term of court ends this week, and next Monday the February term opens at Angola.

—Recital by Marie Hebel and others at the Evangelical Reformed church Friday evening, Feb. 9.

—George Lanning is reported better this afternoon and his physician is hopeful of his early recovery.

—Pensioners should remember to execute their pension vouchers on the 6th of February, not on the 4th.

—Go to Sheffer & Chaney for Michigan Lake Salt, a car load just received. Guaranteed not to get hard in the barrel. oct 26w-tf

—Hon. T. R. Marshal and wife of Columbia City and Miss Finch of Angola were in the city a few hours yesterday.

—Ask your grocer for Russ' Bleaching Blue, do not be deceived by fraudulent imitations, see that the name Russ appears on all packages. 8

—LADIES:—Go to Mrs. M. E. Case, Auburn, for hair work, done at all prices, ranging as low as 75 cents a switch. Residence, Eosley Ave. tf

—See the "Greek Mirth Costume drill" at the armory Saturday evening, February 3. It alone is worth the price of admission which will only be ten cents.

—The transport Thomas has arrived at San Francisco with the remains of Gen. Lawton and Major John A. Logan. The funeral train will leave for the east tomorrow and will probably reach Fort Wayne Monday.

—Fort Wayne Sentinel:—Attorney Rose, of Auburn, was in the city today attending court. He is one of the attorneys in the case of Charles E. Moorman vs. Almeda Bevier, brought to Allen county on a change of venue.

—A. J. You of Fort Wayne, once republican candidate for congress, has been given a place as immigrant inspector at the port of New York, taking the place of Amos R. Walter, who declined the appointment.

—J. A. Lambert of Rachel, N. C. writes: "I heartily endorse Foley's Kidney Cure. It does what you claim it will do, and there is nothing equal to it and I thank you for the good it has done me" H. B. MCCORD.

—Mrs. Walsworth is very much better, or was, though it may not be permanent. Her daughter, Mrs. Boyer, has returned to her own home. She, also, is improving steadily and we hope her cure will be permanent.

—The Lake Shore detectives along the Air Line division arrest tramps for violating the train jumping law and after the hobos are convicted they are sent to jail to board at the expense of the county. Great scheme—for the railroad company.

—Five couples have been licensed to wed since our last report. They are: Arch A. Evans and Myrtle A. Snodgrass; Clyde Eugene Hart and Gladys Gertrude Baltz; Francis E. Bradley and Lydia M. Harvey; Jacob L. Ginder and Myrta S. Rhoads; Jesse Curry and Catharine Jane Miller.

—Prof. M. H. Kasper, Evangelical Lutheran Seminary, Addison, Ill., writes:—I had been suffering for some time with severe pains in my lungs, and coughed almost constantly. One bottle Begg's' Cherry Syrup entirely cured me." It is guaranteed to cure, has never failed.—H. B. MCCORD.

—Dr. Yarian, formerly in partnership with Dr. Hines in this city has located at Garrett where he will continue in the practice of his profession. The Doctor though a young man has made many friends in Auburn and impressed our people with his ability as a physician. We hope he will succeed in his new location.

—Mrs. Mike Lumm and Miss Staudacher of Columbia City were callers Saturday, and we have to thank the former for a generous lift on the COURIER. Mr. Lumm has been a resident of Columbia City since he was promoted to be trackmaster of the Wabash and they have learned to like their new home. Miss Staudacher is a sister of Joseph Staudacher, both former Auburnites.

—Mentone Gazette:—B. F. Wilson of Holmesville, O., visited his brother, J. A. Wilson, west of town last week. Mr. Wilson is a director and holds a large number of shares in a manufacturing establishment at Little Rock, Ark., which is operated by A. C. Wilson, formerly of the church furniture factory at Auburn, Ind. He has been attending a January meeting of the stock-holders some of whom are capitalists of Chicago.

—Since the Transvaal war has created an extraordinary demand for mules, a good many farmers and breeders in various parts of the country have decided to take up the business of mule raising. This may be a wise move on their part, and if the war should be prolonged for several years, it doubtless would prove to be so, but otherwise many of them may be doomed to disappointment Without a continued foreign demand, prices may not be kept up and in that event the profits anticapated would not be realized.

QUEEREST OF FOSSILS

Jaw of Some Huge Animal Found in New Mexico.

The fossil remains of a strange prehistoric animal were discovered at postmaster Nusbaum's ranch, at Tesuque. Alphonso Dockweiler, who has charge of digging a ditch through a ridge on the ranch, picked up a piece of petrified bone the shape of a large tongue, but with a row of 12 teeth along what seemed to be the tip of the tongue. He dug a little further and found the remainder of what seemed to be the jaw of an animal that was part ichthyosaurus and part plesiosaurus, with part of the characteristics of the pterodactyl perhaps. The jaw consisted of about 20 layers of bone in the shape of a tongue, and each layer was armed with a dozen teeth, which showed that the animal was herbivorous and not carnivorous. These 20 layers were evidently the upper jaw of the animal. Mr. Dockweiler expects to find the lower jaw and perhaps all of the remains of the strange animal. As much as he has found he will bring to this city, and from here ship it to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. Two layers of the jaw were brought to the city by J. G. Schumann and shown to friends, who were all puzzled by their unusual shape. It is well known that the surroundings of Santa Fe abound with submarine fossil remains, which seem to prove that in long-gone-by ages the site of the city was covered by a sea. Only half a mile up the arroyo and canyon that branch off Palace avenue, near the old brewery, pretty petrified seashells are to be found. At many other places there are unmistakable signs of the erosion of waves and the footprints of gigantic animals that probably made their home both in the water and on the land when the highest peak of the Rocky mountain range were only islands in a vast ocean.—Santa Fe New American.

PRISON BABIES.

Create a Flutter of Excitement in Their Gloomy Birthplace.

Very few people outside official circles know what a large number of babies are born every year in the infirmaries of prisons and penitentiaries, the little people always causing quite a flutter of attentiveness and excitement among female warders and prisoners alike. Of course there is a vast difference in prisoners, and sometimes the person least attentive to the prison baby is the mother herself; but, on the other hand, the general body of the women prisoners make the most pathetic efforts, by means of all manner of trifling scraps and odds and ends, to fabricate articles of wear and ornament for the out-of-place little stranger. Quite three-fourths of the women volunteer to tend it, and it is often the case that the most refractory and difficult of the prisoners soften and greatly alter by being allowed to do little things for it; indeed, it acts throughout like a veritable ray of sunshine among the whole of the poor prisoners, who generally manage to get themselves into great good humor by suggesting as volubly as the prison rules will permit fantastic names for the child. Within a certain period of their birth these children are taken away from the mother and are tended elsewhere with the utmost care and humanity.

Where Quinine Is Good.

Dr. Crosse in an article in the "Lancet" on blackwater fever incidentally calls attention to the fact that it is not wise for those who have an idiosyncrasy against quinine or who suffer from even slight albuminuria to go to malarious climates. He believes that in the more malarious districts at least five grains of quinine should be taken a day to prevent chronic malarial poisoning. This he considers necessary in addition to ordinary precautions in regard to exposure to chills, wet and the sun, and as to moderation in eating and drinking.

A GREAT NEWSPAPER.

It has always been claimed for The Chicago Tribune that it would, in all probability, pass with the highest average in any competitive examination among the newspapers of the United States for excellence in all departments of journalism.

"Under date of May 2, 1899, the Omaha World-Herald, editorially answering a letter from 'Inquirer' asking the names of the five best newspapers in this country, points out that a newspaper may excel in one way and be inferior in another. The World-Herald gives lists under five general headings of leading American newspapers distinguished especially for excellence, mentioning in all some twenty.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE HEADINGS:

"(1) Most and best news, foreign and domestic, presented attractively.
"(2) Best possible presentation of news briefly.
"(3) Typographical appearance.
"(4) Classification of news by departments.
"(5) Editorials.

"The Chicago Tribune is the only newspaper in the United States which the World-Herald considers worthy of mention under four different heads."—From the October Plain Talk.

Practically all high-class intelligent newspaper readers, comprising the best and middle classes in Chicago and vicinity, read The Chicago Tribune. A great majority of them read no other morning newspaper.

WIZARD WITH FIGURES.

ARTHUR E. GRIFFITH, STAR MATHEMATICAL PRODIGY OF THE AGE.

Nineteen-Year-Old Boy Surprises Yale Scientists—Juggles With Any Figures—Has the Power of 2 and 5 up to the 33d Power.

Just south of Milford, Ind., lives John Griffith, his wife and six children—a plain Kosciusko County family, whose head has a hard time to make both ends meet. He is a farmer in the planting and reaping seasons and a stonemason the rest of the year. Yet this plain countryman is the father of Arthur E. Griffith, the greatest mathematical wonder of modern times.

This is the boy who made such a remarkable impression before the American Scientists' Society, which met in New Haven recently. He is the one who mystified the savants of Yale who tried to mystify him with their powers and roots and cubes and squares, and who did in a moment in his mind what took them hours on paper.

Arthur is nineteen years old. He was born on the farm where his father and family now live. At the age of six he went to school just as all the boys of his locality do. But impaired health forced him soon to stop schooling. Already his wonderful mathematical powers were apparent.

At the age of five the boy could count to 25,000 without any help whatever. He learned it by watching the revolutions of a buzz-saw in a mill near his home, and counting them as they ploughed through the thick walnut logs that were brought there to be made into planking. One day he counted 6,000 revolutions before he stopped.

FAILED IN OTHER STUDIES.

Next he aimed at counting 50,000 without stopping, and he tried with the corn he fed to the chickens on his father's farm. The corn grains gave out when he had counted 45,601 of them. Yet with his fast increasing knowledge of arithmetic and numbers he failed woefully in grammar, history and geography.

"They're all too slow," was his constant complaint.

But day after day his power over numbers grew wonderfully. He found out for himself and committed to memory all the prime and composite numbers up to 2,000—a wonderful task. He learned the squares and cubes of all numbers up to 1,500 and the fourth powers up to 20. He knows the multiplication table as fast as he can say it up to 130, and says he will have it to 1,000 in a few months.

Prof. E. W. Lindley, of the Indiana University, was in Milford last summer and met Arthur. He was at once impressed with the youth's powers, and last September took him to the university at Bloomington. There some psychological experiments were made which showed conclusively that the boy was a wonder. He could solve problems in about a tenth of the operations that it required the ordinary person. For instance he did one problem that took 336 separate operations on paper in his head in thirteen operations.

At a hotel in Bloomington recently the guests began to quiz the plain country boy.

"What is 963 times 108?" asked a Chicago drummer, suddenly. "104,004," replied Arthur without a moment's delay.

TOLD DAY OF A MAN'S BIRTH.

Aftter the drummer had figured he founnd that the boy was correct. Questioned as to how he did it so quickly, Arthur refused to tell, admitting, however, that he used processes for calculating rapidly which he himself had discovered. Unlike most mathematical wonders, he made no claim to any special gifts from heaven or any hypnotic powers. As a sample of how he works out his problems by wondrous methods of his own he asked a young man present when he was born.

"July 30, 1880," he replied.

"That was Friday," said young Griffith without hesitation.

Asked how he did it, he said:

"The ratio of July is 2. A quarter of 30 is 20, and, added to 80, is 100; then, add the date gives 130. The ratio of the month added makes 132, and divided by 7 gives a remainder of 6, and, beginning with Sunday. Friday is the sixth day. You were born on Friday."

When asked why the 20 and why July's ratio was 2 he replied, "No matter." That is one of his new rules for rapid calculation.

The boy can repeat the powers of 5 up to the thirty-third, and when one of the drummers doubted it Arthur said: "It is 116,415,321,826,934,814,453,125."

UP INTO BIG FIGURES.

The thirty-third power of 2 he knows in the same way. Asked to multiply the two together he said, almost without hesitation, one decillion, a number too big for any one present to grasp.

"I can do addition, subtraction, multiplication and division in forty-four different ways," said Arthur, "and I can extract the cube root of nine place numbers and the square root of six place numbers in four seconds."

"What is the cube root of 1,367,631?" he was asked.

"Why," responded the boy, "that is 111."

Strangely enough none of the boy's brothers and sisters possess his remarkable faculty. He has a fine head and face and is now in good health. He does not care for games or sports. But he is an untiring worker, and works from sunrise to sunset on the farm with his father. His one ambition is to turn his mathematical ability to some practical account and earn a salary which will make him able to help his father support the family.

Some of Griffith's feats surpass all records. He has evolved fifty methods for multiplication, and for addition, six for division and one new one for subtraction. He has developed new rules and found many short cuts for cube root, and for the more difficult propositions.

He has reached far out beyond the books he has been studying, and has sought to form new associations of numbers and to find combinations and new relations. He has met with wonderful success. Many of the methods which he has worked out have been known previously to professors of mathematics, but they were new to him.

He did not believe they existed and demanded proofs. He has found some new secrets, and is beginning to reach beyond the established limitations of mathematics and associate numbers in a manner never before heard of.

TELEPHONES OVER WIRE FENCE.

Indiana Inventor Connects Cities at Small Expense.

A telephone system was opened at Anderson, Ind., recently that is one of the most unique and interesting things of the kind in the country. It is a long distance line, and the wire is the upper strand of barbed-wire fences reaching from Anderson to Ingalls, a distance of twelve miles. It is the idea of an eccentric inventor of Pendleton, Cassius Alley, and he has already begun to reap his little harvest. There are two long-distance lines of the big companies between the two points, but Alley, with his barbed-wire affair, has entered the lists and proposes to get business by giving cheaper rates.

The Big Four has a barbed-wire fence most of the distance along its right of way from here to Ingalls. Alley has taken the upper strand of wire for his unique telephone. Three miles from Anderson the line leaves the railway line and cuts along farm fences. Where a road is crossed an overhead or underground wire is strung. Crossing streams there are overhead connections. The boxes are such as are used by the big telephone companies.

There are two charter subscribers. A firm has an office at Anderson and a factory at Ingalls, and has them connected. Another firm has a store at Anderson and one at Pendleton and has them connected. The lines work splendidly. Alley gets $50 a year from each firm. Other places will be connected, and in a short time all six wires on the fences will be in service. It is then the intenton to connect a line from Pendleton to Greenfield, and if Alley can do it he will soon have in service every wire fence in the county. He looks forward to a big business in the way of rural telephone service.

When the line strikes cities or towns the fence wire gives way to ordinary wire that is strung along trolley-line poles. Over roads and streams connections were made overhead or by underground conduits. The expense has been but a trifle.

In some places the barbed wire has been insulated with a coating of rubber paint. Most places, however, small boys will have to keep off, or get a shock every time the bell rings. Hunters, too, will have to look out. The service is practical and first-class in every respect.

"JACK THE CUTTER."

A Remarkable Type of the Class Known as Human Degenerates.

The medical fraternity of Washington has a puzzling problem before it in the behavior of Max Krebs, a young German who has confessed that he is the "Jack the Cutter" who has been slashing women's dresses in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other cities during the last two years. His confession was made to Dr. Shellhausen, a scientist of Washington, who has given much attention to the psychology of criminals, and he regards Krebs as a remarkable type of that class of human beings known as "degenerates." From a medical standpoint his mind is diseased; from a police standpoint he is a mischievous criminal; but so far as can be learned from his own confession and from a thorough inquiry into his record Krebs has never been guilty of any offense but the destruction of clothing. He declares that he suffers from an irresistible tendency to injure and destroy fine dresses and other garments and has gratified this unnatural perversity four or five times every day for months. He has carried a sharp knife in his pocket and has done his work in street cars, crowded retail stores, in the lobbies of theaters while the audiences were leaving and at other places where well-dressed women are to be found crowded together. With his knife in his hand he says he would pass through such crowds and slash cloaks and dresses on either side as often as he could do so without detection. It was usually necessary for him to destroy three or four before his unnatural passion was satisfied, then he would feel a dizziness, followed by a violent headache, on every occasion.

The doctors believe that Krebs is telling the truth and that he is afflicted with a destructive mania which should send him to an insane asylum rather than a prison. He has done a great deal of mischief in this city as well as in the other cities named. Every day for months before his arrest complaints were made to the police, and it was noticed that no cutting was done in other cities while such complaints were made in Washington. It was therefore concluded that the work was being done by one man who went from place to place, and since the arrest of Krebs there have been no cases reported.

Opening Pens to the World.

The collection of India rubber from the forests near the branches of the River Amazon is increasing and promises further development in the near future. In 1898 the total exportation of this product was 1,525 tons. Probably more than this amount was sent abroad, but a certain portion is despatched through Brazilian ports, and accurate details are not obtainable. The Peruvian town of Iquitos, situated on the headwaters of the Amazon and in direct communication with the outside world, is the centre of the rubber industry of Peru. A road has recently been constructed from the terminus of the Oroya railway to Puerto Bermudez, on the Pichis River, and thence a service of steam launches has been established to Iquitos. This enterprise has brought Iquitos within twenty days of the Peruvian capital and made the rubber districts very much more accessible than formerly.

ANNUAL SNOW FIGHT

ENGAGES ATTENTION OF ROCKY MOUNTAIN RAILROADS.

Days of the "Bucker" Are Past, and the Rotary Cuts Its Way Where No Power at Command Could Push Through—Danger of the Old Method.

Thirty-two miles of snowsheds costing $64 a foot, or a total of $10,813,440, represents the price one transcontinental railway had to pay before it could run its trains over the Rocky Mountain division of its road. That was merely the first cost; since that outlay fully $1,000,000 has been spent annually in keeping the sheds in repair and the exposed tracks free from snow. During the summer months when even in the higher passes the sun and warm winds serve to keep the permanent way clear and free there is little to do save the ordinary run of repairs and reconstruction, but along about Oct. 1 all this is changed.

Little flurries of snow on the level and a gradual but continuous spreading of white on the tops and in the upper crevices of the mountains give warning that the hard, desperate battles of the winter months are at hand. The superintendent takes a trip over the road with his assistants and a careful inspection of the sheds and tunnels is made. In divisional headquarters the rotaries and the old-time "buckers" are overhauled and prepared for use, and as the middle of the month approaches the watchmen who patrol the tracks are doubled. In the various baggage cars are placed great wooden safes packed with condensed foods. Beef in the form of extract, canned soups, condiments and hard bread, enough to feed 100 persons ten days, are carefully deposited in these moving storehouses, and from then until the coming of spring they are inspected and overhauled once each week by men detailed for the purpose.

Within twelve hours, if the fall of snow is continuous, the plows go out. Each is accompanied by a gang of shovelers, and a straight drive is made for those passes and cuts where experience has foretold the greatest depth. If the snow is moist and flaky, quick work is made of the banks; but if cold weather has really set in and the snow has been frozen into rounded granules, the proposition is entirely different. In the first case the damp masses remain where they have been thrown by the plow, but under the latter conditions it is impossible without the most strenuous efforts to keep the glistening, frozen pellets from sliding back onto the tracks. Cases have been known when a comparatively light fall of snow has blocked a mountain track for forty-eight hours.

In the old days when the rotaries were weapons of the future and the snow had to be literally "bucked" by main force from the tracks, casualties were numerous. The type of plow used was a home-made affair—a product of the railroad shops. It consisted of a re-enforced and strongly braced boxcar as a base, upon one end of which was built an iron-tipped plow shaped something like a lofty cowcatcher. Near the top the sides were so arranged that the snow masses were directed into the air at an angle.

When a particularly heavy and tightly packed drift was to be tackled it was the custom to place one of the crude affairs in front of from six to ten engines and charge the drift with a flying start of a mile or two. If the drift consisted of granulated snow frozen into separate particles, the enormous mass of iron went through it like a heated knife through butter. In the wake of the plow came an army of shovelers, whose duty it was to bank the scattered masses far enough from the track to prevent them sliding back. This was difficult enough and victory came only after herculean labor.

Sometimes it happened that the drift in the cut was composed of damp snow and had had time to settle and become packed. Then the perils of snow-bucking became perils in truth.

The "bucker" with its powerful motive force of seven or eight locomotives was buried bodily at the drift and one of two results followed. Either the drift was broken or the "bucker" crumpled up like a toy of cardboard. The fate of the crew of several men depended on what Artemus Ward called "their nat'ral born luck." Stories are still told of the catastrophes occurring during one hard winter many years ago; of how in one instance a "bucker," three engines and fourteen men were buried in a mass of snow for ninety hours, and that when the rescuing party finally reached them the imprisoned men were found encased at their posts like the baker of Pompeii.

To-day there are no such harrowing tragedies. The invention of the rotary plow has made the clearing away of obstructions a comparatively easy task. In appearance the rotary plow is like a huge box car strengthened with heavy iron girders and plates. The front end is square and open, and within can be seen a great steel-winged wheel somewhat similar to the ordinary windmill. The edges of the opening slope inward and are strongly re-enforced with iron. The "auger" or wheel revolves upon an axle, and as the plow is forced against the drift the snow is eaten away and blown through funnels pitched at an angle above the machine.

It is seldom that more than two engines are required to push the rotary, as it works by cutting instead of brute force, like the old-time "bucker." Railroad men are great admirers of the new order of machine, and they never fail to praise its efficiency.

A SNOW CUT AND SNOW SHED.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH OF PAPER.

Latest Thing Devised by the Ingenuity of Modern Dentists.

Paper teeth are the latest thing in dentistry. For years some substance has been sought for which could replace the composition commonly employed for making teeth and a fortune awaited the man who was lucky enough to hit upon the right material. Although paper has some disadvantages, says Pearson's Weekly, they are small compared to its many qualifications and paper teeth are likely to be used exclusively—at least until a more perfect material is found.

Up to this time china has been used almost exclusively, but it presents so many disadvantages that dentists always have been on the lookout for some better substance which could replace it. Not only does china not resist the action of saliva and turn black but china affects the nerves of the jaws.

People who wear false teeth often complain of suborbital neuralgia, and this is put down by many dentists as being caused by heat or cold acting on the china or porcelain. Porcelain of mineral composition also is liable to chip or break, and for these reasons has never been satisfactory.

The paper teeth are made of papier mache, which is submitted to a tremendous pressure until it is as hard as required. Their peculiar composition renders them cheap, and the price of a set of teeth will go down considerably, owing to the new invention.

The color of the papier mache can also be made to vary, which is an important point, as no two sets of teeth are identical in color, some teeth having a strong yellowish cast, while others are bluish white. In order, therefore, to obtain the right tint the coloring matter has only to be introduced into the mixture before the tooth is cast in order to match the other teeth exactly. It is in this particular that china teeth often fail to appear natural, their color differing from other teeth in the mouth and showing that the tooth is artificial.

No More Nitroglycerin Powder.

The manufacture of nitro-glycerin powder for the use of the army will be abandoned and the army ordnance department will adopt a pure soluble cotton powder, similar to that used by the navy. The decision for this change is brought about by an accident which recently occurred at Sandy Hook while testing a 6-inch gun and while using the smokeless powder made for use in 8-inch guns, but with the grains cut in half. The charge, on this occasion gave a pressure of over 80,000 pounds which exceeded the pressure gauge of the gun. Several parts of the breech mechanism were injured.

African City Built of Lead.

There is a city in Africa where lead is used successfully for building purposes. Byra is the name of this rather extensive town, which has over 300 buildings built of pure lead. Three very fine public buildings, with beautiful ornamentations, have been constructed from pure lead. Besides durability, the cheapness of the mineral is a great consideration. Thus the construction of any of these very elaborate buildings never exceeds the cost of $80,000.

Spanish Most Charitable.

The Spanish are among the most charitable people on earth. Without a poor tax, Spanish communities of 50,000 self-supporters feed a pauper population of 5,000 or more.

French Millinery.

A Paris journal says that Americans buy $7,000,000 worth of millinery in France annually, England following with $4,000,000, while Germany is satisfied with $000,000 worth.

Somehow a man never fully comprehends the story of the widow's might until she starts out after a second husband.

HUMOROUS SAYINGS AND DOINGS HERE AND THERE.

Jokes and Jokelets that Are Supposed to Have Been Recently Born—Sayings and Doings that Are Old, Curious and Laughable—The Week's Humor.

Hardacre—Going to build a washhouse in the yard, Zeke; what kind of stone would be the best for a foundation?

Crawfoot—Did you say a washhouse, Zeke? Well, it seems to me soapstone would be good as any.

Sinister Delight.

"I can't understand why women enjoy seeing foot-ball."

"I'll tell you. It is because it makes the men look as if they had been cleaning house."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A Real Dilemma.

Fanny Footlights—I had a quarrel with the manager and threatened to leave the company.

Polly Pinktights—And wasn't there anybody to take your part?

Fanny Footlights—Only my horrid understudy.—Philadelphia Record.

Not Happily Expressed.

She—I think one should give up dancing when one is getting on for 30. We none of us grow younger, you know.

He—Ah! Miss Lambkin, you can't say that!—Moonshine.

At the Polls.

"A woman tried to vote here to-day."

"How'd you get rid of her?"

"Told her to send it by mail, so that it would be sure to receive official attention."—Philadelphia North American.

Utilitarian.

"Frederick, our marriage anniversary comes this year on Thanksgiving Day."

"Is that so, Bertha? Well, shall we give each other a turkey or ducks?"—Indianapolis Journal.

Expensive.

She—What did papa say?

He—He said he'd be delighted to have me for a son-in-law, only he couldn't afford it.

Good Cheer.

"Now tell me, doctor, candidly, is there anything really the matter with my wife?"

"Yes. Her vocal chords are sadly affected. I'm afraid she may lose her voice."

"Say, drop in on your way back from the office and chat a while, will you? Things have been going badly with me lately, and it's so comforting to hear you talk."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Might Hit the Barn.

"I had a glorious dream," said the turkey.

"What was it?" inquired the goose.

"I dreamt that instead of assassinating us with an ax the gun would be used in the future."

"I don't see any difference; the farmer will kill you, anyway."

"Yes, but I dreamt the farmer's wife would do the shooting. How safe I would be if dreams were true."

Realistic.

"Lumps of ice floating on a green sea," murmured the poetic girl.

"How glorious!" mused the lover, who sometimes imbibed. "All needed to complete the drink would be a straw."

Professional Jealousy.

Successful competitor—Ah, this is what I do call fat stock! What d'ye think of this? You can lay yer 'and in 'ere for nigh on dree inches, you can. What's the matter wi' this?

Unsuccessful ditto—Dropsy!—Punch.

How She Was Landed.

Bess—So Jeannette married a farmer. I thought she said she would marry only a man of culture?

Nell—And so she did—a man of agriculture.

Her Little Joke.

He—Her beauty quite intoxicates me.

She—Perhaps it's her smiles.

Brilliant Headlight.

Mrs. Bender—Though it is an inky night I knew you were coming up the walk. I saw the end of your cigar glowing in the darkness.

Mr. Bender—Bush, Marcha, I w-wash not smoking at all.

Mrs. Bender—Then it must have been the end of your nose I saw.

A Word of Warning.

Wife—I'm going to run across the street just a minute to bid Mrs. Jones good-by.

Husband—Well, you'll have to hurry. The train leaves in three hours.

An Explanation.

Biggs—I understand you spoke of me as being a miserable cur.

Diggs—Not guilty, old chap. I merely said you were a sad dog and——

Biggs—Oh, that's different! Have a cigar.

Help Wanted.

Brokeleigh—I saw a sign in a downtown store window this morning that exactly described my condition.

Dashleigh—Why, what was it?

Brokeleigh—"Wanted—A Cash Girl."

What She Wanted.

Clerk—What do you wish, ma'am?

Mrs. O'Toole—Oi want to see some mirrors fit to give as a gift.

Clerk—Hand mirrors?

Mrs. O'Toole—No; some thot ye kin see ye'er face in.

A Pertinent Inquiry.

Tom Goode—I dropped a $10 gold piece on the contribution plate last Sunday.

Jack Potts—What was the matter with it?

Merely a Hint.

Mr. Borem (11 p. m.)—My motto is "Pay as you go."

Miss Cutting—Well, I'm willing to lend you a small amount if it will help you out!

Just So.

Mack O'Rell—Some one has invented revolving rubber heels for shoes.

Luke Warme—Ah! Another movement on foot, I presume.

Extreme Economy.

Ida—That family in the brownstone mansion is very economical, I hear.

May—Extremely! Why, they actually have their last winter's furs made into mufflers for their footman and coachman."

The Man Behind the Ledger.

"I will cause the name of France to be remembered with terror throughout foreign lands!" cried the excited Parisian.

"What will you do—join the army?"

"No."

"Write articles for the papers?"

"No. I will open a hotel during the exposition and make out the bills myself."—Washington Star.

A Sure Thing.

Millbank—My wife sent 50 cents yesterday to a man that advertised a way to make shirt waists last.

Barclay—Well?

Millbank—She got a postal telling her to make the rest of her clothes first.—New York Press.

Explained.

There was a loud crash in the doll department, accompanied by a sound as of broken crockery rolling over the floor.

"What caused that?" demanded the manager of the department, hurrying down the aisle.

"One of those indestructible dolls fell down just now," said the frightened salesgirl.—Chicago Tribune.

Out of Date.

Quinn—Did you notice how the heroine escaped from the burning building on a telephone wire? Was it not realistic?

De Fonte—Yes; but it will lose some of its realism when the wireless telegraph gets a foothold.

A Modern Mother.

Husband—It is a perfect disgrace how ragged our children look!

Wife—I have no time to bother about their clothes. I have to go to a meeting of the Society for Clothing Poor Children.

Husband—That's good. You might call the attention of that society to our children!—Fliegende Blaetter.

Unnecessary.

Maude—Did you give Tom permission to kiss you?

Clara—Of course not. He didn't ask it.

Not Particular.

Brown—I hear Jones is looking around for new quarters.

Smith—Oh, I guess he isn't particular about their newness. He borrowed an old one from me this morning.

A True Story.

Short—If Long calls with that little bill tell him I'm out.

Mrs. Short—But that would be telling a falsehood.

Short—Nothing of the kind. I'm out of cash.

Foiled Again.

"I never give money to beggars on the street," said the pedestrian.

"Oh, very well," replied the seedy individual. "Here's my card; kindly call at my office and leave your contribution with my bookkeeper."

A Gentle Hint.

He—Ida, are you interested in athletic sports?

She (who has waited)—Yes; I am very much interested in the ring just now.

Rattled.

Royster—Whoop! Hey! Haw! Hie! Shay, officer, w-where do Ish live?

Officer Snyder—How you dink I know?

Royster—Welsh, which ish norsh and which ish south?

Officer Snyder—You vas indoxicated. Else you know dot der Spinish war proved der is no norf and sout.

Five Glasses of Water Daily.

Dr. Taylor states that the normal adult needs thirty-seven ounces of water a day, and as the average tumbler holds eight ounces, five glasses make forty ounces, approximately the normal quantity. The best time to drink it are one glass upon rising, one at 10 a. m., one at 3 p. m., one at 5 and one or two on retiring. Instead of the rather indefinite five glasses a day it is better to fill a bottle of a given size, the contents of which are to be drunk during each twenty-four hours. Patients at famous watering places owe much of their improvement to the large quantities of water which they are obliged to drink, and the same results could no doubt be obtained at home by drinking large quantities of good water.—Medical World.

Aragon in Disguise.

It is the belief of some historians that the name "Oregon" is Aragon in disguise, that it was given to this country by the early Spanish voyagers, and that American explorers so interpreted the word given them by the Indians. The theory is at least plausible, and indicates a strange freak of fate.

A NOTED PRIEST.

Life Story of Dr. Edward McGlynn, St. Mary's Church, Newburgh, N. Y.

Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn, pastor of St. Mary's Church, Newburgh, N. Y., who died recently, was an able theologian and a magnetic speaker. His differences with Archbishop Corrigan, his ecclesiastical superior, gave him an international reputation. He warmly espoused the doctrines of Henry George and the single tax theory and made addresses at political meetings which served to widen the breach with those in authority in the church. Previously he had declined to establish parochial schools in the parish of St. Stephen's, of which he was pastor, averring that the public schools were good enough. He had also displeased the archbishop by the active part he took in the Land League movement. In 1886 he was commanded not to make political addresses. He kept on, however. On election day, 1886, he rode around the polling places of New York in a barouche with single tax politicians. For this he was ordered to Rome to make explanation of his conduct to the Sacred College. For refusing to go he was excommunicated. Then Dr. McGlynn devoted his time to preaching his land theories and reorganizing the Anti-Poverty Society for this purpose and addressed its meetings frequently. For five years the ban was in force which kept him outside the church. In 1892 it was withdrawn through the intercession of Archbishop Satolli and three years later he was restored to the priesthood and soon after made pastor of St. Mary's Church, Newburgh, where the closing years of his life were made fruitful in extending and intensifying Catholic belief and doctrine in a congregation of 7,000 people.

REV. DR. EDWARD M'GLYNN.

Dr. McGlynn was born in New York City of Irish parents, who settled there in 1824 from Donegal. In 1837 Edward was born and early manifested a liking for the priesthood. He went to Rome at 17 to study in the College of the Propaganda. He was a brilliant scholar and at 22 was made priest and at the same time doctor of divinity—a rare honor conferred upon candidates for holy orders. He returned to New York in 1860 and as curate served in several churches and while so acting was attached to St. Stephens Church, and, upon the death of Dr. Cummings, the pastor, succeeded to the vacancy. This was at the age of 29. For 21 years he continued in this relation and made it the largest Catholic parish in the United States—27,000 persons being affiliated with it. His fame as a preacher and his great and unceasing love for the poor as manifested in countless acts of charity made him beloved by the people of all denominations. He gave away the fortune of $40,000 that his father left him to the poor and in every possible way did all he could to ameliorate their sufferings. It was his exceeding interest in the forlorn and hungry that led him to espouse the George movement in the hope that something might be done by the State to lift the tens of thousands of the miserable poor in New York to a state of independence. He never ceased to the last to make the cause of the poor his own and a great and noble heart was stilled when the vital spark was extinguished.

ASKED TO TEACH THE QUEEN.

How a Young Jewess from America Lost an Interesting Opportunity.

"This is a brand-new stitch," said the young woman, holding up a dainty piece of embroidery, "and if you'll come some day when we can be all alone I'll teach you how to do it."

"That reminds me of a good story," said her companion. "You know that Queen Victoria is a crank on the subject of needlework and spends much time learning new things in embroidery and crochet work. Well, a few years ago she was spending some time at Wiesbaden, and she used to drive to the bazaar and look at the needlework, while people looked at her and wondered why she persisted in wearing the old, rusty bonnet. One day the young woman who usually waited on her showed her what you just showed to me—a brand-new stitch—and was asked to call the next day and teach her Majesty how to make it. She was to make a second call to finish the job several days later, but in the meantime was taken ill, and the proprietor of the establishment was beside herself and worried as to how and where she would get a substitute.

"On the day before the appointed time a young girl from a Western city in the United States came to the bazaar and saw and admired the piece of needlework, and told the saleswoman that it was the first she had seen since she had finished a similar piece.

"'Then you know how to do the stitch?'

"'Certainly,' said the young woman. 'Why?'

"Well, there was a whispered consultation, and then the girl was asked if she would act as substitute the next day and teach the Queen. You can imagine that she did not hesitate. She went to the hotel, and, radiant with joy and excitement, told her mother of her good fortune, and after she had received the congratulations of her friends, her mother shattered all her plans by reminding her that the next day was Saturday, and that, as a good Jewess, she could do no sewing on that day. And now the young woman tells the story of how near she came to teaching Queen Victoria a new stitch."—New York Tribune.

All except bad ones!

There are hundreds of cough medicines which relieve coughs, all coughs, except bad ones! The medicine which has been curing the worst of bad coughs for 60 years is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

Here is evidence:

"My wife was troubled with a deep-seated cough on her lungs for three years. One day I thought of how Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved the life of my sister after the doctors had all given her up to die. So I purchased two bottles, and it cured my wife completely. It took only one bottle to cure my sister. So you see that three bottles (one dollar each) saved two lives. We all send you our heartfelt thanks for what you have done for us."—J. H. BURGE, Macon, Col., Jan. 13, 1899.

Now, for the first time you can get a trial bottle of Cherry Pectoral for 25 cents. Ask your druggist.

The Odor of Rain.

Nuttall has determined that the smell of freshly turned earth is due to the growth of a bacterium, the clathodrix odorifera, which multiplies in decomposing vegetable matter, and more rapidly in the presence of heat and moisture. Hence the odor is especially marked after a shower, or when moist earth is disturbed. In dry soil the development of the bacterium is arrested, but it is immediately resumed with vigor as soon as moisture is restored.

Artificial Sight.

An inventor has perfected an electrical appliance, which he claims will enable the blind to see. This will bring much happiness to those who have defective eyesight. Another great discovery which will bring happiness to those whose stomachs have become deranged, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is a certain cure for indigestion, dyspepsia, malaria, fever and ague.

Brought Up to Rigor.

The Queen of the Belgians was brought up in her father's castle at Pesth, amid surroundings and customs which remind one of the feudal ages. At night her father himself descended the great staircase to lock the outer gate and the door of the principal hall. This hall was divided into two parts, one end being raised a little above the other. At the elevated end the daughters of the house sat at their needlework or painting or music, while their attendants sat at the lower end of the hall.

What Do the Children Drink?

Don't give them tea or coffee. Have you tried the new food drink called GRAIN-O? It is delicious and nourishing, and takes the place of coffee. The more Grain-O you give the children the more health you distribute through their systems. Grain-O is made of pure grains, and when properly prepared tastes like the choice grades of coffee, but costs about ¼ as much. All grocers sel it. 15c and 25c.

Remarkable Method of Suicide Adopted by a Young Man Near Winslow—Lovelorn Youth Shoots Sweetheart—Says He Has Solved Perpetual Motion.

Ellis Traylor, son of Thomas Traylor, a prominent politician of Pike County, living near Winslow, committed suicide in a very peculiar manner. Back of the Traylor home is a horse pond, and a fence extends through the pond. The young man waded into the pond in a foot of water and placed his head under the fence and remained in that condition until death came. Young Traylor was 30 years old and leaves a wife and two children.

Shoots a Girl for Laughing.

WESTERN CANADA.

One of the Choice Spots on the Continent for Settlement.

The following extracts from an interesting letter to the Mason City (Iowa) Republican, written by Mrs. S. A. Brigham, late of that place, but now of Ross Creek, Alberta, Canada, so nearly describes most of the districts of Western Canada that we take pleasure in presenting same to the attention of our readers:

Ross Creek, Alberta, N. W. T., Canada, Aug. 7, 1899.

Editor Mason City Republican:

Dear Sir—We are located in the Beaver Hills, thirty miles from Fort Saskatchewan and fifty miles from Edmonton. To the east of these is an immense area of bottom lands, which furnishes abundance of hay for the settlers. It is dotted with small lakes, the largest of which is called Beaver Lake, sixteen miles in length.

There is fine shelter for the cattle and horses now feeding there.

The Beaver Hills are covered with small green willows which are easily gotten rid of before breaking up the land. Here and there poplar, birch and tamarack trees abound. Small meadows are numerous. The soil in these hills is much richer than the bottom lands, being a kind of black leaf mold. There is no tough sod to break, and it is very productive. Wheat, oats and barley do finely, and vegetables are the finest that can be grown. Potatoes especially are large and solid, easily producing from 200 to 300 bushels per acre, and best of all, never a "taty bug" to wrestle with. Wild fruit, strawberries, gooseberries, saskatoons (or pine berries), raspberries and cranberries are found in the hills. Small tame fruit does finely, the red and white currants in my garden being as large again as common sized ones.

We have long days during the months of June and July; one can see to read many evenings until 10 o'clock in the twilight. Some nights less than three hours of darkness, and the birds are singing at 2 o'clock. Then again, it rains so easily. You look toward the west and see a little cloud coming up, a gentle shower follows, the sun shines forth again, and in a little while you forget it has rained.

Cyclones are unknown here and the thunder and lightning is very light. We had two storms this summer accompanied with wind and hail, but nothing to lodge the grain. The average heat is about 78 degrees. We had three or four days in July at 90. The nights are always cool.

The winter season is one of great activity. All the fencing is gotten out then and logs for the farm buildings. By paying 25 cents you are granted a permit at the land office to cut logs upon vacant lands. The roads are good and smooth, for the snow never drifts, not even around the buildings, and this is a great saving of time to the farmer. Hay is hauled from the bottom lands all winter long, and a man can work outside every day as far as the weather is concerned. There are cold snaps when it reaches 40 and 48 below zero, but the lack of wind prevents one realizing it and the mountains 150 miles west of us are a great protection.

Our neighbors are mostly Canadian, Scotch, Swede, and we have a nice sprinkling of people from the States.

The creek abounds in small fish.

We are now in the midst of haymaking (Aug. 7). Wheat will not be cut until early September, this being a little later season than common, but the crop will be immense. I send you a sample of wheat and barley. Its height is almost even with my shoulders, average 50 inches. Newcomers lacking binders can hire their grain cut for 75 cents per acre. Prairie chickens are here by the thousands.

The water is good. We have a fine well fifteen feet deep. In the creeks the water is soft and of a yellowish color.

Then again we are surrounded with bachelors; we have no less than eighteen single men in this neighborhood, on matrimony bent. When a feminine gender of any age between 14 and 40 visits these hills we pity her, so great is the demand for her company. Can you aid us?

In conclusion, if the remainder of our loved ones were here with us, we should better enjoy life on Ross Creek, and unless the unexpected develops, consider this will be a pretty fair place to end our days.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

BROKEN BRAINS.

When the Brain Tissue Is Clogged You Can't Think.

Serious Effects of Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation and Biliousness on the Mind, Causing Despondency, Insanity and Death.

There's close sympathy between the brain and the stomach.

A sick stomach means a sick headache, unless relieved.

Mental worry causes indigestion, and dyspepsia causes irritability, worries, fears and anxieties without any apparent cause.

Bother the stomach and you bother the brain.

Biliousness, irritability, dissatisfaction, sleeplessness, are the first serious symptoms. If a man gets up in the morning feeling as if he'd like to kick a cripple, or kill the canary bird, he had better look out for his liver.

The first sign is a warning to take Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the ideal laxative, which tone up the bowels, make the liver lively, prevent sour stomach, purify the blood, brace the brain, and make all things right as they should be.

Wabash

Mexican Tour 1900.

On Feb. 14th, 1900, the Wabash Will run a personally conducted Special Tour to Old Mexico and return.

The Train will consist of elegant drawing room and compartment sleepers, observation and dining cars, built by the Pullman company especially for this service.

Arrangements are being made for a select party of fifty people and will positively not exceed that number. The tour will consume a period of thirty days, covering 7,000 miles. The dining car will be stocked with every delicacy and the drawing room and observation cars will afford the comforts of a model hotel. The whole tour costs about $10 a day.

Mexico can only be seen and appreciated by accompanying a party of this kind. Mr. R. G. Thompson, Special Passenger representative will manage this tour and is eminently fitted for the task owing to his numerous visits to Mexico.

Wild With ECZEMA

Hands and Limbs Covered with Blisters and Great Red Blotches. Scratched Until Almost Wild. Burned Like Fire. Sleep Impossible. CUTICURA Remedies Bring Speedy Relief and a Permanent Cure at a Cost of Only $2.

I was a sufferer for eight years from that most distressing of all diseases, Eczema. I tried some of the best physicians in the country, but they did me little good. The palms of my hands were covered and would become inflamed; little white blisters at first would appear, then they would peel off, leaving a red, smooth surface which would burn like fire and itch; well, there is no name for it. On the inside of the upper part of both my limbs great red blotches, not unlike hives, would appear, and as soon as I became warm the burning and itching would begin. Night after night I would lie awake all night and scratch and almost go wild. I heard of CUTICURA REMEDIES, got them and gave them a thorough trial, and after a few applications I noticed the redness and inflammation disappear. Before I had used one box there was not a sign of Eczema left. I can truthfully assert that $2.00 worth of CUTICURA REMEDIES cured me. There has been no sign of its return anywhere upon my body since I wrote you I was cured, nearly four years ago. Hardly a month passes but what I receive a letter or some one calls and wishes to know how I got cured, if I had Eczema bad, and if the cure has been permanent, etc., etc. I always take pleasure in enlightening them the best I can.

JOHN D. PORTE, Pittsburg, March 1, 1899.

Of JOHN D. PORTE & Co., Real Estate and Insurance, 428 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburg, Pa.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema, the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of the scalp, as in scalled head; the facial disfigurement, as in pimples and ringworm, the awful suffering of infants and the anxiety of worn-out parents, as in milk crust, tetter, and salt rheum—all demand a remedy of almost superhuman virtues to successfully cope with them. That

Cuticura

Remedies are such stands proven beyond all doubt. No statement is made regarding them that is not justified by the strongest evidence. The purity and sweetness, the power to afford immediate relief, the certainty of speedy and permanent cure, the absolute safety and great economy, have made them the standard skin cures and humor remedies of the civilized world. The treatment is simple, direct, agreeable, and economical, and is adapted to the youngest infant as well as adults of every age. Bathe the affected parts with hot water and CUTICURA SOAP to cleanse the surface of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry, without hard rubbing, and apply CUTICURA Ointment freely, to allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and lastly take CUTICURA RESOLVENT to cool and cleanse the blood. This sweet and wholesome treatment affords instant relief, permits rest and sleep in the severest forms of eczema and other itching, burning, and scaly humors of the skin, scalp, and blood, and points to a speedy, permanent, and economical cure when all other remedies and even the best physicians fail. CUTICURA THE SET, price $1.25; or, CUTICURA SOAP, 25c., CUTICURA OINTMENT, 50c., CUTICURA RESOLVENT, 50c., sold throughout the world. MILLIONS OF MOTHERS

Use CUTICURA SOAP exclusively for baby's skin, scalp, and hair. It is not only the purest, sweetest, and most refreshing of nursery soaps, but it contains delicate emollient properties, obtained from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, which preserve, purify, and beautify the skin, scalp, and hair, and prevent simple skin blemishes from becoming serious. For distressing heat rashes, chafings, inflammations, and eruptions, for crusted, itching irritations of the scalp, with dry, thin, and falling hair, for red, rough hands, and shapeless nails, and simple infantile humors, it is absolutely indispensable.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

Frank, the fifteen-year-old son of George Gunsenhouser, who lives two miles north of Newville met with an accident on Saturday last which cost him his life. He was helping to cut some timber when he was struck on the head by a falling limb and rendered unconscious. He remained in that condition until Monday evening and then death came to his relief.

—Auditor Seller lost an over coat at the Junction the other evening by the kindness of someone, possibly a tramp. He had been away and Mr. Nicolai, we believe it was, met him at the train with a rig to bring him up town. The horse was hitched across the road at the usual place, and being alone, there was a good chance to get the overcoat, which was in the buggy. The train came in, and they got into the rig, but the coat has not been heard of since. It was a valuable coat and being taken at a bad season makes the loss all the worse.

CHAPTER XIV.

A few years ago, people who went down the Maumee below Toledo, on their way to Lake Erie, would be pretty certain to notice on the left bank a high, even plat of ground about four miles below the center of the city. A small collection of unpretentious and rather ancient looking houses showed plainly that at one time, a village had existed there, though to passengers on the river boat, it was apparently what was left of a village. Several of the houses were going to decay, and others had already disappeared. It was a "deserted village." But the older people thereabout would tell you of a settlement there in early days, before anyone thought of stopping at the present site of Toledo. It was all that was left of the old town of "Manhattan" which its projectors had expected to be the great lake port at the west end of Lake Erie. The site was a fine one, for as noted, the ground was high and level and far more desirable than the present site of the city. But stronger men came and could not agree with the pioneers of Manhattan, and so settled near the mouth of the little stream that put into the river not far from the present great railroad station. So Manhattan stopped growing, as the new site grew, and was finally, substantially, abandoned. At present the city has grown along down the river till it has encroached more or less on the old town till it has become lost, and several factories occupy a part of the site.

On Monday next, thousands of people will go to Fort Wayne to take the last look at the face of the heroic Gen. Lawton, and in the hour of patriotic sorrow, few will stop to think of the humble little village in which he first saw the light. The house in which he was born, has been moved a time or two, and still stands at 710 Buckeye street, once Manhattan but now Toledo. When he was two or three years old his people moved to Maumee City, several miles up the river, above the present site of Toledo, for his father was a millwright. Maumee was then the county seat and so remained many years, but it has now shrunk into a fair sized village. Its old brick court house is still standing and a short distance to the west of it stands the home of the Lawtons at Maumee. His mother died while he was young. But in the ten years the family lived there, one can see how the patriotism of the lad must have fed and grown in such surroundings. Just across the river is the historic Ft. Meigs, whose earthworks are still standing, though sheep and cattle have done what they could to smooth down the "wrinkles of grim-visaged war." Here, Gen. Harrison made his memorable defense against the combined British and Indians and on a sharp ridge a little down stream, lie buried the brave men who fell into an ambuscade on the site of Maumee City. From his home in Maumee, the coming hero could play any morning where the ambush took place, though now the trees and brush were gone. And a short distance farther down, he could inspect the site and ruins of the old British fort into which so many of these luckless soldiers were driven to slaughter to appease the savages. Or going less than four miles up the river above Maumee, he could rejoice his young heart over the glorious memories of Wayne's wonderful victory over the Indians at "Fallen Timber." No wonder Lawton was a patriot and a hero, in such surroundings.

With the removal of the Lawton family to Indiana, and to Allen county, our readers are familiar. And in DeKalb are many members of the old Thirtieth regiment, who are yet living, and some of whom will on Monday, make the pilgrimage to drop a silent tear at his casket. Lawton was a Buckeye, then a Hoosier. Now the whole country claims him and the whole world calls him its hero.

Difficulties are more often damned than bridged.

Call for Township Caucuses.

The Democratic, People's Party and Silver Republican voters in the several townships of DeKalb county, Indiana, and all who expect to act during the ensuing campaign, in opposition to the policy of the present administration, are requested to meet at the usual places in their respective townships, on Saturday, the 10th day of February, 1900, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and select in each precinct, a member of the democratic county committee of DeKalb county, to act during the campaign of 1900, and the members of such committee, so selected, are requested to meet in the town of Auburn, on Wednesday, the 14th day of February, 1900, at one o'clock p. m., to elect a chairman, vice chairman, secretary and treasurer of such committee.

We suggest that it is highly important that a thorough organization be promptly effected in each precinct, and that no man ought to accept the position of precinct committeeman, who has not the time to devote to this work of such vital importance in the pending campaign, and that the committeeman, upon his acceptance of such a position, should feel that he stands pledged to fully and heartily co-operate with the county committee in all of its efforts to secure a perfect organization and so far as DeKalb county is concerned, a correct solution of the great questions which are now engaging the attention of the American voters.

A Life and Death Fight.

Mr. W. A. Hines of Manchester, Ia., writing of his almost miraculous escape from death, says: "Exposure after measles induced serious lung trouble, which ended in Consumption. I had frequent hemorrhages and coughed night and day. All my doctors said I must soon die. Then I began to use Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption, which completely cured me. I would not be without it even if it cost $5.00 a bottle. Hundreds have used it on my recommendation and all say it never fails to cure Throat, Chest and Lung trouble." Regular size 50c and $1 00. Trial bottles free at McCORD'S Drug Store.

SURPRISED.

On Monday evening January 22, Mrs. Amos Fitch was agreeably suprised at her home near New Era by a number of her friends and relatives who dropped in to remind her that it was her birthday anniversary. Refreshments were served after which the guests left wishing Mrs. Fitch many happy returns of the evening. Among those present were: Mrs. Dr Greenwell, Mr. and Mrs. A. Heitz, Mr. and Mrs. A. Heitz, Mr. and Mrs. A. Houck, Mr. and Mrs. S. Fitch, Mr. and Mrs. H. Fitch, Mr. and Mrs. G. Krautter, Mr. and Mrs. G. Suface and Mr. and Mrs. J. Zerns.—A GUEST.

Costly Beet Sugar Plant.

It was announced recently at Santa Fe railroad headquarters that the American Beet-sugar Company had contracted for the establishment of a sugar beet plant at Rocky Ford, Col., in the Arkansas valley. The plant will be next to the largest in the world, and will have a capacity greater than the combined capacities of the plants in Nebraska. It will cost about $1,000,000 and will have an annual capacity of 18,000 tons of refined sugar, using 100,000 tons of beets.

He Fooled The Surgeons.

All doctors told Renic Hamilton, of West Jefferson, O., after suffering 18 months from Rectal Fistula, he would die unless a costly operation was performed; but he cured himself with five boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the surest Pile cure on Earth, and the best Salve in the World. 25 cents a box. Sold by H. B. McCord, druggist.

We Are Pleased to Announce The Arrival of

New Spring Dress Goods, Silks, Shirts, Hats and Neckwear

THE SPRING DRESS GOODS
are very handsome—plain weaves and large plaids taking the lead. We are showing an exquisite line of colorings in both, and at prices no higher than you would have had to pay for the same quality last season. We wish to call your attention to a line of TAFFETA SILKS we were fortunate to secure at the old price. These silks we bought to sell for 75c per yard, exactly the price asked for them at wholesale to-day. They are 19 inches wide and we are showing 15 of the very latest shades. We invite you to call and look them over.

OUR NEW SPIRING HATS
Our line of New Spring Hats is now complete. Prominent colors, BLACK, BROWN, MODE, TAN and PEARL. Shaped a trifle smaller than last season. Stiff hats will be exceptionally good for early wear. We have anything you may wish.

SPRING SHIRTS
are beginning to arrive. We have obtained a fine lot of new patterns to be worn with white collars, and also with collars to match, which we have marked to sell at 50c. Another lot and something entirely new, is Shirts for Boys, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 years old. Made up laundried bosoms to be worn white collars just like Papa's. We have them in three colors to sell for 75c.

THE NEW NECKWEAR is simply fine. We have the largest and handsomest line we've ever shown. Size them up in our window. See Us Often.

Hidden Beauty

In Egypt the custom is for Princesses to hide their beauty by covering the lower part of the face with a veil. In America the beauty of many of our women is hidden because of the weakness and sickness peculiar to the sex. If the Egyptian custom prevailed in this country, many sufferers would be glad to cover their premature wrinkles, their sunken cheeks, their unhealthy complexion, from the eyes of the world with the veil of the Orient.

Bradfield's Female Regulator brings out a woman's true beauty. It makes her strong and well in those organs upon which her whole general health depends. It corrects all menstrual disorders. It stops the drains of Leucorrhœa. It restores the womb to its proper place. It removes the causes of headache, backache and nervousness. It takes the poor, debilitated, weak, haggard, fading woman and puts her on her feet again, making her face beautiful by making her body well.

The Remonstrance.

It is no news to our people, that for some time there has been a combined effort on the part of the temperance element in Auburn and Union township to prevent the licensing of any more saloons. Petitions have been circulated in both town and county and as it turns out, a majority of the voters have signed them. In the meantime those in the saloon interest have also had in circulation a petition to get names for their side of the question. The time for the filing of these petitions closed last evening; at nearly 11 p. m., the remonstrants had their petition filed. It contained 520 names, and it is said 479 would be enough. But the saloon men had obtained the names of a number who wished to have their names removed from the original remonstrance, but not enough, we believe to change the result. The matter is to come before the Board of Commissioners at their regular monthly session on Monday next, February 5. It is the general understanding that no license can be granted if this remonstrance holds good. At present it will affect but two men, Al. Zirwes and E. Hendrickson, the latter being an applicant for a license at Thomas Sommers room. If these two are prevented, it will still leave the others running till the expiration of their licenses.

The expirations are: Zirwes, in March; Phil Watters at the Junction, in March; Sommer's, in June; Fredericks, at the South end, in September: Ryan, in October; Eldridge and Fox, in December; Berg, in July. There was quite a crowd of both factions at the auditor's office last night, but no great quarreling. The saloon men had the list of remonstrants all copied. Of course there is some feeling stirred up, as there is in all such cases, but no doubt it will soon settle down.

DIED.

The little daughter of Dr. and Mrs. F. M. Hines that was born last Tuesday, died last night. There will be brief services at the house tomorrow at 2 p. m. She was apparently a strong, well developed child, but soon became ill, and gradually grew worse till death relieved it. The mother is quite sick. The bereaved family have the sympathy of all.

Court News.

Before adjourning court for the term, which was done yesterday, Judge Bratton disposed of several cases. The following were the proceedings:

J. C. Henry et. al vs. William A. Greenamyer. Thomas S. Wickwire, receiver, files final report and is discharged.

Harry Dragoo vs. Christian and Catharine Curie, to set aside conveyance of real estate, was dismissed by the plaintiff.

The arguments for a new trial in the case of Jones, Witter & Co., vs. Austin and Brenner were heard. The motion was overruled and an appeal was then taken to the appellate court.

Albert McClure vs. Chas. McClellan and George Schaab, on account; dismissed at plaintiff's costs.

Two judgments were rendered by default in favor of Claude A Benedict, cashier, against James Johnson and others, on notes, the first for $293.05 and the second $329.17.

In the case of John and Belle Zeek vs. the Tri-State Building and Loan association the court found for the plaintiff. Motion for new trial overruled and 60 days allowed defendant to file a bill of exceptions.

In the divorce case of Jennie C. Drew vs. George H. Drew, the court ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff $75 as a temporary allowance pending the trial which will come up next term.

Only Three Women.

Only three women have ever received a vote of thanks by our congress. They are: Dolly Madison, wife of the president, for having saved the original declaration of independence, as well as Stuart's portrait of Washington when the British captured the city of Washington. She cut the picture from the frame, with a table knife, took it and the declaration and hurried off, as the British entered the other end of town. They burned the White House, the capitol and other public buildings. The second lady was Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, of New York, who presented to the government, Carpenter's picture of Lincoln. The third is Miss Gould, for her kindness to soldiers in the Spanish war.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the most severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the only remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup.,' It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Made Appropriations.

The county council held a called meeting yesterday at which time they made provision for the use of the money now in the treasury. The following appropriations were made:

For completion of new buildings and for heating apparatus	$1940.00
New bridges	2543 50
Roads	600.00
Orphan poor	200 00
Surveyor salary	140.00
Auditor salary	200.00
Outstanding orders	3725.00

The only new item was that of roads, the appropriation being made to cover the cost of the work at the sink-hole in Richland towdship. All orders can now be paid.

Smells Bad.

(Lagrange Democrat)

Our good friends in the north part of town have been considerably exercised during the past week because a skunk farm has been established in that part of town. A petition is out to have it removed but what result time will have to determine. Those who have visited it say there is no oder emanating therefrom but those who live in that vicinity declare it is nauseating in the extreme. The odium, however, is the worst and if it is possible to have it removed it will be skated to a more congenial clime. In the meantime the farm is progressing and the neighbors are kicking.

Reciprocity.

(Chicago Record.)

The wool-growers of Ohio have asked the president to withdraw from the senate the reciprocity treaty with the Argentine Republic which gives a reduction of 20 per cent, or 2 cents and 2 mills per pound, on the duty on wool imported from that country; the sugar beet producers have asked that the treaties with Jamaica and the other British West Indies be withdrawn because they give a reduction of 12½ per cent in the duty on sugar imported from those countries; and several other interests have asked for the withdrawal of the reciprocity with France for several similar reasons, but the president declines to gratify them. He thus shows that he is not so extremely protectionist as many people supposed, and still believes in the reciprocity principle. He approves of the treaties and hopes they will be ratified, but if they are not he will let the blame rest upon the republicans of the senate. President McKinley has always been in favor of reciprocity. He was the only republican member of the committee on ways and means who voted for Mr. Blaine's reciprocity proposition in 1890, and he still believes that properly applied it is the best way to build up trade.

St. Joe Heard From.

We notice through a paper published by the saloon men at Auburn that someone claiming to be a business man of St Joe, says that taking away the saloons has injured the business interests of the town. We brand this as a falsehood made out of whole cloth and defy any one to prove it. Is Baby Too Thin?

If so, there must be some trouble with its food. Well babies are plump; only the sick are thin. Are you sure the food is all right? Children can't help but grow; they must grow if their food nourishes them. Perhaps a mistake was made in the past and as a result the digestion is weakened. If that is so, don't give the baby a lot of medicine; just use your every-day common sense and help nature a little, and the way to do it is to add half a teaspoonful of to the baby's food three or four times a day. The gain will begin the very first day you give it. It seems to correct the digestion and gets the baby started right again. If the baby is nursing but does not thrive, then the mother should take the emulsion. It will have a good effect both upon the mother and child. Twenty-five years proves this fact.

BRITAIN IS DAZED.

Retreat of Buller Regarded as a Second Yorktown.

SUFFER GREAT LOSS.

Fifteen Hundred British Said to Have Been Slain by Burghers.

Imperial Forces Recross Tugela River After Serious Defeat at Spion Kop—Ladysmith Relief Column Flees from Terrific Fire of Men Under Joubert—Boers Had Prepared a Trap Resulting in the Slaughter of Warren's Soldiers—Dismal News Casts Gloom Over Entire England.

The English people are dazed by the stunning blow Gen. Buller has received at the hands of the Boers in Natal. The sacrifice of England's best blood has been in vain, for the British are back where they were a month ago, and the relief of Ladysmith seems an impossibility. Buller's report of the disaster contains not one cheering note. He frankly admits that he found the Boer left flank impervious, and considered it discreet to retire to the south side of the Tugela. He says nothing of his losses, but from Boer sources comes the statement that the English lost 1,500 killed and 150 prisoners. Their list of wounded consequently must be enormous. Gen. Buller has now had two chances to try and relieve the beleaguered troops under Gen. White at Ladysmith, and has dismally failed each time. British arms are face to face with the worst disaster since the surrender at Yorktown. Naturally there is jubilation at the capitals of all the powers in Europe, and the rumors of intervention are growing more persistent. Some of the newspapers believe that steps to this end have already been taken.

When, about a month after Gen. Buller's defeat at the Tugela river, the movement for the relief of Ladysmith was again begun, word was given out that there would be no turning back and that whatever orders the troops might hear they should remember chiefly the one to "Advance!" It was supposed, or at least hoped, in London that Gen. Buller had employed the interval after his first defeat in studying the situation and obtaining definite information about the enemy and the best way to relieve the sorely pressed and gallant garrison at Ladysmith. The crossing of the Tugela without serious opposition and the capture of

GENERAL JOUBERT.

Spion kop added to the confidence of the British people that at last the tide had turned. The garrison at Ladysmith also welcomed the sound of Buller's cannon and the sight of the bursting shells he threw into the Boers' lines.

Then followed an interval of suspense, and, considering the tremendous issues involved in this conflict, it is not surprising that the world waited for news from South Africa with almost as much interest as the British themselves. Now that Buller's story of disaster and retreat has been made known London is dazed at a catastrophe which even the Times admits is "almost without precedent in our military history, and, indeed, without parallel except in the surrender of Yorktown."

Calls It Catastrophe.

The Times says: "The most carefully planned and executed movement of the whole campaign has entirely failed, and it can hardly be necessary to dwell upon the extreme probability that we shall learn, a little sooner or a little later, of a catastrophe almost without precedent in our military history, a catastrophe indeed without a parallel except in the surrender at Yorktown.

"We are checked at every point of the campaign. In fact, the campaign is still to begin. We wish we had clearer proofs that even now the Government has any adequate comprehension of the situation. The utterances of responsible ministers have done nothing to reassure the country on this point.

"Heavy or light, the thing has to be done and the Government ought to prepare for the immediate dispatch of 50,000 men and to take steps to send yet another 50,000, if these should be needed. The hopeless attempts to carry on the campaign with four widely separated columns, each unequal to its task, must be abandoned for a concentration of force and of purpose."

Very frank criticism of the Government is beginning to be heard even in quarters that have hitherto refrained. The London Daily Mail boldly throws all the blame upon Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Lord Lansdowne and Lord Wolseley. It points to President Lincoln's dismissal of Simon Cameron from the post of Secretary of War as a precedent for "getting rid of incompetent ministers."

It is useless to minimize the gravity of the situation now confronting the British empire. Ladysmith is not only unrelieved, but beween it and the relieving column lie the victorious Boers in apparently impregnable positions. A sortie by the garrison to cut its way through the Boers is so desperate that it would be a useless waste of life to attempt it, while Buller, twice beaten back, can scarcely hope to place the relief of the beleaguered town alongside that of Lucknow in the war story of the British empire.

As to the wider complications that may ensue from the British reverses in South Africa, London is now beginning to fear the worst. Russia is already knocking at the gates of Herat and rumors of intervention by the continental powers now have a much better basis than they have had before.

"GIT!!"

—St. Paul Dispatch.

BULLER'S STORY OF RETREAT.

The war news for which the people of England had been waiting in agonizing suspense came Sunday in the shape of a dispatch from Gen. Buller and told of the retreat of the British army across the Tugela river and the story of Spion kop. The dispatch is dated at Spearman's Camp and reads as follows:

"On. Jan. 20 Warren drove back the enemy and obtained possession of the southern crests of the high table land extending from the line of Acton Homes and Honger's Poort to the western Ladysmith hills. From then to Jan. 25 he remained in close contact with the enemy.

"The enemy held a strong position on a range of small kopjes stretching from northwest to southeast across the plateau from Acton Homes, through Spion Kop, to the left bank of the Tugela. The actual position held was perfectly tenable, but did not lend itself to an advance, as the southern slopes were so steep that Warren could not get an effective artillery position, and water supply was a difficulty.

"On Jan. 23 I assented to his attacking Spion Kop, a large hill, indeed a mountain, which was evidently the key of the position, but was far more accessible from the north than from the south. On the night of Jan. 23 he attacked Spion Kop, but found it very difficult to hold, as its perimeter was too large, and water, which he had been led to believe existed, in this extraordinarily dry season was found very deficient.

"The crests were held all that day against severe attacks and a heavy shell fire. Our men fought with great gallantry. I would especially mention the conduct of the Second Cameronians and the Third King's Rifles, who supported the attack on the mountain from the steepest side and in each case fought their way to the top, and the Second Lancashire Fusiliers and Second Middlesex, who magnificently maintained the best traditions of the British army throughout the trying day of Jan. 24, and Thornycroft's mounted infantry, who fought throughout the day equally well alongside of them.

"Gen. Woodgate, who was in command at the summit, having been wounded, the officer who succeeded him decided on the night of Jan. 24 to abandon the position, and did so before dawn Jan. 25.

"I reached Warren's camp at 5 a. m. on Jan. 25 and decided that a second attack upon Spion Kop was useless and that the enemy's right was too strong to allow me to force it. Accordingly I decided to withdraw the force to the south of the Tugela. A few hours afterward we commenced withdrawing the train, and in thirty-eight hours Warren's force was concentrated south of the Tugela without the loss of a man or a pound of stores.

"The fact that the force could withdraw from actual touch—in some cases the lines were less than a thousand yards apart—with the enemy, in the manner it did, is, I think, sufficient evidence of the morale of the troops, and that we were permitted to withdraw our cumbrous ox and mule transports across the river, eighty-five yards broad, with twenty-foot banks and a very swift current, unmolested, is, I think, proof that the enemy has been taught to respect our soldiers' fighting powers."

ANTI-TRUST LAW VOID.

Illinois Statute Declared Unconstitutional by a Chicago Judge.

The Illinois anti-trust law of 1893 was declared unconstitutional by Judge Kohlsaat in the United States Circuit Court at Chicago. Because of the section which exempts from its provisions the agriculturist and stock raiser, the court held that the statute is tainted with class and special legislation, and is in contravention of both the Federal and State constitutions. In the decision Judge Kohlsaat refused to confine his finding to the clause in question, but put the ban on the entire act.

The anti-trust statute which is thus declared void by the Federal court is the law which was enacted in 1893. The Supreme Court of the State has never passed upon its constitutionality. Decisions upholding the validity of the act of 1891, of which the law of 1893 is an amplification, have been rendered by the State's chief tribunal in the "milk shippers'" and "glucose" cases, but that statute did not contain the clause which Judge Kohlsaat finds is class legislation. The objectionable part of the law is section 9, which contains the words: "The provisions of this act shall not apply to agricultural products or live stock while in the hands of the producer or raiser." The ruling was made in the case of the Union Sewer Pipe Company against Thomas Connelly, but applied as well to the case of the same plaintiff against William Dee.

The action by which the constitutionality of the law was attacked was brought by the Union Sewer Pipe Company to recover about $6,000 from Conuelly and from Dee on contracts made several years ago. The defendants resisted payment of their notes on the ground that under the Illinois law a trust has no right to sue or recover on any contract made in the State. Other defenses were that the Union Sewer Pipe Company of Ohio was a trust or combination organized for the express purpose of restricting trade contrary to the common aw in Ohio and of Illinois to the Federal statute known as the "Sherman act."

MAY BE PEACEMAKER.

United States Likely to Act as Mediator in South Africa.

In view of the reports of the British defeats in South Africa, and the probability that Ladysmith will soon be compelled to surrender to the Boers, diplomats in our own national capital would not be surprised to see Washington become the center of interest in the South African controversy. It is predicted that such a success for the Boers as the taking of Ladysmith will encourage the idea of intervention on the part of neutral powers, in the name of humanity, to end the war.

The Hague agreement has been suggested as justifying just such a course, and the feeling in continental Europe is said to have reached an acute stage, not only because of the general sympathy for the Boers, but also because of the arbitrary seizures of neutral vessels and the general interference with neutral commerce by Great Britain. It is believed that Great Britain will not be allowed to continue to ignore the rights of neutral powers in her effort to subdue the Boers, and that the English Government is aware of the danger of intervention or compulsory mediation of her differences with the South African republic.

The influences of Russia at Pekin and the suspicious movement of Russian troops toward the Afghanistan border are also regarded as warnings. It would not be a great surprise to Washington diplomats if, after another crushing defeat, such as now seems imminent, Great Britain would turn to this Government as the most acceptable mediator.

MONEY WOMEN GAVE.

THE YEAR 1899 HAS AN UNEQUALED RECORD.

American Women Have Given the Enormous Sum of $16,000,000 to Purposes of Public Good—Many Worthy Charities Assisted.

The gifts of women during 1899 for purposes of public good aggregate a sum of $16,000,000. Of this amount the largest single sum is Mrs. Stanford's $10,000,000, and Mrs. Bradley's $500,000 is the next largest. The total gifts and bequests for the five years—1893 through 1897—in this country was more than $165,000,000—that is gifts from private fortunes for public uses. Of this $45,000,000 was given during 1897. In 1898, in New York City alone $25,000,000 was given away in charity. During the same year, the gifts of thirty-four women in the United States for higher education amounted to $3,446,400; of this sum Cora J. Flood gave the largest amount, or $2,000,000, and Helen Gould, beside her donation to the Government, gave $37,000 for educational purposes.

MISS HELEN GOULD.

The record of gifts to charity and for educational purposes by women in this country for the year now ending is a notable one and is not entirely covered in the following list.

Half a million dollars, given by Mrs. Lydia Bradley, of Peoria, Ill., comes next to Mrs. Stanford's gift. It was presented last summer to the Bradley Polytechnic Institute, and constituted her second donation, the first being a gift of the land on which the institute was built and the money to build it. That involved a sum approximating $250,000. In addition, Mrs. Bradley has given to Peoria 137 acres of land for a park, she has built a church, a home for aged women and many other smaller institutions.

Miss Flood's presentation of her father's country place, at Menlo Park, to the University of California, made in 1897, has been supplemented recently by a gift of money. The house and its contents are valued at $1,000,000, and a tract of nearly 3,000 acres is included in the transfer.

Another California woman has been munificent in her gifts; this is Mrs. E. B. Crocker, who has conveyed to the Benevolent and Protective order of Elks her home in Sacramento as a memorial of her husband. It is valued at $90,000. Mrs. Phoebe Hearst and Mrs. Leland Stanford are constantly adding to their gifts to the universities they have built up in California, and their benefactions go up into the millions. Mrs. Stanford's latest contribution made during the summer was one of $10,000,000.

Mrs. Emmons Blaine, of Chicago, in May, announced that she would found a college of pedagogy, the institution to be started with a fund of several hundred thousand dollars. She has had this idea in mind for some years, it being her desire to accomplish a practical good for poor girls by giving them an opportunity to become teachers. She bestows a permanent benefit upon them. The new college of pedagogy, built and endowed by Mrs. Blaine, will represent an outlay of $500,000.

At the commencement at Vassar College in June it was announced that Miss Katharine Tuttle had given a $10,000 scholarship in memory of her sister, and Mrs. Caroline Swift Atwater, of Poughkeepsie, to build a new infirmary, had donated $8,000.

From Mrs. William Beldon Noble, of Washington, Harvard University has received a gift of $20,000 to endow a lectureship in memory of her husband, a graduate of the class of 1885. Another gift of $20,000 was received by the university from the family of John Simpkins for the Lawrence Scientific School, and still another $5,000 from Mrs. Frederick T. Philips, of Lawrence, R. I. The money is to establish a fund, the income of which is to be expended annually in the purchase of books for the college library in the department of English literature. The gift is in memory of the donor's brother.

Other Benefactions.

A new dormitory to be erected at Wellesley College, at a cost of $60,000, is the gift of Mrs. Martha S. Pomeroy, of Washington. Mrs. Irene B. Lewis, of Hamilton, N. Y., has recently made a gift of $5,000 to Colgate University, to found three scholarships for the purpose of aiding young men studying for the Baptist ministry in that institution.

Miss Marie Hopper, of Philadelphia, has given $10,000 to Bryn Mawr College for a scholarship foundation fund.

Mrs. Joseph Moffatt, of Los Angeles, Cal., has given property to the value of $50,000 to the endowment fund of the National Florence Crittenton Mission—a charity which was founded sixteen years ago by Charles Crittenton, of New York, in memory of his daughter.

For the maintenance of a home for convalescents and invalids at Santa Barbara, $80,000 has been left by Miss Anna S. C. Blake, her will being probated in April. She also left to the Cottage Hospital, $10,000; to the Orthopedic Hospital, Philadelphia, $10,000, and to a Boston hospital a like sum.

A charity has been founded during the past few months by Mrs. Alfred Corning Clark, in memory of her husband. It is the Alfred Corning Clark Neighborhood House, which stands in the heart of the crowded lower East Side, New York. Men's, women's, boys' and girls' clubs, kindergartens, libraries, conservatories and roof gardens are included in the work of the institution—a work which is thoroughly appreciated by the people in whose behalf it is being done. It has been endowed at a cost of about $400,000.

During last summer a new floating hospital for St. John's Guild was built by Mrs. Augustus D. Juilliard, of New York, at a cost of $83,000; it was named in honor of the donor, the Helen C. Juilliard.

To the endowment fund of the University of Chicago Miss Helen Miller Gould has recently contributed $25,000. A second scholarship of $8,000 to Vassar College was announced at the commencement of June—these scholarships are given in memory of her mother. Two scholarships of $6,000 each she has given to the late Mr. Moody's schools; one for the girls' seminary and one for the boys'. To endow a free bed in perpetuity in the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, New York, she gave $5,000.

Other women who have contributed largely to the public good are the Countess de Castellane, $220,000; Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, $5,000; Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, $3,500; Mrs. P. A. Harper, $3,000; Mrs. Francis Brockholst Cutting, who contributes $3,000 a year to the sick poor of Newport, R. I.; Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, $4,000, and Miss Elizabeth Plankinton, of Milwaukee, Wis., $100,000.

Gifts by Request.

Gifts by bequest have abounded during 1889. A quarter of a million dollars was left by Mrs. Eugene Kelly to build a chapel for St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, and to provide a fund for the sick poor. Of the Baroness de Hirsch's $100,000,000 left to charity, $1,200,000 comes to America. The Clara de Hirsch Home in 62d street, founded about two years ago by the baroness,

MRS. LELAND STANFORD.

The will of Mrs. Caroline L. Macy, who founded the Macy Memorial Art School in New York, bequeaths $200,000 to the Teachers' College and $5,000 to the Presbyterian Hospital. Mrs. E. A. Stevens, of Castle Point, Hoboken, bequeaths to Holy Innocent Church, which she was mainly instrumental in establishing, a fund of $3,000 to provide coal for the poor of Hoboken, free or at cost price, and $12,000 for other church charities. To the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, Mrs. Caroline A. Cisco leaves $10,000. To the Missionary Society—domestic and foreign—Mrs. Emilie A. Matthien gives $5,000. About $80,000 is distributed among New York charities by the will of Mrs. Caroline E. Hollister.

Mrs. Felix R. Brunnot, of Alleghany City, Pa., bequeathed by will, probated in November, $123,000 to missions. The late Mrs. Harriet Frothingham Wolcott, stepmother of Gov. Roger Wolcott, distributed by her will, probated in April last, $32,500 to various charities.

St. Barnabas Hospital, Newark, benefits to the value of $1,000 and a share in the residuary estate of Mrs. Eliza Wells, who also left $1,000 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

By the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, in July, the poor seamstresses of Rhinebeck-on-Hudson find themselves heirs to an estate of $300,000 which is to be equally divided among them.

A Thrifty Prince.

Little Prince Alexander, the eldest son of the dead Prince Henry, husband of Princess Beatrice of England, has always been noted, since his earliest childhood, for bartering proclivities. He lends marbles and tops at interest to his cousins, the little Connaughts, and on one occasion he got up quite a little corner in dolls, which he succeeded in purchasing at a great reduction from his small Albany cousins.

The other day he received a present of £1 ($5) from his mother, and having quickly spent it, applied for the second. He was gently chided for his extravagance, but, unabashed, wrote to his grandmamma. The queen had been warned of the financial embarrassment, and she replied in the same strain of remonstrance, whereupon the prince responded:

"Dear Grandmamma: I received your letter and hope you will not think I was disappointed because you could not send me any money. It was very kind of you to give me good advice. I sold your letter for £4 10s."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Lake Mariners Good Sailors.

Lake sailormen are reputed to be the best sailors. It is said that a sailor may cross the Atlantic without danger of running into an island, and he may hardly see more than two or three ships during the entire voyage, but on the lakes it is just the other way.

Some girls never turn their hand at work unless it is to decorate for a wedding.

Half a Bottle Cured Me

"About thirty years ago I bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor to stop my hair from falling out. One-half a bottle cured me. A few days ago my hair began to fall out again. I went to the medicine shelf and found the old bottle of Hair Vigor just as good as when I bought it." — J. C. Baxter, Braidwood, Ill., Sept. 27, 1899.

Keeps Thirty Years

Ayer's Hair Vigor is certainly the most economical preparation of its kind on the market. A little of it goes a long way. And then, what you don't need now you can use some other time just as well.

It doesn't take much of it to stop falling of the hair, restore color to gray hair, cure dandruff, and keep the hair soft and glossy. There's a great deal of good and an immense amount of satisfaction in every bottle of it.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

Write the Doctor

If you do not obtain all the benefits you desire from the use of the Vigor, write the Doctor about it. Address, Dr. J. C. AYER, Lowell, Mass.

Want Do the Children Drink?

Don't give them tea or coffee. Have you tried the new food drink called GRAIN-O? It is delicious and nourishing, and takes the place of coffee. The more Grain-O you give the children the more health you distribute through their systems. Grain-O is made of pure grains, and when properly prepared tastes like the choice grades of coffee, but costs about ¼ as much. All grocers sel lit. 15c and 25c.

THE NERVES OF WOMEN

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves the Suffering from Overwrought Nerves.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am so grateful for the benefit derived from the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I wish you to publish this testimonial that others may know the value of your medicine. I was suffering such tortures from nervous prostration that life was a burden. I could not sleep at all and was too weak to walk across the floor without aid. The disease had reached a condition where my heart was affected by it, so that often I could not lie down at all without almost suffocating. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it worked like magic. I feel that your medicine has been of inestimable benefit to me."—MISS ADELE WILLIAMSON, 196 N. Boulevard, Atlanta, Ga.

Thin, Sallow and Nervous

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I was thin, sallow and nervous. I had not had my menses for over a year and a half. Doctored with several physicians in town and one specialist, but did not get any better. I finally decided to try your medicine, and wrote to you. After I had taken three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and three of Blood Purifier, my menses returned, and I feel as well and strong as I ever did, and am gaining flesh."—MISS LENA GAINES, Visalia, Tulare Co., Cal.

TELEPHONE SERVICE.

Up in Detroit they had, once on a time, a telephone war. It resulted in the establishment of a new company whose avowed object it was to compel competition and thus benefit the dear public. Now the oldest of the two companies—controlled by Bell—has absorbed the newest, and the people of Detroit, even with the danger of increased telephone charges confronting them, are feeling better than they did when they were putting up cash for and suffering the annoyances that accompany two telephone systems. Discussing the matter, the Detroit News says:

"No city is big enough for two permanent competing telephone systems, and that one of the local concerns should absorb the other was as inevitable from the beginning as sunrise and sunset. It is all very fine to theorize about competition, but competition in respect to telephone service must be as unsatisfactory to the customers as it is unprofitable to the companies. Telephone service is one of those natural monopolies, created by the very force of circumstances. There can be competition in telegraph service, in the express business and, with certain limitations, in the railroad business; but competition in the telephone service means a great deal of annoyance, if no increased expense to the user, if he tries to secure as efficient a service through two companies as he could secure through one. * * * Out of the consolidation, however, they will ultimately obtain many advantages that are not to be lost sight of. Business and professional men will no longer be taxed for two telephones, even if they are forced to pay more for the one telephone than they paid for either of those they have been using for the past four years, while the increased convenience cannot be lost sight of."

What has taken place in Detroit will take place in other cities in due course of time. Every business man knows that two telephone services constitute a nuisance. The advantages that are derived, in the way of lower prices for single 'phones, from competition, are more than neutralized by the increased cost and annoyances resulting from the compulsory employment of two services. Consolidation must come, and may the fittest survive.

Judge Swore Himself.

Judge Beasley has been a justice of the peace in a northwest Missouri township for so many years that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. A few years ago Beasley was personally interested in a lawsuit, being a party thereto. It was necessary for him to make an affidavit, and he deprecated the idea of making it before another justice or a notary and depriving himself of a fee. So he filled out his affidavit, swore to it before himself, signed it as justice and witness, and awaited developments. He was sure that he would win and thus be able to tax the costs up to the other side.

When the case came up before Judge Kelley the affidavit was offered in evidence and promptly objected to, the reason being given that a justice could not swear himself.

"Let me see the affidavit," said Judge Kelley.

It was handed to the Judge, who scanned it carefully for a few moments and then asked:

"Mr. Beasley, will you kindly tell me how you appeared before yourself when you swore yourself and identified your own signature?"

"That was very easy, your honor," replied Beasley. "I borrowed a looking-glass and went through the formalities before it."

Beasley was somewhat astonished when Judge Kelley sustained the objection.—Omaha World-Herald.

Imperial Housekeeping.

It is a popular custom to represent the German Empress as being above all a good "hausfrau" and one interested in little else than household management. This tradition is viewed with a certain amusement in aristocratic Berlin circles. The fact is, that the Empress has so little to do with the housekeeping of the palace at Potsdam that she relegates to the Emperor the daily task of receiving the official whose duty it is to supervise the management of the royal household.

It was the consort of the late Emperor Frederick, born Princess Royal of England, who first took personal charge of the Prussian royal establishment. The greatest extravagance and waste prevailed before she and her practical husband took the matter in hand and effected sweeping reforms. Their example is followed by the present Emperor, who never gives the simplest dinner party without first calculating the exact cost per guest.

The little daughter of the Emperor is receiving a careful education in all domestic branches, but the Empress takes no interest in any except in that of dressmaking. Most of her own and her daughter's dresses are cut and made under her supervision. A large staff of needlewomen are employed, and one French or Viennese model gown is often copied in a number of different colors and fabrics. The Empress dresses with much elegance, but she has no particular reputation for originality.—New York Tribune.

What the Nation Pays for Golf.

Last year a well-known authority on the "royal and ancient game," Josiah Newman, the compiler of the Official Golf Guide of the United States, made a careful estimate for the writer on the amount of money annually spent on golf in this country. Placing the number of American golfers at 122,000, and allowing $125 for the expenditures of each on the game—a very fair average—he figured out that $15,000,000 in round numbers was about the amount of money which golf put into circulation in the United States. Since then, however, the interest in winter golf has greatly increased, especially at the Southern winter resorts, where new courses are constantly in process of creation and old links being improved. While these are primarily for winter visitors, the number of local players is also increasing. Moreover, nothing is so spreading as golf enthusiasm.—Truth.

Enterprising Merchant.

A town which has played its part in history for more than a hundred years ought to be forgiven for being a little sleepy by this time, although its newer neighbors may be inclined to poke fun at it.

It is told that a Bladensburg merchant was dozing in his store one day, when a little girl came in with a pitcher and asked for a quart of molasses. The merchant yawned, stretched himself, half opened his eyes, and then said, in an injured tone:

"Well, ain't there nobody what sells molasses in Bladensburg but me?"

A FIFTY-CENT FINE.

Wheelman Who Had Left His Repair Kit at Home Paid It.

A wheelman tells a story against himself, and says he has profited by the lesson it contains. He was taking a day's ride, and when about twenty-five miles from home his rear tire "went flat." There was no way of repairing it, and he was about to trundle it to the nearest railway station to take a train for home, when another cycler, wheeling leisurely along, stopped and accosted him.

"What's the matter? Oh, I see. Rear tire has gone back on you, has it?"

"So it seems."

"Where's your tool-bag?"

"Left it at home."

"Is it a double-tube tire?"

"I think so."

"Clincher?"

"I don't know."

"Well, it is," said the other man, who was examining it by this time. "I think I can fix it for you."

"I'll be very grateful if you can."

"H'm!"

The second cycler opened his tool-bag, took out a small tin box containing cement, pieces of rubber, and so forth, removed the outer case, blew up the inner tube till he found the puncture, and placed a patch on it, the whole operation, including the reinflation of the mended tire, occupying not more than ten or fifteen minutes.

"I think I ought to pay you something for that," said the grateful bicycler.

"It would cost you half a dollar at a repair shop," was the reply, after a moment's reflection. "You may give me that if you want to."

The coin was instantly handed over, and as promptly sent flying into an orchard by the roadside as far as an athletic arm could throw it.

"My dear sir," said the "friend in need," preparing to remount, "I am only an amateur, like yourself, but I never travel on my wheel without a repair kit—or the necessary knowledge how to use it. You may consider yourself fined fifty cents for culpable negligence in not doing likewise—and the tribunal is competent to inflict the fine, for I am also a judge of a circuit court. Don't let it happen again, young man. Good day!"

When They Rise.

The Kaiser rises at 5 o'clock, swallows a cup of coffee and then begins work. The Emperor Francis Joseph is about at 7 o'clock and breakfasts on coffee and buttered toast. The King of Italy, the King of Sweden, the King of the Belgians, the King of Denmark, the Sultan and the Prince of Bulgaria rise at the same hour as ordinary mortals. The record for indolence is held by the ex-King Milan. He retires to rest at peep of day, rises at midday and takes a long time over his breakfast.

THE OLDEST MAN IN AMERICA

Tells How He Escaped the Terrors of Many Winters by Using Peruna.

Mr. Isaac Brock, Born in Buncombe Co., North Carolina, March 1, 1788, Says: "I attribute my extreme old age to the use of Peruna."

Born before United States was formed.

Saw 22 Presidents elected.

Pe-ru-na has protected him from all sudden changes.

Veteran of four wars.

Shod a horse when 99 years old.

Always conquered the grippe with Pe-ru-na.

Witness in a land suit at age of 110 years.

Believes Pe-ru-na the greatest remedy of the age for Catarrhal Diseases.

Isaac Brock, a citizen of McLennan County, Texas, has lived 111 years. He now lives with his son-in-law at Valley Mills, Texas.

In speaking of his good health and extreme old age, Mr. Brock says:

"After a man has lived in the world as long as I have, he ought to have found out a great many things by experience.

"One of the things I have found out to my entire satisfaction is the proper remedy for ailments that are due directly to the effects of the climate.

"During my long life I have known a great many remedies for coughs, colds, catarrh and diarrhœa. I had always supposed these affections to be different diseases, but in reading Dr. Hartman's books I have found out that these affections are the same and that they are properly called catarrh.

"I had several long sieges with the grip. At first I did not know that Peruna was a remedy for this disease. When I heard that la grippe was epidemic catarrh, I tried Peruna for la grippe and found it to be just the thing.

"As for Dr. Hartman's remedy, Peruna, I have found it to be the best, if not the only, reliable remedy for these affections. It has been my standby for many years, and I attribute my good health and extreme old age to this remedy.

"Very truly yours,

Isaac Brock.

Wabash Mexican Tour 1900.

On Feb. 14th, 1900, the Wabash Will run a personally conducted Special Tour to Old Mexico and return.

The Train will consist of elegant drawing room and compartment sleepers, observation and dining cars, built by the Pullman company especially for this service.

Arrangements are being made for a select party of fifty people and will positively not exceed that number. The tour will consume a period of thirty days, covering 7,000 miles. The dining car will be stocked with every delicacy and the drawing room and observation cars will afford the comforts of a model hotel. The whole tour costs about $10 a day.

Mexico can only be seen and appreciated by accompanying a party of this kind. Mr. R. G. Thompson, Special Passenger representative will manage this tour and is eminently fitted for the task owing to his numerous visits to Mexico.

BOWEL BAY-WINDOWS

When a man gets one, he becomes a slave to his bowels. Every person ought to have control over the different parts of the body, and it is the easiest thing in the world to educate the bowels, make them do their duty naturally and regularly, and keep them from becoming a source of misery and a deformity as well.

Educate your bowels!

Don't neglect the slightest sign of irregularity but see that you have at least one natural easy movement a day. Pills, salts and black draughts are dangerous because they strain and weaken the bowels. What you want is a mild but sure laxative, that tones and strengthens the bowels and stimulates their movements. Such a laxative is CASCARETS, and when you try them, you will find that it is the easiest thing in the world to make and keep your bowels clean and regular, strong and healthy. Be sure you get the genuine. CASCARETS are never sold in bulk. Look for the trade-mark, the long-tailed "C" on the box. By keeping the bowels clean, all serious disorders are

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY....FEBRUARY 8, 1900.

National Manufacturing Co.

This is the name the Roann Cooperage Co. takes in its new location at Wabash. No doubt some of our readers will be interested in a description of the new plant. Mr. Hartman writes under date of Feb. 3:

JAMES A. BARNS, Auburn, Ind.:

DEAR MR. BARNS:—We are located in Wabash in every sense of the word, except a complete factory. We will leave our hardwood mill at Roann and will build there a modern plant which will be operated from our Wabash office. At Wabash we are building an extensive hoop and stave factory. We will build a stone and metal boiler house and will use three large boilers and four engines in our plant. We will have a complete cut-hoop factory with all the modern machinery and a capacity of 75,000 hoops in ten hours. We will also erect a stave mill in connection and will put in a set of sawed-hoop machinery to use up the slabs. In our cut hoop mill we will use five planers, two lappers and four coilers, and have purchased a new Defiance hoop cutter. We will have a new sawmill with a capacity of 25,000 feet in connection with our hoop mill; and have begun operations on the ground.

We have leased fifteen acres of land on the Wabash railroad in the western part of the city and have a fine site with a macadamized road running up to the yard. We will use city water for the boilers and put in our own electric light plant. We will have 1,000 feet of sidetrack and a spur will run directly into the hoop yard so that we can load hoops and staves into the box car without hauling. We will deal in hoops and staves as well as to manufacture. We do not know of a factory in the country with as large a capacity as our plant here will have; it will require three months to build it.

We have a temporary office at No. 20 West Market street near the business center. Everyone uses natural gas here. Wabash is a city of about 13,000; has asphalt pavement, complete water works, sewerage, electric lights, natural and artificial gas, paid fire department, day and night police force, free mail delivery and most all other advantages of our larger cities.

Yours truly,
W. C. HARTMAN.

Goebel Dead.

William Goebel, died of his wounds, Saturday evening at 6:45, after holding out for five days. He had all the while believed he would get well till within a few hours of his death. He then noticed that he was growing weaker and asked the doctor to tell him what to expect. The doctor plainly told him he could live but a few hours. After a few minutes thought he asked to be left alone with his brother and sister, and this was granted. Soon after he began to fail and though all possible was done to keep him alive till a brother coming on a train from the far west could reach him, he gradually sunk away and died forty minutes before the brother reached his bedside. Soon after his death the lieutanent governor on his ticket was sworn in as governor.

Glorious News

Comes from Dr. D. B. Cargile, of Washita, I. T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs. Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. Terrible sores would break out on her head and face, and the best doctors could give her no help; but her cure is complete and her health is excellent." This shows what thousands have proved—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidney and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion builds up strength. Only 50c. Sold by H. B. McCord, druggist. Guaranteed.

A "ThankYou" Job.

There were married on South Main street last Saturday at 6 o'clock, John Scott and Iva Vancuren. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a company of friends. After refreshments were served and the officiating minister was getting ready to leave, the young man stepped up and said "I thank you for coming down." A young man starting upon married life ought to have at least money enough to pay his wedding bills. This does not speak well for a young man.

Taking the Census.

Superintendents of the census are being thronged with letters and applications for positions as local census takers. As the work is to be done in June or July next, and will be so divided up as to not last more than about two weeks, it is not as great a job as many think. It is supposed that a hustler can make about $3 a day. The pay is on the piece-work plan, and not by the day or week.

Lawton at Ft. Wayne.

Large crowds were in the lines that filed slowly through the court house corridor at Fort Wayne today, to pay their last tribute of honor to the dead hero In the start in front of the New Aveline, were a squad of police to start the line in the right direction and then the people walked between lines of soldiers into the building and found themselves in the large area, prepared at the south end of the main corridor. All around were heavy funeral draping and forming a square were more soldiers. At the head and foot of the casket stood one of his former men of the old Thirtieth. The coffin was on a platform about two feet high, but was itself very large and long, for he was a very tall man. It was heavily covered with wreaths and emblems, of dark mourning symbols. Many were disappointed not to see his face, but this was impossible, for it will be remembered he was killed on a hot day and had to be carried some distance back to Manila, and was there temporarily placed in a tomb. Then followed the long journey home which has taken over a month. But thousands of people passed through, and while there was no jam, it is likely that all Fort Wayne turned out to do him honor. His train had reached the city at 7 a. m, and at 4 p. m. the procession took his remains back to his car, and then on to Indianapolis where he will lie in state tomorrow. Then he goes to Washington and the final interment is in the National Soldiers' cemetery at Arlington.

County Management.

We have waited a week or two to give the people of the county a chance to read and study the report made by the Board of County Commissioners and published in the Weekly COURIER of Jan. 18, 1900. We hope they have studied this statement carefully and intelligently, for the Board put it out in good faith believing that the taxpayers are entitled to know where every penny of their money has gone. Of course the law requires a statement of this kind but the Board has taken great pains to make the report full, and so plain that no one can fail to understand it. The Board wants them to understand it, and not to misunderstand a thing it contains. And we hope those who still keep a copy, will look it over again, every item of it. We want all tax payers to note especially the fourth item under the heading, "County Revenue," and then the last item, "Net resources" under the heading, "Financial Condition." This last shows that there was Jan. 1, net resorces of $3795.-48, after paying all debts made up to that date. This certainly settles the question that some have been talking about, namely that the county is out of debt, We think the showing a good one, and that the Board, every member of it should have due credit for the care and pains they have bestowed on the county business and in the interest of the tax payers.

The Entertainment.

It must have greatly pleased the two little misses, Sydney Farmer and Helen Smith, to look out on the large audience that greeted them at the Armory. There must have been about 300 present and all without exception say it is one of the finest they ever attended. The two little girls are talented to a high degree and the selections they gave were fine. Their training had been excellent and all they did was in such good taste and so excliently done that cheers were the regular order all through. Their work was not confined to recitations alone but there was pantomine in connection with reading and singing, and this dificult work was well done. Sydney Farmer has also become a proficient in the simpler forms of dancing which she does with rare grace. We have not space to give all the fine points or even name them. It was as fine an entertainment as we have ever had, nor should we forget the sweet singing by Miss Trover and Miss Franks, and the assistance by Mrs. Du Wann and others. It was all fine.

Burned His Wages.

It is too bad for a hard working boy to lose his wages in any way and the way, Bert Hull lost his Saturday was unusually trying. Bert had recieved his pay in the usual envelope at the Eckhart carrige factory, where he is employed, and on getting home that evening, took out of it the silver change leaving within the envelop a $5 bill, intending to care for that also; but something took his attention and soon afterwards he gathered up some waste paper lying there and threw it into the stove. He suddenly realized that his envelop and $5 bill went with the rest. It was a trying thing for a boy like Bert and we feel sorry for him, but it is probably the best investment he ever made or ever will make, for it will be a lesson not to be forgotten, showing the necessity of being alert to the care of every trifling part of his business matters.

Ginder-Rhoads.

At the bride's parents January 31, at 12 o'clock occured the marriage of Jacob L. Ginder and Myrta E. Rhoads, Rev. McCloe officiating. There were besides the families of the contracting parties, Mr. and Mrs. Gunsenhouser; Miss Addie and Jenny Stuart and Mary McDaniels, also Walter Moudy and Clarence Keller The young couple took the evening train for Greenwich, Ohio, where they expect to spend a couple of weeks after which they will begin life's journey down the stream of time on his farm near Mt. Pleasant.

General Information TO TAX-PAYERS
of DeKalb County, Ind.

LAWS GOVERNING SCHOOL FUNDS AND LOANS OF DEKALB COUNTY.

Borrowers must invariably furnish an abstract which must show perfect title without incumbrance.

The limit to any borrower is $2,000; loans to run for five years at six per cent per annum in advance.

The appraisements to be made by disinterested persons who are appointed by the County Commissioners. Only 50 per cent. of the appraised value exclusive of improvements can be loaned.

The School Funds are composed of three kinds: Congressional, Common and Permanent Endowment, which belong to the state of Indiana and to which the County is liable for the annual interest of six per cent, whether collected by the County or not, and any deficit comes directly from the County Revenue. Therefore, it is very essential and important that prompt payments be made of interest to save the county from this additional expense.

It is almost impossible to have loans pay the entire interest, as the refunding of amounts loaned and the loaning of the amounts thus refunded necessitates some lost time, which deducts so much from the earning power of the fund. The Congressional Fund cannot be reduced or increased—the amount being the result of the sale of every sixteenth section set aside for school purposes, all of which having been sold. The fund is now permanent which amounts to $17,684.77. The common school fund is constantly increased by fines and forfeitures paid by the clerk of court and justice of the peace, which fund amounted to $80,536.33, June 1, 1899.

The Permanent Endowment Fund is a fund apportioned by the state to the different counties of the state, the interest of which is for the use of the State University at Bloomington, which fund amounted to $446.77, June 1, 1899.

The annual interest of the Congressional Funds, with the saloon license added, go directly to the tuition fund of this county; two sourses of revenue, which, if interest is paid promptly, will reduce the tuition levy of this county quite materially.

The annual interest of the common school fund is reported to the state semi-annually, when settlements are made. This interest, plus the state school tax (which is raised by direct taxation) is apportioned to each county per capita, according to the number of school children enrolled. For a number of years past we reported more money to the state than we drew back, but our apportionment for January, 1900, will be a red letter distribution. We reported to the State $8,943.32, and they apportioned to us for distribution $9,449.88. This gain was caused by the increase of our school enumeration. The total fund was apportioned over the state at $1.32 per capita. As we have said before that our common school fund principal is increased by justice of the peace fines, the majority of our justices are not turning in their fines or reporting on the first Monday in January or July as the law requires. We hope this gentle hint will suffice, if not, the proper authority will be obliged to know why fines or reports are not forthcoming.

FACTS RELATING TO MORTGAGE EXEMPTION UPON REAL ESTATE.

Any person being indebted in any sum secured by mortgage upon real estate may have the amount of such mortgage indebtedness not exceeding seven hundred dollars, existing and unpaid upon the first day of April of any year, deducted from the assessed valuation of mortgaged premises for the year. But no deduction will be allowed greater than one-half of such assessed valuation of said real estate.

Any person desiring to avail himself of the provisions of this act, must between the first day of March and the first day of May of each year, file with the auditor of the county a sworn statement of the amount of such mortgage unpaid on the first day of March of that year, giving the name and residence of the mortgagee, also name and residence of assignee or bonified owner or holder of such mortgage. Said affidavit must also state the record and page where such mortgage is recorded and a brief description of the real estate upon which said mortgage exists.

Last year we were obliged to throw out a number of affidavits on account of defects; many having the wrong property described, others that we don't find their names on our duplicates as real estate owners. Many affidavits were sent to us by mail and almost invaribly they did not give the record or page where recorded, therefore leaving us at a loss to know whether such mortgage really existed or not without considerable trouble to us in looking through a lot of records. By coming to the auditor's office and examining the assessor's books, you will get the name and description as it will appear on our tax duplicate.

We give to the public these foregoing facts, that those persons wishing to avail themselves, the information we here give will enable them to do so intelligently and properly. Do not wait until the last few days of tax paying before you file your affidavits but come early and avoid the rush.

Tax-payers will please bear in mind that under the new existing laws this office is very much crowded with work and that we will invaribly call for the Tax duplicates from the treasurer directly after the FIRST MONDAY in MAY and immediately after the FIRST MONDAY in NOVEMBER so we may get our reports and settlements out in time as the law requires.

We hope that these few items of information will be of interest and benefit to the tax-payers of the county.

Respectfully submitted,
FRANK P. SEILER,
Auditor.

Auburn, Ind., January 30, 1900.

Club Notes.

The L. L. C. was entertained by Mrs Geo. Schaab and Mrs. James E. Rose. Saturday, afternoon at the home of the former, on South Main Street. The entire program was carried out as printed and proved a very interesting one. "In Nature's Workshop," by Mrs. Husselman was a pleasing paper and enjoyed by all. "Our Two Most Honored Poets," was a finely arranged paper by Mrs Olds, who was unable to be present, but sent her work which was read by Mrs. Nettie Eckhart. Mrs. Olds decided in her judgment after careful study, Longfellow and Lowell were the two considered. A discussion followed, in which several of the members good-naturedly disagreed with Mrs. Olds, but concluded that, perhaps, if they were better acquainted with Lowell's works they might accept her decision. "Some American Illustrations," was a timely subject given by Mrs. Ralston, and many things were learned about the making of the pictures in our magazines. "The Peace Conference at the Hague," was written by Mrs. Maud Robbins, but was read by Mrs Lackey This was full of information, very carefully arranged and many things made plain. A discussion was followed by current events.

The hostess of the day had invited the club to remain to tea, but had a pleasant surprise in store for them when other guests began to appear about 5 o'lock, to the number of a dozen or more. A very pleasant social time was enjoyed after which the guests were invited to partake of an excellent luncheon in three courses. It is not necessary to say that all enjoyed it for the disappearance of the viands testified to that.

The favors were carnations.

It was only known to a few that this occasion was the 20th anniversary of Mrs. Schaab's wedding day. Those who did, wished her many happy returns of the anniversary.

The thanks of the club are due Mrs. Schaab and Mrs. Rose for a very pleasant afternoon.

The club meets with Mrs. Emanuel next Saturday.

Notice of Final Settlement.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate and will of Elizabeth Reinoehl, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb circuit court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 5th day of March 1900, and show cause, if any, why my final settlement accounts with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested, are notified to then and there appear and make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares

Witness my name this 31st day of January 1900.

SOLOMON REINOEHL,
Administrator.

Shelby County Troubles.

The grand jury of Shelby county is loaded for bear and has bagged some big game. Two of the county commissioners are under indictment, and one of them was arrested for coming into court drunk. The deputy auditor is under arrest for getting allowed a fraudulent bill of $80. The ex-treasurer stands charged with collecting two fraudulent bills, one of $700 and the other of $1000, and more recently of stealing a book containing that part of his records. The ex-sheriff is charged with collecting $328 not due him. And best of all, there is the sweet-scented Geo. M. Ray, who victimized so many township trustees, including some in DeKalb county. They charge him with collecting off the county a printing bill of over $2,000 for work he did not do. He has conducted the Shelbyville Democrat most of the time since the death of his brother, Scott Ray. Other men, such as painters, etc, are being pulled up for cheating the county on contracts.

Just a Rumor, But True.

There is a well founded rumor that another very worthy young man of St. Mary's, Ohio is to carry off a desirable Auburn young lady in the near future. We would tell who it is to be, but that might make Mattie Shearer mad. We are not acquainted with the lucky young man, Newton Cavault, but are told he is worthy of her. If this thing keeps on, Auburn is going to get Oom Paul Kruger with a lot of his saintly troopers to keep the young men of St. Mary's at a distance.

The Coming Concert.

The Third Anual Concert will be given by the Auburn Band at Henry's opera house Friday evening February 9. The boys have been working hard preparing new selections fo this occasion. The new music is "catchy" and "pleasing." Every seat in the opera house should be filled for the event. Tickets on sale at usual place and can also be had from solicitors who will try to see one and all. Give the Band your hearty support, they certainly deserve it.

Remembered His Home.

Just before Gen. Lawton set out on the last expedition, the one that resulted in his death, he directed that a small, ancient cannon he had captured on the long expedition to the north, should be sent to the city of Fort Wayne, his old home city. He also had captured a chair used to execute criminals or for Spanish torture, and from one of the massive legs, he had a gavel made and that was to be sent to his old G. A. R post, Bion S. Bass Post at Fort Wayne. Both gifts will be received soon.

PURE FOODS.

Rules of The Indiana State Board of Health, According to Chapter CXXI, Acts of 1899, Establishing Minimum Standards and Defining Specific Adulterations of Foods and Drugs. Passed Oct. 13, 1899.

MILK.

RULE 1. Pure cow's milk shall have the following minimum compositions: Fat, 3 per cent.; solids, not fat, 9 per cent.

RULE 2. Water existing in cow's milk in excess of 88 per cent. shall be an adulteration. Any coloring matter added, for any purpose whatsoever, shall be an adulteration. Any chemical antiseptic whatever, added for any purpose whatsoever, shall be an adulteration.

RULE 3. Milk sold or offered for human consumption taken from a cow that has calved within four (4) days, or from a cow that will come to or calve inside of twenty-one (21) days, is polluted, and shall be considered adulterated.

RULE 4. Milk sold or offered for human consumption that is taken from a cow fed with damaged food, or any food which will impart a disagreeable flavor, is impure, and shall be considered as adulterated.

RULE 5. Milk sold or offered for human consumption that is taken from a sick or diseased cow, or any cow that is given polluted water to drink, or which is kept under conditions contrary to the rules of the State Board of Health governing dairies, is impure, and shall be considered as adulterated.

BUTTER.

RULE 6. The word "butter" shall mean the substance usually known as butter, made exclusively from milk or cream, with or without salt or coloring matter, and shall contain not less than 80 per cent of pure milk fats.

RULE 7. If any of the following named substances are found in butter, they shall be considered as adulterants: Water in excess of 15 per cent; salt in excess of 4 per cent; salicylic acid, borax, boric acid, saltpeter, formaldehyde, glucose, sodium carbonate or bicarbonate, or any other added chemical, or any other fat than butter fat, any other coloring matter than is natural to butter, except annatto, saffron, safflower, turmeric and harmless coal tar colors.

MARGARINE.

RULE 8. The word "margarine" shall mean all substances, whether compounds or otherwise, prepared in imitation of butter, and whether mixed with butter or not,

RULE 9. If any of the following named substances are found in margarine, they shall be considered adulterants: Water in excess of 15 per cent; salt in excess of 6 per cent; glucose, paraffine, salicylic acid, borax, boric acid, saltpeter, formaldehyde, sodium carbonate or bicarbonate, or any chemical preservative. Any coloring matter or mixture of coloring matters other than annatto, saffron, safflower and turmeric and other harmless vegetable colors, and the harmless coal tar colors, shall be considered adulterants.

CHEESE.

RULE 10. Cheese not made wholly from milk or cream, salt and harmless coloring matter shall be considered adulterated.

RULE 11. Cheese containing less than 10 per cent of milk fats shall be considered adulterated unless plainly labeled "skim milk cheese" in letters not less than one inch long, the label to be plainly exposed.

RULE 12 Cheese containing any other fats than milk fats shall be considered adulterated unless plainly labeled "Filled Cheese."

RULE 13. Cheese containing any coloring other than annnatto, saffron, safflower, turmeric or harmless coal tar colors, shall be considered as adulterated.

RULE 14. Cheese containing any chemical antiseptic other than common salt shall be considered adulterated, unless plainly labeled with the name of the antiseptic it contains.

RULE 15. Any article of food, as catsup, mince meat, canned meats or fish, canned vegetables, canned soups, canned fruits, molasses, or syrups, which are found to be preserved by or to contain salicylic acid, benzoic acid, boracic acid, formaldehyde or any of their compounds or any of their antiseptics, shall be considered adulterated unless the article of food so preserved is plainly labeled with the name of the preservative or antiseptic added. The label announcing any article of food, of the class in this rule named, as preserved with any antiseptic shall be printed in plain type, either upon the original or a separate label, and it shall be firmly and securely attached on the exterior of the package, and in plain sight. This rule shall be in force and take effect Oocober 1, 1900.

RULE 16. Coffee.—Any article offered for sale as coffee, which contains any substitute for the coffee bean in any proportion, shall be considered as adulterated unless the quantity and kind of such substitute is given as part of the label.

RULE 17. Candy.—Any candy containing terra alba, barytes, talc, or other mineral substance, or poisonous colors or flavors, or any ingredient deleterious to health, shall be considered as adulterated.

RULE 18. Cider.—Cider is the unfermented juice of the apple. Any substitute for apple juice or any antiseptic added constitutes an adulteration, and such adulterated cider shall not be offered for sale unless each package is labeled and the name of the adulterant is made a part of the label.

RULE 19. Flour.—Flour is defined as the fine and bolted meal of the wheat grain. Any flour that is mixed with the product of any grain except wheat, or is mixed with any mineral substance, shall be considered as adulterated, unless each package is labeled and the kind and the amount of the admixture is made part of the label.

RULE 20. Buckwheat and Rye Flour.—Buckwheat and rye flour must be derived wholly from grains designated in the name, and any admixture of other flours or materials constitutes an adulteration, unless each package is labeled and the kind and amount of such admixture is made part of the label.

RULE 21. Fruit jellies, fruit butters, preserves, canned fruit, fruit conserves, confections, fruit juices and syrups, etc., must consist of the fruit specified in the label, preserved only with cane sugar (sucrose), and must not contain artificial flavors, coloring matters or antiseptics. If such articles contain any substitute for the fruit, or any inferior material to make up bulk or weight, any glucose or other substitute for sugar, any artificial flavor, color or antiseptic, or any substance not naturally occurring in such fruits, except spices or other wholesome natural flavoring materials, they shall be considered adulterated, and shall not be offered for sale unless the presence of all such substances is clearly indicated by the the label. This rule shall be in force and take effect October 1, 1900.

RULE 22. Honey.—Honey is the nectar of flowers and other saccharine exudations of plants gathered by bees. Honey made by feeding bees glucose, sugar, invert sugar, or other saccharine substance, is declared not to be pure honey, and, therefore, is adulterated. Adding sugar, invert sugar or glucose to honey, constitutes an adulteration, and such adulterated honey shall not be sold unless the quantity and name of the adulterant is made part of the label.

RULE 23. Lard.—Lard is the fat of swine, the fat being melted and separated from the flesh. Adding beef fat or stearine, cotton seed oil, paraffine or other substitute for swine fat constitutes an adulteration, and such adulterated lard shall not be sold unless labeled and the quantity and name of the adulterant is made part of the label.

RULE 24. Molasses and Syrups.—All molasses and syrups are assumed to be made from the juice of cane or other sugar producing plant, or the sap of the maple tree, and any syrup or molasses containing starch sugar, glucose or corn syrup shall be considered adulterated, and any substance sold or offered for sale as "maple sugar or syrup" that shall contain any brown sugar, granulated sugar or loaf sugar or colored or flavored with decoction of hickory bark, corncobs or any other similar substances. shall be considered adulterated, unless the label plainly indicates the substances used.

RULE 25. Olive oil is the expressed oil of the olive. The substitution of other oils or fats for olive oil, either in part or whole, constitutes an adulteration, and such adulterated oil shall not be offered for sale unless labeled with the amount and kind of the adulterant.

RULE 26. Spices, mustard, pepper, etc., must not contain any foreign substances or coloring matter, introduced to dilute or cheapen the article, and any such admixture constitutes an adulteration, and shall not be sold unless its kind and amount are indicated on the label.

RULE 27. Tea.—Tea consists of the dried leaves of the true tea plant, without addition of artificial coloring matter, or filler, or extraction of any essential properties, and any article offered as tea which does not conform to this definition is considered adulterated, and shall not be offered for sale unless its true composition is given as part of the label.

RULE 28. Vinegar.—Standard vinegar is a vinegar made from the juice of the apple, containing not less than two per cent. of apple solids and four per cent. acetic acid. All vinegars labeled "apple," "cider," "fruit," or "orchard" vinegars are assumed under the law to be standard vinegars. Vinegars not made of the juice of the apple must be labeled truly of what they are made, as "malt vinegar," "distilled vinegar" or "wine vinegar." Otherwise they are to be considered adulterated. If artificial coloring matter is used, this must be stated on each and every label. Vinegars to which other acids than acetic acid have been added are adulterated. Vinegars containing less than 4 per cent. absolute acetic acid may be sold, provided the percentage of acetic acid is made part of the label.

RULE 29. Baking Powders.—It shall be unlawful for any unwholesome or deleterious baking powder to be sold or offered for sale within the State of Indiana.

RULE 30. Wines, Brandies, Whiskeys.—The standards and methods of examination of the United States Pharmacopoeia governing wines, brandies and whiskeys shall be the standards and methods of examination of wines, brandies and whiskeys in the State of Indiana.

RULE 31. Food Inspectors, when securing samples of food or drugs for analysis, shall, if the quantity procured be sufficient in amount, divide said sample into three equal parts, making each one with date of collection, name and residence of vendor, name and residence of Inspector, and shall number the several portions 1, 2, 3. No. 1 shall be left with the vendor, No. 2 retained by the inspector, and No. 3 reserved for or sent to the chemist to make analysis. All these samples or portions shall be so sealed as to show upon sight any breaking of said seal.

RULE 32. Whosoever violates any of the provisions of these rules shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding one hundred dollars, as is provided in section 2, Chapter CXXI, of an act approved February 28, 1899.

Pepsin Syrup Co., Monticello, Ill.

GENTLEMEN:—For about 10 years I was affected with Constipation, Indigestion and Stomach and Bowel trouble. I tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and soon found relief. After using one fifty-cent bottle I am now well and can eat anything that comes on the table without suffering pain and distress in my stomach, and I can cheerfully recommend it to anyone that has any bowell or stomach trouble. If you are afflicted try it and you will be convinced. Very truly yours, C. K. SLONNEGER. For sale by H. B. McCord.

The former military camp at Montauk Point, which a few months ago was alive with American soldiers, is now only a wild waste.

W. L. Yancy, Paducah, Ky., writes "I had a severe case of kidney disease and three of the best physicians in southern Kentucky treated me without success. I was induced to try Foley's Kidney Cure. The first bottle gave me immediate relief and three bottles cured me permanently. I gladly recommend this wonderful remedy.

The Congregational churches of South Carolina, composed of colored people, have formed a state association.

—Miss Dorothy Husselman left today for Lima, O., to spend a few weeks with the families of Jos. McKay and Mrs. Ethel Longsworth.

—For the next thirty days Culbertson & Boland will sell you an 800 pounds scale for the extremely low price of $9. Call and examine them.

—To all points in competition where the fare is $2 or more we have free bus and free baggage to the Junction. tf SPROTT & KNAPP, Agency B. & O. Ry.

—Eldon S. Baker, a Fort Wayne printer, has been appointed to a $1,200 position in the census department of the interior. The place was secured for Mr. Baker by Congressman Robinson.

—On the first of the present month there were 803 inmates at the Michigan City prison, showing an increase. This is due to the transfer of a number of prisoners from the reformatory at Jeffersonville.

—Sprott & Knapp have money to loan on farm or town property for five years at 6 percent annual interest, with privilege of partial payments. Come in and we will tell you all about it. Do you want an abstract showing title to your land or lot? We have them. tf

—Two traveling men who attended the M. E. Church last evening paid Miss Flora Hoffman a flattering compliment, saying she handled the organ with better taste and expression than is often seen, even in the larger cities. Traveling men as a rule are not slow to express themselves, and the gentlemen in question were evidently men of good judgment.

BUTLER.

Rev. McCloe's revival closed last Sunday night. It was quite successful.

Lizzie Champion is enjoying a prolonged visit among her brothers in Steuben county.

Mike Keenan, a well-known citizen and a former Lake Shore section foreman is very sick.

The bicycle factory is still running over time. The output promises to be the largest in its history.

Jacob Stout is reported to be getting better. Himself and family have had a long and severe affliction.

Daniel Fry living two and one-half miles soutneast of Butler, is in very poor health. We believe he is eighty-one years old.

A great many of our prosperous farmers in this vicinity will erect substantial houses or barns the coming spring and summer.

Aden Harn met with an accident at the bicycle factory one day last week. He got his hand too near a buzz saw and had it severely lacerated.

Mrs. McMarlin, who lived with her son Charles, since her husband's death a few months ago, died last week and was interred in Coldwater, Mich.

Geo. Drew, living southeast of Butler is having serious trouble. His last wife has taken it into her head to row her own canoe. So George is disconsolate. There are no children to cry.

Reports are going the rounds that smallpox has broken out in the south part of the county, yet we do not know that the report is true. If true the public ought to be apprised of the fact to guard against possible contact with it.

The canning factory company are struggling to clear themselves from the Curtis defalcation and get on their feet again. A new company is about to be organized to take the plant and run it on business principles, and we think they will succeed.

A sad and fatal accident occurred at the basket factory last week. Harry Reese, a son of George Reese, about 18 years old, fell into a vat of boiling water. At first it was thought he would recover, but his injuries proved fatal a couple of days afterwards. His funeral took place last Sunday. He was a bright young man, well respected by all who knew him.

Howard Gunsenhouser, a young man about seventeen, son of George Gunsenhouser, living in the south part of Stafford township, met with a fatal accident a few days since. He was assisting Mr. Wilson in cutting down a tree. The tree fell in a different direction from that intended, when a limb struck him on the head, rendering him unconscious. Mr. Wilson hastily conveyed him to his home where he rallied and seemed to be slightly injured. A relapse soon followed and after four days death ensued. He was a bright and promising young man and his early and untimely death is deeply deplored by his parents and many friends.

—Obe Leas of Waterloo was here yesterday an put his subscription up into the 1900 list. Although a heavy loser by the fire, that destroyed their hay barn, he is still heavily engaged in the hay business being here that day to see about some shipments.

—Three petitions in bankruptcy were filed in the United States court at Fort Wayne yesterday. The petitioners were Lewis H. Clevinger, hardware merchant, Larwill; James Kannel, grocery clerk, Angola; Clyde B. Ullery, locomotive fireman, Garrett.

—Human hair switches, bangs and waves made to order from your own hair. I also furnish hair to parties desiring at the lowest price. Mail orders, receive prompt and careful attention. Mrs. Valeria Zimmer, three blocks north of Farmers bank Auburn. Ind. 4tf

—The Michigan City prison board has issued an order authorizing the warden to exclude all visitors from the prison in order to guard against the introduction of smallpox into the institution. The board also paroled seven prisoners out of a list of 40 convicts who asked for release.

—Unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice week ending February 3, 1900. Miss Lizzie Byems, Miss Susie Barber, Stephen Shatver, Amos Walker, John Stuckman and Elmer Stuckman. Claimants will please call for letters in advertised list. J. H. FORKNER, Postmaster.

—It was a mistake about Geo. Pierson neglecting his wife. His neighbors say he did all he could for her in her sickness. We cannot say how the story originated, but we first found it in some exchanges. We are sorry to have been misled in such a matter. Mrs Pierson was buried today.

—Dr. W. H. Nusbaum, of Auburn, is practicing charity. He has 100 silver dollars which he says he don't need and can get along without, so he has appointed three ladies to distribute the money to those who are in need of shoes or clothing or food. There is evidently a good deal of humanity in Dr. Nusbaum.—Goshen Democrat.

OBITUARY.

Abraham Krabill was born May 26, 1823, at Kircheim, Greenstown county, Rhine Bavaria, Germany. He emigrated to the United States in 1846, and located near Cleveland, O., from thence he removed to Ashland county, O., where he was united in marriage to Mary Sayler. To this union were born seven children, three sons and four daughters. His wife and two daughters have preceded him to the spirit world. He with his family removed to DeKalb county, Indiana, in 1863, and settled on a farm in Concord township where he resided until his death. He was a true and faithful member of the German Baptist church, firm and conscientious in his beliefs, a loyal friend, a most kind and just father, noten for his sterling honesty and integrity, and universally beloved and respected by his neighbors. He welcomed death as a relief from his sufferings. His last words were, "I an ready to die." He departed this life Thursday, February 1, 1900, aged 76 years, 8 months and 5 days. Funeral from the St. Joe Lutheran church, Rev. John Stafford officiating. Interment in the St. Joe cemetery.

ST. JOE.

Funeral of Abraham Kraybill Saturday; interment at Riverside cemetery, St. Joe.

Funeral of Jacob DeMott at his late residence; interment in the Coleunton cemetery.

Charles Widney has been on the sick list for several days, but is much better now.

Samuel Kraybill of Delphi attended his father's funeral on Saturday. He will return to his home Wednesday.

G. W. Woodcox and Wes Hart were at the Hub Saturday, the former on business connected with the estate of James Ryan, the latter to procure the necessary papers for John Hart and Miss Myers, to be made one.

George Hamm has been busy the past few days gathering his annual crop of ice. It is said that the quality is of the best.

Our item of last week in regard to the sale of L. S. Saylor's farm was a little premature as we understand the bargain has been declared off for the present.

The cord and half of wood we saw unloaded in front of the COURIER office last Saturday brought to mind some of the one and one-half cords we have bought, a little shy at one end.

It is said that O. H. Widney contemplates the building of a business block and town hall this spring. Mr. Widney has the means and we cannot help but think that it would be a good investment.

The News says that a very silent set of men supposed to be surveyors, staid all night at the Bartell Hotel one night last week and it is surmised that they were in the interest of some electric railroad. Perhaps that is what they were after, but we imagine they were surveying for a sidewalk to the depot. Wouldn't our city dads open their eyes to get up some morning and find a fine new walk without money and without price.

Sam Warner has the contract for the brick work on the business block and town hall which is to be built early in the spring.

Rev. Fairfield of Angola preached the funeral sermon of Jacob Dermott.

S. C. Baker is said to be dangerously sick; he is at the home of Byron Widney.

The services at the Lutheran church closed Sunday evening. Results. two accessions to the church.

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE EARTH.

An Important Record of the Week As Told by the Telegraph—Latest from Foreign Shores—Crimes, Casualties, Fires, Etc.

Two Lives Lost.

Sister Stanislous, a teacher, and Mary Foley, a pupil, lost their lives as a result of a fire which destroyed the parochial school of St. Lawrence O'Toole's Catholic parish, St. Louis, Mo. There were 200 pupils and twelve sisters in the school building, a four-story structure, when the flames broke out.

When the first alarm of fire was given, the teachers hastily marshalled their little charges and marched them to a street. Sister Stanislous had got all those under her immediate care to the street except Mary Foley, and before they could escape, they were overcome by smoke. A fireman found the two bodies on the fourth floor and carried them to the open air. While awaiting an ambulance to take them to the city hospital the two sufferers died.

A Head-End Collision.

A terrible head-end collison occurred on the Wabash Railroad two miles west of Peru, Ind. In some unknown way the throttle of a big Mogul engine was thrown open, and it dashed out of town carrying before it a dead engine. While going at the rate of fifty miles an hour on a sharp grade, it met an east-bound fast freight heavily loaded, and seven freight cars were smashed to splinters. Two cars next to the engine loaded with whisky caught fire, and soon all seven cars were in flames, burning so fiercely that the light could be seen ten miles away. Engineer Biskel and Fireman Bromfield jumped and escaped with severe bruises. The loss is fully $20,000. Traffic was delayed several hours.

Swept by Flames.

The greatest event that has occurred in Honolulu since the overthrow of the monarchy in 1893 took place January 20, when a fire, started in Chinatown for the purpose of destroying one or two infected buildings, got beyond control of the fire department. Fifteen blocks of buildings were destroyed before the fire was under control, but as all were in the infected Chinese and Japanese quarter between Nuuanu street and Nuuanu stream, the conflagration was considered a blessing to the community, though the property loss amounted to $3,000,000 approximately.

Buller Will Try It Again.

London special: When the nation had almost resigned itself to the fall of Ladysmith, there comes from all quarters an indication that Gen. Buller will make another attempt to relieve the besieged place. He still holds the Tugela drifts and will possibly renew his attempt to force his way through the Boer defenses before long. In any case Ladysmith is capable of holding out for a considerable time.

Thought It an Earthquake.

Detroit (Mich.) special: A dynamite explosion in a stone quarry at Wyandotte, twelve miles down the river, caused much excitement in this city. The earth was convulsed and buildings were shaken, causing residents to believe there was an earthquake. Newspaper offices and the police stations were deluged with inquiries until the truth became known. One man was killed in the explosion.

Wiped Out by Fire.

The little village of Morristown, ten miles west of Faribault, Minn., was nearly wiped out of existence by fire. Twenty-three business firms were burned out and two blocks and a half are in ashes. The only means of fighting the fire was by a bucket brigade. The loss is $40,000; insurance one-half that amount.

Vaccination Decision.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has held that during an epidemic of smallpox, municipal authorities, acting on an order from the State Board of Health, have the authority to compel children in the public schools to submit to vaccination or stay at home until the epidemic has passed.

Big Fire at Muncie.

The livery barn of Boore & Munshower, Muncie, Ind., burned to the ground. Cecil Weekly, a cab driver, was burned to death, and forty-seven horses also perished. Adjoining buildings were damaged by falling walls. Loss unknown, but it is heavy.

The Crew Lost.

A dispatch from Margate, England, says: An unknown Norwegian bark is a total wreck off here. The crew of fifteen are believed drowned.

Americans Enlist.

A special dispatch from Cape Town says 150 American scouts, who arrived there as muleteers, have enlisted in the British force.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.
Feb. 12.—"Secret Service."

Slain in Ambush.

Manila special: A scouting party of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, while operating near Subig, was ambushed by insurgents. A Lieutenant and three privates were killed and two or three privates wounded. A company some distance in the rear, hearing the firing, hurried to the scene and recovered the bodies.

Torpedo Boat Turrell Lost.

A dispatch from Corunna, Spain, states that it is reported from Cape Finisterre that the French torpedo boat Turrell has been lost with all hands.

Kill Two of a Gang.

Three men, equipped for safe-blowing, fell victims to the revolver aim of the Quincy, Ill., police. Two were killed and the third wounded and made prisoner, but not until a running battle had been waged through the lobbies and up and down stairways of the Moecker Hotel.

Extensive Fire Loss in St. Louis.

In St. Louis fire destroyed a four-story building occupied by the Missouri Tent and Awning Company. An official of the company estimated the total value of the building, stock and machinery at $120,000, fully covered by insurance. The Calumet building was damaged $200,000.

GOEBEL TAKES OATH

Sworn in Governor of Kentucky While Fighting Death.

MILITIA IN CONTROL.

Legislature Adjourned and Soldiers Stationed at the Capitol.

Democratic Majority Declares Victim of Assassin's Bullet Elected to the Executive Chair—Governor Taylor Refuses to Recognize the Action as Legal, and Threatens Members with Arrest—Situation One of Peril—Stirring Times in Frankfort.

Two Governors, and armed soldiers holding the balance of power between them. That was the situation in Frankfort, the capital of Kentucky, Thursday. The soldiers themselves were in a quandary as to what they should do, or who they should obey. While all the officers are Republicans, many of them said they had no intention of resisting the legal Governor of Kentucky, provided they were once satisfied who the individual is.

William Goebel, fighting death in his room at the Capitol Hotel at Frankfort, a martyr to his political ambition, was given the oath of office as Governor by Chief Justice Hazelrigg at 9 o'clock Wednesday evening. The oath was administered to him as the result of the action of the Democratic members of the Legislature, who signed a resolution declaring Mr. Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham the rightful executive officers of the commonwealth. This resolution was formally adopted, it is asserted, in secret meeting.

Gov. Taylor made the declaration that a state of insurrection prevails in Kentucky, and especially at the capital, and adjourned the General Assembly, to meet at London, a town in one of the mountain counties, where the Republicans are in the majority. The Republican members, acknowledging his authority, started there. The Democratic members of the Legislature, who are in the majority, met Wednesday night in the Capitol Hotel, and there declared Goebel the Governor and Beckham Lieutenant Governor of the State. These men were sworn in at once by the chief justice of the Court of Appeals. Propped up in his bed Mr. Goebel took the oath of office and immediately signed a proclamation disbanding the militia gathered there under Gov. Taylor's orders. He also appointed Brig. Gen. John B. Castleman, U. S. V., retired, adjutant general to take charge of the army. As a result of this action warrants were prepared for the arrest of the Democratic legislators participating in it on the charge of treason.

The plan to make Goebel Governor was set in motion early Wednesday afternoon. A statement was prepared saying that the boards which had heard the contests for Governor and Lieutenant Governor had decided in favor of Goebel and Beckham, that the boards intended to report their findings to the Legislature, but that they had been prevented from so doing by the action of Gov. Taylor in declaring the Legislature adjourned. The statement then goes on to say that the members of the Legislature were driven from place to place by the militia and threatened with arrest whenever they attempted to hold a meeting. It was declared the belief of all the signers of the statement that Goebel and Beckham were the legally elected Governor and Lieutenant Governor, and each man, as he signed the paper, announced that he voted for the adoption of the majority report of the contest board, which declared Goebel and Beckham the men rightfully entitled to the office.

As soon as this document had been signed by the lawmakers word was sent to the residence of Chief Justice Hazelrigg of the Court of Appeals. He came at once to the Capitol Hotel, passed directly upstairs to the room of Mr. Goebel and administered the oath of office.

The contest between the two men, each claiming full legal powers as Governor of the State, seemed to have reached its climax. At the end of the most eventful day in Kentucky's history, saving perhaps only the days at the outbreak of the civil war, the issues were so sharply drawn that open conflict and bloodshed, if not a real internal war, seemed unavoidable.

Shooting of Goebel.

At Frankfort, Ky., Senator Goebel, contestant for the position now occupied by Gov. Taylor, was shot and seriously wounded at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning. John Whittaker, a farmer of Butler County, was arrested, charged with the crime. Mr. Goebel was walking up the sidewalk leading to the Senate when a man in the second story of the building immediately to the east of the capitol fired upon him. Five shots were fired and Mr. Goebel fell to the ground, writhing with pain. He was at once carried to a hotel. The bullet struck Senator Goebel in the right side, passed through the body, coming out below the shoulder blade, and when the news was first sent out it was declared that the Senator had been instantly killed by this one shot.

TOWN OF LONDON.

Mountain Village to Which Gov. Taylor Adjourned the Legislature.

London is a thriving little mountain town in southeastern Kentucky. It has perhaps 800 inhabitants, with a couple of hotels, several churches and good schools. It is about 180 miles from Louisville, on the Knoxville branch of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and is thirty or forty miles from Jellico, Tenn. London is the county seat of Laurel, one of the strongest Republican counties in the State and the whole section is Republican and bitterly partisan at all times and under all circumstances.

The town of London is on the top divide of the famous Laurel coal fields and has been a place of more or less note for many years. It was founded about the beginning of the present century by Gen. Peter Jackson, who went to Kentucky from Virginia with all his great wealth. He gave the land for the site of the city to the county of Laurel, but as the county was not financially able to build the court house and other necessary buildings Gen. Jackson proposed that the county deed him back the town site and he would erect the necessary buildings, which was accordingly done. He burned his own brick and built the first brick house ever erected in eastern Kentucky, it being the old court house of Laurel County, which was torn down several years ago and a new one built in its place. London is now one of the most enterprising and delightful towns in eastern Kentucky. The inhabitants are for the most part mountaineers of the best class. They engage in the mercantile business on a much larger scale than a city business man would suppose and there is a great deal of jobbing done.

BY STRICT PARTY VOTE.

Goebel and Beckham Declared Elected by Contesting Boards.

While William Goebel lay at the point of death in his room, as the result of an assassin's bullet, the contesting boards, which for two weeks had been listening to the evidence in his contest for the GOVERNOR'S MANSION, FRANKFORT.

Governor's chair, declared him entitled to the seat. The boards having in charge the contests between Goebel and Taylor, for Governor, and Peckham and Marshall for Lieutenant Governor, met at 7 o'clock Tuesday night in the City Hall to consider the evidence submitted to them and prepare their report to the Legislature. A few legal authorities were read to them. The vote was then taken, and by a strict party vote of ten to one, William Goebel was declared to have been legally elected Governor of Kentucky. The Peckham-Marshall contest was then voted upon, and a strict party vote of nine to two settled this matter.

NO FEDERAL INTERFERENCE.

Troops Will Not Be Sent to Frankfort Unless Necessary.

Washington dispatches Thursday stated that no interference by the Federal authorities in the Kentucky troubles was looked for by the officials, at least not so long as the State authorities could control the situation. If, however, the situation should become so serious that the State authorities are unable to deal with it, and should call upon the Federal Government for assistance to suppress the disorder, troops would, of course, be sent. But this would only be done as a last resort and upon the representations of the State officials that they had exhausted all their resources and were powerless to cope with the situation. This view of the case is given by an administration official, and may be taken as an expression by the administration.

A member of the cabinet who conferred with President McKinley Wednesday pointed out afterward that the Constitution of the United States, section 4, article 4, says:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened), against domestic violence.

SAYS HE SHOT GOEBEL.

James Sutton Arrested Because of His Boast.

James Sutton, sheriff of Whitley County, who went to Louisville from Frankfort, was arrested and placed in the county jail. At the Victoria hotel Sutton went up to the office of the clerk, brandishing two revolvers. "I am the man who shot Goebel," he said, "and I will never be taken alive." The hotel manager promptly sent for the police, and on the appearance of the later Sutton ran upstairs to the third story, and when he thought he was about to be captured opened a window and leaped out. He alighted on his feet, was uninjured and ran nearly a mile before he was arrested. The police believe that Sutton is either unbalanced mentally or that he knows who shot Goebel.

GOEBEL'S PROCLAMATION.

Following is the text of the proclamation issued by Gov. Goebel immediately after he had taken the oath of office:

Whereas, It has been made known to me that certain persons, without authority of law, have banded themselves together for the unlawful purpose of forcibly preventing the General Assembly of Kentucky from assembling and discharging their official duties at the seat of government, and have for said unlawful purpose assembled in the city of Frankfort the First and Second Regiments of the Kentucky State Guard, and by force of arms have unlawfully taken possession of the hall of the House of Representatives and the Senate Chamber of the State of Kentucky, as well as all other public buildings and archives of the Commonwealth, and have by force, intimidation and violence expelled the General Assembly from the capitol building and refused to permit the Senate and House of Representatives to hold their sessions therein, and are now terrorizing the representatives of the people and other good citizens of the Commonwealth; now, therefore, I, William Goebel, Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby command the said First and Second Regiments of the Kentucky State Guard and each and every officer and member thereof to return to their homes and several avocations and there remain until lawfully called into active service.

I also command all other persons whatsoever who are now unlawfully engaged in interfering with and intimidating members of the General Assembly of this Commonwealth to disband and desist from terrorizing and intimidating the said members of the General Assembly and all other good citizens of this Commonwealth.

Given under my hand as Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, at Frankfort, Ky., this 31st day of January, 1900.

TAYLOR'S ISSUES ADDRESS.

Gives Reasons for Adjourning Legislature to Meet in London.

Gov. Taylor Wednesday afternoon issued the following address to the people:

To the People of Kentucky: The most lamentable condition of affairs ever experienced by our people has rendered prompt action on the part of the chief executive of the State absolutely necessary.

A long series of unprecedented and unlawful acts practiced by those in charge of the legislative interests of the State has culminated in the most fearful condition of the period to the State. The dreadful tragedy which occurred yesterday shocked and startled all, and can be no more sincerely deplored by anyone than myself.

To attempt to legislate under such conditions of excitement and threatened violence as now prevails in Frankfort would be sheer madness, and I have, therefore, in the exercise of my constitutional powers adjourned the Legislature to convene in London, Ky., on Feb. 6.

I have taken every precaution to preserve the peace, that every citizen may know that life and property are safe, and will be protected with every resource of the Commonwealth. I trust that in this laudable effort I will have the support of every law-abiding citizen of Kentucky.

The proclamation issued by Gov. Taylor adjourning the Legislature is as follows:

To the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

Whereas, A state of insurrection now prevails in the State of Kentucky, and especially in Frankfort, the capital thereof, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution of Kentucky, I do hereby, by this proclamation, adjourn at once the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky to meet at London, Laurel County, Ky., Tuesday the 6th day of February, 1900, at 12 o'clock m. Given under my hand at Frankfort, Ky., this 30th day of January, 1900, at 9 o'clock p. m.

W. S. TAYLOR,
Governor of Kentucky.

The Democratic members of the Legislature issued the following statement:

The proclamation of Taylor is unwarranted in fact and in law. There is no insurrection, unless the presence of the militia and what they are doing constitutes an insurrection. But if an insurrection did exist, the Governor has no power to adjourn the General Assembly on that account or any other, except where the two houses fail to agree on adjournment.

GOEBEL'S CAREER.

A Typical Kentucky Politician and Loyal to His Friends.

William Goebel as a politician may be said, in the picture phrase of old, to have sprung from the soil. Goebel is a Kentucky type, and the minor facts that he was born in Pennsylvania and lived there the first four years of his life, before his parents took him to Covington, his home ever since, do not alter this greater fact that he is thoroughly representative of the State in which he has become his party's monarch.

Goebel secured his election to the State Senate nine years ago, and he has held the office of Senator ever since. He asked for no other elective office except that of appellate judge in his district until he announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Governor. The judgeship he could not secure, as the convention came to a deadlock and he was forced to withdraw, that being the only defeat registered against him. As Senator Mr. Goebel is credited with much important legislation. The present election law of Kentucky bears his name and was passed by his efforts two years ago. Railroad legislation has been one of his specialties, and a law for free public libraries was originated by him.

Outside of politics Mr. Goebel won a good name for himself in the practice of law. He is now in his fortieth year, but as much as ten years ago he was considered one of the leading lawyers of his part of Kentucky. The friends of Goebel regard him as a man who is as intensely loyal to his friends as he is implacable to his enemies. Even the enemies have little to say against him because of the shooting affair in which he killed Col. John Sanford fifteen years ago. The trouble between the two men arose over a bill which Mr. Goebel had passed reducing the tolls on bridges across the Ohio river. Col. Sanford was interested in one of these bridges. Bitter feeling was aroused. Both men went armed. One day they met on the steps of the bank in which Col. Sanford was cashier. The colonel made a movement as if to draw a revolver and in an instant Goebel had shot him dead. He pleaded self-defense and was acquitted.

STATE PENITENTIARY, FRANKFORT.
Place where the Democratic legislators sought to hold a session.

STATEMENT BY WHITTAKER.

Prisoner at Louisville Persists that He Is Innocent.

Harland Whittaker, who was suspected of having shot Senator Goebel and who was taken to Louisville from Frankfort, still persists in asserting his innocence and says he has no fear of the outcome of his trial. "I did not shoot Mr. Goebel," said he, "and never thought of doing so. I was there simply as a friend of Taylor to see with the others that he had justice done him. I was sitting in the statehouse when we heard the shots fired. Two other men were there and they were talking about insurance. One of them had a brown beard and if they will they can come forward and clear me. But I am not afraid, for I know I am innocent and that when the case comes up I will be cleared. They cannot convict an innocent man. They can't show where I shot at Mr. Goebel and all there is against me is that I had the pistols, but if they arrested everybody in Frankfort who was armed half the population would be in jail."

H. WHITTAKER.

Judges in Fear.

The Court of Appeals refused Wednesday to sit in the capitol building at Frankfort while the militia were in the city and indefinitely adjourned. One reason given for the adjournment is the fact that letters were received from Middlesboro Democrats stating that Appellate Judges Haselrigg and Hobson were also to have been killed.

WAR NEWS IN BRIEF.

Gen. Tucker has arrived at Cape Town.

Ladysmith advices say although the heat is intense, there is no increase in sickness.

Gen. Buller's order instructs the men to heed the white flag of the Boers only when they lay down their arms.

George W. Steevens, correspondent of the London Daily Mail at Ladysmith, died, a victim of enteric fever.

British complain that Boers used expansive and soft-nosed bullets at Oliver's Hoek road. The Boers deny the charge.

PARDON FOR REBELS.

FILIPINO WAR TO BE PROCLAIMED ENDED.

Amnesty to Be Offered All Insurgents Who Lay Down Their Arms—Disbanded "Insurrectos" Now Plundering Natives in Provincial Towns.

A Washington correspondent declares he has learned from official sources that the President intends to issue within the next thirty days his Philippine proclamation extending amnesty to the insurgents, and denouncing as outlaws and bandits all who do not avail themselves of its terms. This determination was reached after several conferences with the Secretary of War and other members of the cabinet.

The proclamation has not yet been drafted, but the general terms of its provisions have been fully discussed, and it is announced that it will contain a declaration of the end of the insurrection of the islands. This will be followed by a grant of amnesty to all insurgents who lay down their arms within a specified time. The time has not yet been decided upon, but the President believes sixty days sufficient, and this meets the approval of the Secretary of War.

The proclamation will declare that, owing to the termination of the insurrection, all persons who do not avail themselves of its terms within the time given will be treated as outlaws and bandits. For some time the President has had under consideration an announcement of the termination of the rebellion, but has been waiting for a complete disintegration of all the Filipino forces.

Reports from Gen. Otis do not show that any organized rebellion exists in the northern part of Luzon, and recent reports indicate that the only opposition found now is in the island south of Manila. Gen. Schwan has been sent to conquer the enemy in this section, and has been meeting with surprising success. He has pursued the insurgents without abatement, and has inflicted severe defeats in every engagement, and the American forces in Cavite and Batangas provinces have reduced the Filipino organizations to mere roving bands of only a few hundred men.

The campaign under Gen. Schwan is to be pushed with renewed vigor, and it is the intention of the President to issue his proclamation on the completion of the Schwan expedition. War Department officials are of the belief that Gen. Schwan will succeed in pacifying Cavite and Batangas provinces within a few weeks, and that Gen. Otis will be able to report the complete pacification of the islands within less than thirty days.

There is much comment among army officers about the absence of news regarding Aguinaldo, and it is believed by some that he may have succeeded in escaping from the island entirely. Gen. Otis has not mentioned him in any report since he was being pursued by Maj. March's battalion in the mountains toward Bayombong.

The War Department has received several cables from Gen. Otis confirming the belief that the insurgents have scattered throughout the country and are plundering the natives of the different towns.

PARLIAMENT IN SESSION.

England's Law Makers Convene for a Memorable Meeting.

The British Parliament assembled Tuesday for a session which will prove memorable in Britain's history. The members gathered at Westminster at an early hour. Speaker William Court Gully arrived at the House of Commons on time, and there was a large attendance of members. Before the opening of the session there was the usual inspection of the vaults for gunpowder, which formality has been observed since the days of Guy Fawkes.

Queen Victoria's address gives no hint of a desire for the war's end. She expresses grief over the great losses sustained, speaks of her pride for bravery of British soldiers and asks more money for continuance of the conflict.

Not since the Crimean war has Parliament met under similar circumstances. Not since the days of Parnell has there been as much excitement attending its assembling. There was bungling in the Crimean war, and for it the Aberdeen ministry was overthrown. There has been bungling in South Africa now, but unless signs fail the present ministry will stick out if it has to elect a new Parliament to do it. The Liberals found themselves stronger than since Gladstone's retirement, and, a correspondent asserts, if they had a leader knee high to Gladstone they could seize the opportunity. Rosebery would be the man, but he believes by waiting longer he will get all he wants without fighting for it, so he remains in half retirement.

Campbell-Bannerman is only an amiable figurehead. Sir Edward Grey is too young. Sir Charles Dilke was mixed in a scandal some time ago, and the nonconformists who are the backbone of the Liberal party won't walk on the same side of the street with him. It is Dilke, however, who will openly try to overthrow the Salisbury ministry. His resolution is couched in moderate terms. Bannerman, Asquith and Fowler are expected to support it on national grounds, disavowing partisan motives and demanding in the name of the country a ministry which will do something. In this way they hope to recruit from disgruntled Tories and Unionists enough to form a hostile majority. Should the attempt succeed, Salisbury will obtain an order of the Queen dissolving Parliament and calling a general election. It would be one of the most exciting elections in recent English history, but the ministry appealing to patriotism and waving the union jack would probably win. Should the ministry lose it would immediately resign.

The country, however, while indignant at bungling and lack of preparation, is not anxious to swap horses. They are afraid it would be taken to mean that the country was tired of the war and wanted to quit. The first enthusiasm, it is true, is gone, but except for a few irreconcilables, the country, while disappointed and chagrined, is by no means ready to quit. It has its second wind now, and will stand a lot more punishment without wincing.

War History Told in Figures.

The Boer-British war began on Oct. 12. The history and net results of the operations in the 110 days which have elapsed since that date are told in the following figures:

British regulars in the field	116,000
Natal volunteers	7,138
Colonials	21,006
Troops at sea	20,222
Ready to embark	20,000
Buller's losses in ten days	812
Killed during the war	2,487
Wounded during the war	4,811
Prisoners in Boer hands	2,220

It is reported that the sugar and coffee war between the Arbuckles and the American Sugar Refining Company has been practically settled.

CONGRESS

The Senate on Thursday passed urgently deficiency bill carrying $9,000,000; also a number of minor resolutions and bills. Adjourned until Monday. The House adopted majority resolution denying a seat in the House to Brigham H. Roberts, member-elect from Utah, by a vote of 268 to 50.

The Senate was not in session on Friday. The House spent most of the day hearing tribute to the memory of the late Vice-President Hobart. The conference report on the census bill was adopted and an attempt was made to pass a bill to pay the cost of repairing the Manila cable, which Dewey cut just prior to his great victory. Opposition developed, however, and it went over.

The Senate held no Saturday session. The House gave an hour to eulogies on the late Representative Baird, of Louisiana and transacted no business of importance.

On Monday, in the Senate, Mr. Mason arose to a question of privilege and sharply attacked the British Government and the British vice-consul at New Orleans because of an interview in which the vice-consul had assailed Mr. Mason for the position he had taken in behalf of the Transvaal republic in its war with Great Britain. Mr. Hoar thought the consul's purported remarks so serious that it ought to be investigated by the Government, but he deprecated any attack upon Great Britain. Mr. Lodge sharply arraigned the British consul for his utterances against a United States Senator, and believed it ought not lightly to be passed. Mr. Tillman delivered a forceful and characteristic speech on the Philippine question, in which he maintained that this Government ought to extend to the Filipinos the right to govern themselves, the United States guarding them against the aggression of other nations. Twenty-three pension bills were passed. The House passed the Sulzer resolution to investigate Secretary Gage, which the committee on rules recommended should be sent to the ways and means committee, as the latter committee has the response of the Secretary in its possession. Passed bill to appropriate $60,000 for a military hospital at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and also a bill to require officers and pilots of steam vessels to make oath to their applications for licenses. House considered the bill for the reorganization and improvement of the United States weather bureau, and considerable opposition developing to several features of the measure the House was forced to adjourn, leaving it the unfinished business.

On Tuesday in the Senate a bill passed giving cannon from gunboat Nashville to City of Nashville. Mr. Hoar's resolution directing rules committee to consider plan for enlargement of capitol or for transacting other than legislative business elsewhere was agreed to. Mr. Pettigrew's resolution concerning Samoan treaty was referred to committee on foreign relations. Mr. Bacon spoke three hours in support of his Philippine resolutions. Bill granting pension of $50 a month to mother of late Flag Lieutenant Brumby was passed. W. V. Sullivan, Senator from Mississippi, was sworn in. In the House resolutions calling on Secretaries of War and Navy for report of expenditures on account of transportation of troops to Philippines from May 1, 1898, to Nov. 1, 1899, were adopted. Bill authorizing acceptance of site for a military post near Des Moines, Iowa, was passed. Committee decided to report no river and harbor bill this session.

In the Senate on Wednesday debate, ordinarily calm and dignified, burst into passionate utterances and bitter recriminations. Senators hurled denunciation at one another until the audience quivered with excitement. Mr. Pettigrew sought to have read a resolution embodying a document written by Emilio Aguinaldo upon the Filipino insurrection and containing his version of the alleged recognition of the Filipino republic by Admiral Dewey. Senator Lodge protested against printing the document in any form, and read a letter from Admiral Dewey, in which that portion of Aguinaldo's statement relating to the admiral was denounced as a tissue of falsehoods. Mr. Lodge said he preferred accepting Dewey's word to that of Aguinaldo, and was satisfied the American people would also. In a passionate reply Mr. Pettigrew declared that Admiral Dewey had recognized the Filipino republic, and, although afforded an opportunity heretofore to deny Aguinaldo's statement, had not done so. In an instant half a dozen Senators were on their feet. Mr. Hawley denounced Mr. Pettigrew's action as treason. In rapid succession Senator Pettigrew was made the target of stinging arraignments by Senators Spooner, Hawley, Sewell and Gallinger. Mr. Jones (Dem., Ark.) and Mr. Teller endeavored to stem the tide of protest and deep feeling by conciliatory speeches. At the conclusion of the scene the financial bill was taken up and discussed by Mr. Berry. Mr. Allen offered a resolution, which went over, discharging the committee on finance from further consideration of the resolution he offered on Jan. 23 regarding the National City Bank of New York. The Indian appropriation bill was made the occasion for the discussion of a wide range of public questions in the House. Our policy in the Philippine Islands, the government of Porto Rico, the leasing of our arid lands and election methods in the South were in turn brought into the arena. A bill was passed for the payment of the salaries of certain retired officers of the marine corps.

At the National Capital.

Hitt of Illinois has a bill before the House providing territorial government for Hawaii.

Joy of Missouri has introduced a bill permitting the West Indian Investment Company to acquire franchises in Cuba and Porto Rico.

Sherman of New York wants Congress to contract with the American Cable Company to send official messages to Hawaii for twenty years at not to exceed $400,000 a year.

The Siamese Government has given another evidence of its friendliness to the United States by offering to present to this country the temple grounds on which the United States legation is located at Bangkok, worth $57,000.

Senator Wellington introduced a bill to establish the University of the United States. The bill in substantially the same form has been introduced in previous Congresses.

The Supreme Court decided two cases involving the question of the right to capture coast fishing vessels belonging to the enemy in time of war and make prizes of them. These decisions involved two fishing smacks owned in Havana which were taken by the blockading squadron, condemned and sold as prizes. The court held that the seizure was contrary to well-established international law. Chief Justice Fuller, Justices Harlan and McKenna dissented.

POLLY'S VALENTINE

Polly by the oaken newel;
Moses, thinking no one nigh;
O to catch the dainty jewel—
Kiss her on the sly.

Very cautiously and still I
Tiptoe, making not a sign,
And I hear—" I wonder will I Get a valentine?"

Faith, she's sure to have one proffered!
What will winsome Polly say?
Will she scorn my heart if offered

Grandma's Valentine

THE postman! the postman!" cried Dorothy, dancing excitedly about the nursery. 'He is coming here: I hear his whistle! Oh, nurse, please may I go down and see if he has brought any valentines?"

"Not with your cold, dearie," said nurse, shaking her head, and so Dorothy had to be content with peering over the stairs, while Donald clattered down and came back again with his hands full of envelopes, large and small.

"One, free, six for me!" he panted, "and one, free, seven for Dorothy!" And how happily the children were as they tore open the envelopes and explained the pretty cards and verses which they contained. And then Sister Nell came in to show them her valentine, a great bunch of beautiful roses, and when Dorothy asked her if she could guess who had sent them (for guessing is half the fun on St. Valentine's day), she grew quite red, and said: "Why, no; of course she couldn't; how should she?"

And just then dear grandma came in to see what the children were making such a racket about. (And, of course, they showed her their valentines, and Nell pinned one of her most beautiful roses on grandma's black dress; and then, quite unexpectedly, Dorothy looked up into the sweet, placid old face, and asked, gravely: "Grandma, did you ever get a valentine?".

Grandma did not reply for a moment, and then she stopped and kissed Dorothy on the forehead, and something very bright and glistening fell among the brown curls. "Yes, dear," said grandma, softly, "lots of them, but I had one which I think I must tell you about some time."

"Oh, tell us now," cried all the children at once, and Nell, who had been placing her valentine in a vase of water, joined in the general coaxing.

"Nell," said grandma, "if you really want to hear I will tell you about it, but wait a moment, I can show you my valentine."

She left the room, and she was gone so long that the children had time to wonder greatly what grandma's valentine could be, and they were all gathered around the chair, with eager, expectant faces, when she returned. She carried in her hand a small, old-fashioned work box, whose covering, once bright and gay, was worn and faded now. She smiled into the upturned faces as she resumed her place among the children, but there were tears in her eyes as she said:

"Now, children, I will show you my valentine, but, first, I must tell you part of the story. And I must also explain that when I was young people made their own valentines, and, although they may not have been as pretty as the modern ones, perhaps, yet, I think they were a great deal nicer, because, you see, nobody would take the trouble to make a valentine unless it were to send to somebody that one was very fond of indeed. But Donald is growing impatient for the story! When I was a young girl I lived in a dear old country town, which some of you have seen. My father and mother both died when I was a very little child, and so I lived with my grandparents, and very kind and good they were to me, and I loved them very dearly. Nevertheless, they were very old, and, somehow, they seemed to have quite forgotten how it felt to be young and full of life, and grandma did not understand why I was not always content to sit quietly in the house, reading or sewing all day, when all my young friends were out skating or sleighing, if it were winter, or picnicking or rowing on the river if it were summer. The old people had one amusement, however, of which they never wearied, especially in the long winter evenings; they dearly loved a rubber of whist. I could play, too, and any of my young friends who would consent to make up a game by taking a hand was always a welcome guest. 'I think your friend Benjamin Worrell is a very fine young man,' grandpa would say, and then he was sure to add, 'He plays an excellent game; a little reckless, perhaps, at times, but he has a good head.' Once I repeated this praise to Ben——"

"Why, that was grandpa's name," interrupted Dorothy. "I remember—Col. Benjamin Worrell, it says so under his picture in the library."

"Yes," said grandma, smiling, "he was your grandfather; but he did not seem much like a grandfather then. He was very tall and straight, with flashing black eyes and dark, curling hair, and he had a fine way of throwing back his head when he talked. People used to call him 'Handsome Ben,' which annoyed him very much, but when I told him what grandpa had said he was quite pleased. 'But what a hypocrite I must be, Kate,' he said, laughing, 'to make the dear old gentleman think that I come here just to play whist, when my real reason for coming is to see you.' Your grandfather was always bold as a young man," said grandma, apologetically.

"Well, your grandfather used to come, evening after evening, and he played long games of whist with the old people, but he used somehow to get in a little talk about our own affairs, although we seldom had a chance to see each other alone. And then the 14th of February came around, and I had scores of valentines, and great sport it was, for each young man had to deliver his own, and it was no easy task to do this without being seen, which would have spoiled the fun. Well, just toward dusk, I happened to be looking from an upper window, and I saw a tall figure creeping along by the garden wall. He had his hat drawn well down over his face, but I caught just a glimpse of a dark mustache, and, I assure you, my dears, it was all I could do to behave with becoming dignity, when Sophie, our old colored servant, came upstairs with a square envelope addressed to me."

"Oh! I know!" cried Dorothy, clapping her hands. "It was grandpa's valentine."

"Yes," said grandma, "and here it is," and she drew from the box an old-fashioned envelope addressed in faded ink and in an elaborately disguised hand, to "Miss Katharine Onderdonk."

She handed the envelope to Nell, who, almost reverently, drew forth the valentine. It was a playing card, the queen of hearts, and over the back had been neatly pasted a sheet of white paper, on which were writen the following lines:

"My Kate is surely Queen of Hearts,
And I will swear she's queen of mine.
Let's play a game where Love is trumps;
Sweet Kate will be my valentine."

The children all declared the poetry to be very beautiful.

"But grandma," cried Donald and Dorothy together, "what is that queer round hole right through the middle of the card?"

Sure enough, there was a hole which had pierced card and envelope just as the children had said.

"Wait a moment," said grandma, "we are coming to that. It was very soon after St. Valentine's day that your grandfather spoke to my grandfather about making me his wife, and grandpa was very much surprised, although our love-making had been going on for some months right under his eyes. And he hesitated a good deal, but finally, as there was no real objection, he gave his consent."

Grandma paused here for a few moments, thinking, I suppose, of those dear, happy days, now so long past; and the children had to remind her that they were waiting for the rest of the story.

"It was just after that," continued grandma, "that Ben had to go away on business for a few weeks, and he begged me to have a picture made of myself to give him on his return. I dearly loved to tease him in those days, and shortly after he had started on his journey I wrapped the valentine he had sent me very carefully in several thicknesses of paper, so that he would think it contained the stiff case of daguerreotype, and sent it to him by mail. Meanwhile I had a fine picture made for him with which to surprise him on his return, but he would not give me back my valentine. 'Do you think,' he said, laughing, 'that I am going to return the first present you ever gave me? No, indeed! though I did make it myself.' And he declared that he should always carry it next his heart.

"Well, the following spring we were married, and then we began our hut-building. Ben planned the house himself, and I went with him to Boston to select the furniture. It was while we were there that we heard the news that made our heart stand still.

"Fort Sumter had been fired upon! We read the announcement in the paper, with white faces, and Ben kept saying all day, 'Oh, Kate! this is too terrible! I never thought it would come to this!' We went home with sad hearts, in spite of our car load of household treasures, for those were days when private joys and sorrows seemed as nothing in view of the danger which threatened the whole country. The Governor of our State had ordered the State troops, and the militia as well, to be in readiness; and Ben mustered quite a company of his friends (the finest and bravest young men in town), and they drilled night and day to be in readiness for the call. And I encouraged him in this work, God knows, with what a sinking heart, but Ben never suspected that I was half a coward. Your dear mother was a tiny baby then, and I used often to sing her to sleep with patriotic airs to keep up my own courage. And then at last it came—the call for troops—we were expecting it; but, oh! how weak I was when I heard Ben's voice shouting upstairs, 'Kate, Kate, the President has sent for us.'

"I was putting baby to sleep (your mother, you know, dears), and I knelt by her cradle just one moment, praying for strength. And it came, for when Ben entered the room I was able to smile quite bravely and to help him pack his knapsack, for they were to start that very night."

Grandma paused here for a moment, but no one spoke, and she went on in a low voice:

"How well I remember that night! It was raining, and very cold and damp; but every mother and sister and wife and sweetheart in town were at the station to see them off. Most of the women were crying bitterly, but I could not shed a tear, and when Ben took me in his arms to say good-by his lips moved, but he could not utter a word, and I could hear the beating of his heart. As the train pushed out there were shouts and cheers, of course, to keep up the courage of the men, and somebody shouted, 'Three cheers for Captain Worrell!' and the crowd took it up with a will. And then I looked up and saw my husband for the last time on this earth. He had climbed on top of the rear car and was raising his cap to the crowd (they were all lifelong friends), his own face was convulsed for a moment, and then he tried to smile, and pointed upward, when he saw me raise my head (with anguish written all over my face, I suppose), meaning, I suppose, that we were in God's hands. And then the train was swallowed up in the mist."

Again she paused, and again no one spoke.

"I heard from him many times after that," she continued. "Sometimes not for months, and then a whole batch of letters would come at once—always bright and cheerful, those letters, and full of little incidents and anecdotes which he thought might amuse and interest me, seldom a word of his own privations and even sufferings. I do not know how we women endured the long strain of that waiting for news. If it had not been that your mother was such a very young infant, I believe I would have followed my husband as some wives did, preferring anything to the terrible suspense of waiting quietly at home.

"And then the dreadful slaughter began. But you, children, must wait until you are older to hear about that.

"One day I was walking restlessly up and down the piazza of my little home, my baby in my arms, trying to put her to sleep as best I could without a lullaby (for I could no longer sing), when a soldier came up the path leading to the house. I knew him well, although he was greatly changed, for he was a neighbor and had been in Ben's company. I knew at once that he was the bearer of bad news, and as he approached nearer I could not speak, but just held out my hand. He laid a small package in it, saying, 'God pity you!'—and that was the last I knew for many hours. When I came to myself I still held the package in my hand, and when I had the courage to open it, the first thing I saw was—my valentine, torn as you have seen, by the bullet which had pierced one of the bravest hearts that ever shed its life blood for our country."

There was silence when grandma had finished speaking. Sister Nell was crying, and Donald whispered:

"I say, Dorothy, let's put away our valentines until to-morrow."—Georgia Custis in New York Ledger.

HE HANDED ME A SMALL PACKAGE, SAYING, "GOD PITY YOU!"

LINCOLN'S EASY-GOING WAY.

Would Consent to Be Swindled Rather than Contest a Fee.

The fee which Lincoln received in the McCormick case, including the retainer, which was $500—the largest retainer ever received by Lincoln—amounted to nearly $2,000. Except the sum paid him by the Illinois Central Railroad, it was probably the largest fee he ever received. The two sums came to him about the same time, and undoubtedly helped to tide over the rather unfruitful period, from a financial standpoint, which followed—the period of his contest with Douglas for the Senate. Lincoln never made money. From 1850 to 1860 his income averaged from $2,000 to $3,000 a year. In the forties it was considerably less. The fee-book of Lincoln & Herndon for 1847 shows total earnings of only $1,500. The largest fee entered was one of $100. There are several of $50, a number of $20, more of $10, still more of $5, and a few of $3.

If a fee was not paid Lincoln did not believe in suing for it. Mr. Herndon says that he would consent to be swindled before he would contest a fee. The case of the Illinois Central Railroad, however, was an exception to this rule. He was careless in accounts, never entering anything on the book. When a fee was paid to him he simply divided the money into two parts, one of which he put into his pocket, and the other into an envelope which he labeled "Herndon's half."

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S COUSIN.

Lives in Pennsylvania and Bears the Same Name as the Martyr.

In Churchtown, Lancaster County, Pa., a cousin of President Lincoln still lives. He is also named Abraham Lincoln and is now 90 years old.

A. LINCOLN.

In general appearance he is not unlike his distinguished relative, having the same large, erect, gaunt form and high cheek bones. Mr. Lincoln is a farmer and owns an estate, White Hall, near the Berks County line. He never saw President Lincoln, but he corresponded with him when the latter was in the White House.

In the same region of Pennsylvania, a few miles from Reading, is the ancient home of the forefathers of President Lincoln. The house was built by Mordecai Lincoln 160 years ago and is still well preserved. Not far distant is the house in which Daniel Boone was born. Living within hailing distance of these two places, before both the Lincolns and Boones moved southward to Virginia and thence to Kentucky, where the future President was born, was the Hanks family, from which sprang Nancy Hanks, the mother of the President.

In 1750, at the same time when the Boones and the Hankses set off from the same neighborhood for the South,

ANCIENT HOME OF THE LINCOLNS.

Mordecai Lincoln's son John moved with his family to the Shenandoah valley, Rockingham County, Va. From there his son Abraham removed into Kentucky in 1782, and was killed by the Indians, leaving three sons, of whom Thomas, the youngest, was father of the President. Nancy Hanks, the wife of Thomas Lincoln, and the mother of the President, was a descendant, a granddaughter, of that John Hanks who left Berks County in 1750.

Drawing Down the Disease.

At the very outset of the war, sundry wise men from New York urged Mr. Lincoln to keep away Confederate armies from Washington by naval attacks upon Southern seaports. It reminded him, he said, of a New Salem, Ill., girl who was troubled with a "singing in her head," for which there seemed to be no remedy, but a neighbor promised a cure if they would "make a plaster of psalm tunes and apply to her feet, and draw the singing down."

POLITICS OF THE DAY

MONEY A LIVING ISSUE.

"The passage of the House currency bill with its refunding clause," says the Louisville Dispatch, "will make the money question the most important issue of the next campaign. It is part of a scheme to make bimetalism impossible that those who are interested in the private control of the public finances hope to take the money question out of politics. But, unless the American people are ready to put on the shackles of industrial slavery, they have already made the money question a stronger and inevitable issue.

"No intelligent business man needs to be convinced now that there is gross favoritism in our financial affairs, giving dangerous powers to a class. In other words, it is plain to all intelligent men that the Government is not a free financial agent; that the public finances are controlled for the advancement of private interests. Men who favor the gold standard do not indorse the subserviency of McKinley and Gage to the Rockefeller money trust. Only those who hold government bonds or who have interests in national banks can intelligently favor the refunding of the debt into gold obligations.

"There is a limit to human endurance. Repudiation of the public debt would now meet with but little favor among the American people, but if the crown of thorns is pressed down with increasing persistence and vigor; if through the manipulation of the public debt the finances of the country are put beyond control of the people; if the present Congress attempts to fix the financial policy for thirty years to come, and deliver the country into the hands of the money changers, who shall compel the people to submit?"

Assassination in Kentucky.

The menaces and mob inspirations of the Republican anarchists in Kentucky bore natural fruit when occurred the shooting of William Goebel, the Democratic candidate for Governor at the recent election. Goebel was contesting the election against Taylor, who had been declared elected on the face of the returns and was holding the office. Goebel had instituted his suit before the legislature, as provided by law, contesting the election. The trial of the case was in progress, the testimony being all in, and the arguments were to be heard.

The Republicans had threatened that the decision of the legislature, if favorable to Goebel, would be resisted by violence. Taylor, being in office, had power to call out the militia. He had summoned to Frankfort, the capital, not the regular militia, but throngs of lawless mountaineers, the most of whom were moonshiners gaining a livelihood by distilling illicit whisky. These bandits always resisted United States officers in the discharge of duty. In some of the family feuds among the mountaineers numerous lives had been destroyed.

Recruits from this class had been organized to protect the usurping Governor in office if the finding of the Legislature—the constitutional tribunal—should be against him. Animated by this spirit of resistance to law, a concealed assassin, as Mr. Goebel was walking along the street in Frankfort, shot him. The Republican anarchists of Kentucky must bear this guilt.—Chicago Chronicle.

Senator Wellington Objects.

Senator Wellington is the Republican Senator from Maryland who ventures to oppose Mr. McKinley's scheme of imperialism. He addressed the Senate on the Philippine question and gave Mr. McKinley a bad quarter of an hour.

Mr. Wellington said he was not ready to enter upon a policy of expansion, "the first exemplification of which is to be the taking, by force of arms, of the islands, persons and privileges of the Philippine islanders."

History indicated that "imperial destiny" had wrecked many republics.

He believed that one of the greatest blessings that ever befell England was the loss of the American colony. Referring to Great Britain's war with the Transvaal, Mr. Wellington said:

"She has not met the Caucassian race since the Crimean war, and now, when for the first time for half a century she attempts to send her army to destroy a brave and courageous, but unfortunate, people, she all at once rudely awakens from the dream of her power, because she finds that corruption has eaten to her very vitals and her army, which she deemed was still like that of Cromwell—invincible—has been belabored and defeated every day since it attacked the Boers. And justly so. And it may be, at no distant time, that the insidious influences which have thus debased her will entirely destroy the weighty structure of the empire she has erected.

"If the propositions advanced in 1776 were true then and applicable to the American people struggling for freedom, have they grown less forceful by the passage of a century and a quarter of time? And are they less applicable now to a struggling people in the year 1900, even though they dwell in the distance and are weak beginners in the contention for national life and the establishment of government by their own consent, so long denied them by the tyranny of Spain. If it was true then, it is true now."

Protection Did It.

A high protective tariff, a currency system which makes the few masters of many, and the Republican party, these are the cause and the perpetuation of trusts. Says the Kansas City Times: "Their cardinal economic policy, protection, has, through years of high tariff robbery, forced tribute out of the pockets of the toiling many for the enrichment of the favored few. Enormous wealth, legislated by successive Republican Congresses into the hands of a class, has naturally resulted in the formation of the monster monopolies which have assumed control over nearly every industry in the country, have seized the channels of trade and are throttling competition in all the leading lines of business.

"Their active agent in the government is Mark Hanna, the President maker, the boss of the Republican party, who got his seat in the Senate of the United States by open and notorious bribery, and who, aided by millions of dollars contributed by the trust element, utilized similar methods to secure the election of the present incumbent of the White House."

Republicans vs. Trusts.

Realizing that the trust issue is going to be prominent during the Presidential campaign, the Republican leaders are casting about to find some way of fooling the people into the belief that the McKinley party favors anti-trust legislation.

This is a dangerous subject for Republicans to handle, for if they manifest a real desire to control trusts those combines will cut off campaign supplies and marshal votes against the party.

On the other hand, if the anti-trust movement is too plainly hypocritical the people will not be fooled by it.

Dispatches from Washington announce that Republican leaders have devised what they consider a brilliant plan to side-track the trust issue. They have come to the conclusion that if Congress should pass a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution to give the United States Government power over corporations it would leave no chance for the intended Democratic assault on trusts. Should such a resolution be passed during the spring or early summer it could not be acted upon by the various State legislatures before next winter, and the issue would in the meantime be in suspense, with the credit for having taken the first step in the direction of effectual control of trusts resting with the Republicans.

This is quite a clever idea, but it has its drawbacks. In the first place, it is too plainly a trick to put off the consideration of the trust question. The people would hardly swallow the bait, as the hook is too much in evidence.

In the second place the whole history of the Republican party is against the probability that such a course would be accepted by the voters as sincere. The trust question cannot be side-tracked and Mark Hanna knew this when he met the proposition with the brazen assertion that there were no trusts.—Chicago Democrat.

Ostracising Trusts.

Constitutions, laws, strikes, boycotts, nothing has any more effect on the trusts than water on a duck's back. Now comes a new remedy: Ostracise the trust magnates—can it be done? The New York Journal says "nay" in the following style: "Even great men of weighty brains are sometimes possessed of strange vagaries. President Arthur T. Hadley of Yale University suggests as a remedy for trusts the social ostracism of men engaged in trusts or other business enterprises inimical to public welfare. President Hadley is a wise man, but in teaching the Yale idea to shoot in this direction he is not doing justice to his own wisdom. From what particular things would President Hadley ostracise the trust kings? From church? Look at the bald, bowed heads in the Fifth avenue houses of God on Sunday. They are all worn bare with trust schemes. Donations from trust magnates support the ministers. From social enjoyments? Go to the Assembly ball, the Patriarchs, the Matriarchs, the high and howling functions at Delmonico's or Sherry's or the private palaces along the Appian Way. Trust magnates bob, and skip, and smirk, and beam in mutual regard. How, then, would President Hadley ostracise the trust rulers? Will the colleges cast the first stone by refusing to accept donations from trust sources?"

Responsible for Gage.

President McKinley is quite right when he says that he is responsible for Secretary Gage, and that the criticisms of the latter's management of the Treasury Department are calculated to hurt the entire Republican administration.

This frank outburst on the President's part was provoked by Senator Allen's resolution calling for that portion of the correspondence with the National City Bank which the Secretary of the Treasury is trying to suppress. It is well that McKinley comprehends the situation and his responsibility at last. What the country now expects to see is a call from the White House for Gage's resignation.

The country, however, has been bitterly disappointed by William McKinley heretofore, and it is very likely to be again not only in this case, but in others. Gage's resignation should have been handed in and accepted long before this, and a suggestion from the President that it is wanted will doubtless bring it.

If Mr. McKinley does not enjoy seeing Gage attacked for his display of gross favoritism in the management of the Treasury Department let him get rid of the freak Secretary at once. If he does not he may rest assured that the people will hold him and his party responsible for the latter at the polls in November.—New York News.

All Poor; Some Rich.

I see that Congressman De Armond has been figuring on Uncle Sam's growing expense account, and discovers that, while within sixty years our population has increased 50 per cent, our annual appropriations for 1900 (excluding army and navy appropriations in both instances) are more than 175 per cent greater than those for 1880.

These facts would not be particularly distressing if the Government were doing many more things in a useful way now than it did then. It is doing some, no doubt, but it is not digging a Nicaragua canal, not establishing a system of parcels post, not either buying out the present telegraph monopolies, nor building a postal telegraph of its own; not doing anything to continue our drainage canal to the Mississippi river as a true ship canal. In brief, it is doing none of the great things for internal development and the fostering of trade and commerce, but is frittering away its funds on trivialities until the burden of taxation is so great that when appeal is made for some of the enterprises here enumerated the answer is always: "We can't afford it."

And it might be worth while, too, to consider to what extent men interested in the maintenance of monopolies which the Government undertakings mentioned would destroy may have themselves systematically caused and fostered this condition of penury.

It is curious that all of the people—that is, the State—are always poorer than a few of the people. It is one of the cases in which the whole is not greater than a part.—Willis J. Abbot, in Chicago Journal.

RACE OF DWARFS

Dwells Among the Mountains of Our Unconquered Island of Luzon.

The Island of Luzon in the Philippines contains one of the recognized races of dwarf men, the Aetas, whose average height is only four feet eight inches or four feet nine inches. They dwell among the mountains in the interior of the island, and are allied to the Andamanese, inhabiting islands in the Bay of Bengal. It is remarked by a recent writer that all of the dwarf races survive only in the most inaccessible parts of the continents or islands to which they belong.

The law schools of this country contained in 1893 7,311 students.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Elaborate Plan to Burn Two Stores in Terre Haute—Children Run Away to Wed—Minister's Prophecy of His Own Death Comes True.

An attempt was made at Terre Haute to burn and blow up three storerooms over which thirty-two persons were sleeping. A fire in its incipiency was discovered in the office of Dr. Casto's drug store, and when it was extinguished it was found that in each cellar and store there were improvised gutters and troughs filled with oil and fuses made of saturated toweling running through the stocks of clothing, dry goods and groceries in Casto's general store adjoining the drug store. Holes were cut in the floors to make stronger draughts, and dynamite and gun powder placed where they cause the greatest destruction. The fire had not reached the troughs and fuses when the firemen put it out. Enough dynamite was found to have destroyed all the buildings on the block. Casto and some of his clerks were arrested for arson. He says his enemies did the work because he has prospered in business. He carried a large insurance.

Says Farewell to His Flock and Dies.

Rev. Charles Harvey has been pastor of the Methodist Church at Eaton for many years. On a recent Sunday he preached his last sermon. He explained that his congregation would never hear his voice from the pulpit again, as he had a premonition that he would die before another Sunday dawned. He had never felt in better health, he explained, but nevertheless he felt sure that death was nigh. His prediction was fulfilled. He is dead. Shortly after leaving church he was seized with an illness. He grew rapidly worse and died before the night was past. He was 58 years old and had been a minister thirty-seven years.

Four Young People Elope.

Roy Teagardner and Ethel, the 15-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marion Creek, and Guy Whetzel and Miss Pearl Landon eloped from Trenton. All are the children of well-to-do farmers, and the only objection to the marriages was the age of the parties, young Whetzel being only 18. The two couples have been devoted lovers, and feeling that they could not gain parental consent disappeared together, young Whetzel leaving with his father's horse and buggy.

Baby Suffocated, Woman Hurt.

The home of William Miller, four miles west of Muncie, was destroyed by fire. Frank Stephens and wife discovered the blaze while driving past the house. Mr. Stephens jumped from the buggy to notify the Miller family and his team of horses ran off. Mrs. Stephens was thrown from the buggy and will die from her injuries. A 2-year-old grandchild of Miller's was suffocated.

A free-for-all fight occurred in the [illegible]ment of a Lafayette school among the smaller pupils, the other day, and it was all two teachers could do to quiet them.

Mark Hillis, soldier in the Philippines, and son of John Hillis, Kokomo, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head. An open hole was found near the body.

A successful test has been made of crude oil for fuel in the Anderson steel mill. On account of shortage of gas the company intended to move, but will now stay.

Nearly all the fruit growers in the fruit belt report a total destruction of buds. The warm weather brought the trees out in bloom and the first frost destroyed them.

Mrs. Olive G. Hall, Kokomo, has purchased the William Henry Harrison homestead, at North Bend, Ohio. It consists of the old mansion and seven acres of land and cost $55,000. It is the birth place of ex-President Harrison.

Albion has an economical genius in the person of James Hyde. He makes his own teeth out of hickory wood and holds them in place with a wooden handle. He is able to eat the toughest meat and is quite an interesting sight while engaged in eating.

Carpenters and contractors of Anderson have signed a scale of 30 cents an hour and eight hours a day for the coming building season.

The 6-year-old child of Charles Stonikcr, near Dublin, died suddenly from a blood clot of the heart. Physicians say it's remarkable on account of the child's tender age.

Lulu Brown, 17, Elkhart, was fatally burned by falling in a faint and turning a lamp over. She is the daughter of Rev. Charles L. Brown, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, Elkhart, well known among Indiana Methodists.

After three unsuccessful attempts to get lower bids for county printing, the Howard County commissioners had to accept the offer of Wilson & Humphries, Logansport, for $2,500. It is twice the amount paid last year, but the paper trust held out. The county council only appropriated $1,000.

Mrs. Blanch Lorimer Knoland, a well-known music teacher in Anderson and neighboring cities, was drowned while attempting to ford White river. The bridge was condemned and the river swollen by rains. The swift current upset her buggy and she became entangled in the wheels, drowning before rescue could reach her.

—St. Joe News:—Some parties were through here one day last week making some kind of a survey. They stayed all night at the Bartlett Hotel and were very careful not to let any one know what their business was. It is thought perhaps they were surveyors sent out in the interest of some electric railway company.

—The republican county chairmen of the Twelfth congressional district met at Fort Wayne yesterday and settled upon the date for the republican district convention for the selection of delegates to attend the national convention. The district convention will be held in Auburn on Wednesday, April 11, but the congressional convention will not be called until the democrats have decided upon a date.

—There seems to be an impression out that those who ask for exemption under the $700 mortgage law will be credited with exemption this year without making another application. This is erroneous. The fact that exemption was granted last year will have no bearing on the question this year, those desiring to take out exemption being required to file their claims with the county auditor just as they did last year.

—Lillian, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs F. M. Hines, was born January 22, 1900, and died Jan. 30, 1900, at the tender age of eight days. The little babe leaves to mourn her early death a father, mother, three brethers, two sisters and two grand-parents. A short funeral service was held at the house on south Jackson street this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment took place in place in Woodlawn cemetery; Rev. J. Brosy officiating.

—While a representative of the COURIER, Mr. Everett, was at Fort Wayne today he met Mr. Bailer and they had a talk about how their case in bankruptcy is getting along. Mr. Bailer told him the appraisers began work yesterday and were progressing well. The matter will probably be settled in a short time and Mr. Bailer thinks it will be satisfactory to all. If such is the case he will soon be in business again, both in Auburn and Fort Wayne.
